LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 29 October 2002

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mardi 29 octobre 2002

*The House met at 1330.
Prayers.*

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

ONTARIO CHIEFS OF POLICE

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): I rise today to welcome the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police to Queen's Park. Certainly we're happy that they're here helping to raise awareness of policing issues like the integrated justice project, how to fight organized crime, police recruitment, and the very important issue of traffic.

We want to note especially the four northern chiefs who are here, people from northern Ontario who are doing a remarkable job at ensuring there is confidence in our police community. I think of Robert Davies, the chief of Sault Ste Marie, whose unique integrated educational experience with Lake Superior State and Sault College is truly something that we should all be very proud of; Bob Herman from Thunder Bay, whose community-based policing project has instilled confidence in the people in Thunder Bay; George Berrigan, whose public participation forums have enhanced the positive aspects of policing; and of course Sudbury's own Ian Davidson, whose initiative against elder abuse will be a model for this entire province to follow.

In short, our chiefs of police have something very positive to offer all Ontarians and they deserve the respect that this House will give them today. But also, in the broader community, they should know we all appreciate them very much.

FAG BEARINGS

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): I too would like to welcome the chiefs to our Legislature today.

We have heard a lot over the last few weeks about lowering greenhouse gas emissions and how, according to the opposition, this government's restructuring of the electricity system will raise those emissions.

Today I want to tell the House about a company in my riding of Perth-Middlesex which is doing its part to lower greenhouse gas emissions and how the Ontario government has facilitated that.

Stratford-based FAG Bearings, a major supplier of bearings to the North American automotive and aerospace sectors, has opted to purchase Ontario Power Generation's Evergreen Energy. Evergreen Energy is produced using renewable resources like wind, solar, biomass and small hydro generation.

Frank Lang, president and CEO of FAG Bearings, said, "We are always looking for innovative ways to support the environment, and buying green electricity for our operations will help promote additional electrical generation from renewable resources. We are very pleased that Ontario Power Generation offers consumers like us this environmentally friendly energy option."

That option to buy green electricity can only be available in an open market where consumers can choose to buy their energy based on how it's produced.

I want to take this opportunity to recognize and congratulate FAG Bearings for leading by example and thank them, on behalf of all members of the House and all residents of Ontario, for choosing to use green electricity.

POLICE SERVICES

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I rise in the House today to speak on behalf of Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals to recognize the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police here at Queen's Park today. We welcome the chiefs and thank them for their important and difficult work.

I am pleased to have this opportunity to highlight some important issues surrounding policing in Ontario. We have been calling on this government to assist municipal police services by providing stable funding for the needs of the communities they serve. Instead, many smaller communities that have municipal police services have been starved of resources, causing restructuring that doesn't always fit small-town Ontario. I am calling on this government to conduct an evaluation of police services restructuring to ensure our Ontario communities have the best services possible and the funding to provide them.

I am also concerned today with the demands placed on our police services to transport prisoners to Ontario's so-called mega-jails. This is taking the resources of the front-line officers off the streets of their communities, at an outrageous cost to police services and communities.

It was interesting to hear the Minister of Public Safety and Security announce new funding this morning for additional police personnel to deal with criminal intelligence, but only on the condition that the municipality can afford to share half the cost, and capped at $30,000 per officer.

It is time that this government recognized the value of our front-line emergency personnel and our police and made a commitment to providing the adequate tools and funding necessary to protect Ontario citizens. Again, I look forward to our discussions, and we will work with you.

ONTARIO WETLAND HABITAT FUND

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I'd like to pay tribute to the hard work of the Ontario wetland habitat fund and its supporters across Ontario. The fund's 500th landowner celebration was held in my riding of Durham at the Woodside Farm. This is a fourth-generation family farm owned and operated by Jennifer and Robert Henderson. On Monday, October 28, my assistant, Sheryl Greenham, represented me at the Hendersons' as they became the 500th landowner to participate in the Ontario wetland habitat fund program.

The farm includes a 10-acre marsh at the headwaters of the Ganaraska River. The Hendersons wanted to fence cattle out of the wetland and surrounding woodland, which is currently home to a variety of wildlife, including wood ducks, turkeys, bullfrogs and a number of other species. By protecting Ontario's marshlands, we are promoting ecologically sound landscapes that benefit wetland waterfowl and wetland wildlife, as well as people.

The Ontario wetland habitat fund is a landowner-based stewardship that now protects 23,000 acres across Ontario. It provides technical and financial assistance for hands-on wetland conservation projects on private land. I would also like to thank and congratulate Herb and Linda Gasser, who are members of the wetland fund, and Irv Harrell, another Durham riding resident who also participates in the program.

I'm pleased to note that my neighbour, the Honourable Jerry Ouellette, Minister of Natural Resources, was present. The ministry has contributed $850,000 to the wetland fund and Wildlife Habitat Canada has contributed over $1 million. I'd like to thank Jean Cinq-Mars of Wildlife Habitat Canada for joining in the celebrations, along with councillors Charlie Trim and Gord Robinson of Clarington council, as well as Mike Barker of the Ontario wetland habitat fund. This is a very worthwhile project, and I commend the residents of my riding.

RACIAL DISCRIMINATION

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I wanted to congratulate Toronto Police Chief Fantino for asking Justice Dubin to prepare a report on the issue of the relationship between Toronto Police Service and the Black community. The issue of our Black community's relationship with the police will require enormous sensitivity by all of us and a recognition that it is a far broader issue than just a police issue.

I have these views: just like in any community, the overwhelming majority of the Black community—like 98%—are decent, law-abiding citizens, and we cannot allow an entire community to be stigmatized by a small group of criminals within that community. Young Black males do face discrimination on a daily basis, much of it unintended, but real. If you see three Black males on a corner at 10 o'clock at night, I think they're treated differently from three white males by all of us, myself perhaps included. A young Black male enters a store at night and he is treated differently. This has to have an effect on a young person.

How we solve this, I don't know. I do not believe our police forces to be racist, but I do believe that if there are two identical young men in the same type of car, wearing the same clothes, and one is white and one is Black, the Black young man is more likely to be pulled over by the police. So I would urge all of us to accept that there is a problem, that the problem is complex, and to seize this moment to now look for long-term solutions that will involve far more than our police services.

EDUCATION

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): I just want to say to the public watching that last night I went to an education forum at the Scarborough Civic Centre. It was a very successful meeting. There were about 80 people there, the usual number of people who care passionately about education. They did say, of course, that they invited the Conservative members, but none showed up. Every meeting I go to on education, it's difficult to find a Conservative member who is willing, ready and able to come and debate.

Interjection: Missing in action.

Mr Marchese: Always missing in action. You can never find one Tory who is willing, able and ready to come and debate educational issues, and there are so many of them.

Does it surprise anybody watching that this should be the case? It shouldn't, because that is always, as a matter of fact, the case. Not one of them, and there are so many—look at them.

They talked about special education, they talked about the English-as-a-second-language program, they talked about gym, they talked about music, they talked about librarians, they talked about international languages. They talked about so many important issues that connect to the public. I have to tell you that I'm surprised there are so many people with so much energy to defend public education in spite of the fact that these people never listen and in spite of the fact that they never show up.

SCULPTURE PROJECT

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): I rise in the House today to share with everyone more background about "The Fish are Here" campaign on behalf of the Walkerton Tourism Recovery Partnership Committee. The fish sculpture campaign came from the idea by Chris Hughes, tourism coordinator for the county of Bruce. It compares to a similar campaign when Toronto first introduced the moose campaign. Placed at various locations, they were decorated in different colours and designs.

This campaign involves 12 large fish sculptures, each one located in a high-traffic area throughout the counties of Bruce and Grey. The surrounding municipalities were contacted to take ownership of the sculptures, find a location and maintain it for the future. A paint-the-fish contest was held, requesting artists to submit a full-colour sample of how they would design their sculpture. Twelve local artists were selected from all the artwork submitted.

The exhibit has taken countless hours of preparation and effort from a team of hard-working people. It is promoted through an extensive marketing campaign to encourage visitation by local residents and visitors. Tourism directors will promote the exhibit for Grey and Bruce. They will include information about the fish sculptures in promotional materials when attending trade shows. Visitors will receive a passport with the location of each sculpture and are able to tour the area and view sculptures.

I invite everyone to come to Grey-Bruce and tour the fish sculpture exhibit. I mentioned this last week and I mentioned the artists. I just want to congratulate them again.

PREMIER OF ONTARIO

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): When it comes to being wishy-washy, when it comes to flipping and flopping, when it comes to saying absolutely anything at any time, the man of the hour is Ernie Eves. Where does Ernie stand on Hydro One? Does he want to sell it, or doesn't he? Who knows? We do know that Dalton McGuinty is clear: keep Hydro One in public hands.

Where does Eves stand on education? He's willing to let private schools dictate education policy. He's willing to cut special education teachers. Dalton McGuinty has a plan that will put our kids first. He'll cancel the private school voucher, keep kids in school until they are 18 or graduated, will have turnaround teams for schools in trouble, guarantee better test results and improve child care.

Where does Ernie Eves stand on health care? He was in favour of two-tier, then he backtracked to one-tier, and now he's back to two-tier on health care. Dalton McGuinty says no to two-tier on health care. He has a plan to reform primary care, one that will actually work. He'll put his plan forward to get foreign-trained doctors actually working. He put a plan forward more than a year and a half ago.

Where does Ernie stand on clean air? Nowhere. He's straddling the fence while 1,900 people die every year. Dalton McGuinty has a clear plan to close dirty coal plants, bring more jobs to Ontario farmers, clean up our gasoline and get more electricity supply on-line. Ernie Eves spins more than a washing machine.

NORTH BAY POLICE SERVICE

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): Today I rise before the House to bring attention to a very worthwhile event that took place in my riding of Nipissing this past weekend. On Saturday a public consultation was held to discuss policing issues in North Bay. It was extremely well attended. Over 100 community leaders participated in discussions that proved to be very positive.

The police services board had many strengths identified, including strong community partners in and out of the judicial system with specific strengths that deal with victims of crime. They are very much a hands-on type of organization in which the officers are seen in and around the area, participating in fundraising and local neighbourhood events.

This great team was led by none other than Chief George Berrigan. His great team included Amelia Rising, the Transition House, VCARS and the crown attorneys' office, along with many others who made this public consultation happen and indeed succeed. They are all strong advocates of listening to local people and receiving input on how to make North Bay and surrounding areas run smoothly.

The North Bay police force has been in existence since 1892, and currently has 90 sworn members and approximately 35 civilians. They're a progressive organization that is well known for their work in our community. Our community has definitely benefited from the presence of the North Bay Police Service. I would personally say how pleased I am to have such a wonderful organization on our side. North Bay is one of the safest places to live in Ontario, thanks to our local police force and their willingness to hear the community's concerns.

On a point of order, Mr Speaker: If I could, I'm very pleased to introduce a community leader, a phenomenal volunteer and the chief of police for the city of North Bay, George Berrigan.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Maybe we could welcome all the chiefs. I know a lot of the members have the chiefs here. If we could do it once and welcome all of the chiefs: we're very honoured to have you here today.

STATEMENTS BY THE MINISTRY AND RESPONSES

SAFE DRINKING WATER LEGISLATION

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): May 2000 marked a tragic turning point in how we think about our drinking water. When seven people died and thousands more became ill from drinking water that had been contaminated with E coli, it was the gravest wakeup call our nation could have had. In the aftermath, our government promised to make sure such a tragedy would never happen again.

We continue to honour that promise today by introducing the Safe Drinking Water Act, 2002, for first reading.

The act carries on with the decisive actions our government has taken to protect Ontario's drinking water since the summer of 2000. It also marks a major step forward in implementing the recommendations made by Commissioner Justice Dennis O'Connor in his Report of the Walkerton Inquiry, parts one and two.

In recommendation 67, Commissioner O'Connor stated, "The provincial government should enact a safe drinking water act to deal with matters related to the treatment and distribution of drinking water."

I stand before you today to deliver on this recommendation specifically, and 49 more, through the proposed act.

In addition to honouring this government's commitment to safe drinking water, we are also announcing the first step of our bold plan to develop a watershed-based source protection framework in Ontario. Watershed-based source protection plans would be required and approved by the government to protect drinking water sources, as per O'Connor's recommendation. These plans would bring us one step closer to comprehensive watershed planning in Ontario. An advisory committee is being finalized to guide the development of a framework that will implement Commissioner O'Connor's recommendations on source protection planning.

Key organizations that will be represented include conservation authorities, municipalities, environmental stakeholders and agricultural groups. I am eager to begin work with the advisory committee so that we can begin planning ways to protect drinking water sources for generations.

I would now like to give special thanks to some of the people who have helped bring this proposed Safe Drinking Water Act, 2002, forward. Through his hard work and dedication, my parliamentary assistant, Bill Murdoch, has helped make this a better piece of legislation; the member from Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound deserves our gratitude. For her work on a private member's bill that became an integral part of our proposed act, I would like to thank my colleague Marilyn Churley; the member for Toronto-Danforth should be applauded for her efforts and receive appropriate credit.

I was asked by Premier Eves to work with the member across the floor to ensure that the act we develop creates strict new safety standards and enhances the Ministry of the Environment's monitoring, reporting and enforcement powers. I believe the Safe Drinking Water Act achieves these goals.

I would also like to take this opportunity to acknowledge some visitors to the gallery who have been consulting with us on our comprehensive water strategy. From the Ontario Municipal Water Association, we have President Sharon Crosby and some of her directors. From the Ontario Water Works Association, I'd like to welcome Tim Lotimer as well. From Conservation Ontario, we have Executive Director Dick Hunter. Thank you for being here today and for helping with this bill. Your comments and feedback surrounding our clean water initiatives have been well taken.

If passed, the act would require mandatory licensing and accreditation of laboratories that perform drinking water testing; require the minister to establish a standards advisory council, and provide authority to set standards for drinking water treatment and distribution; require the certification of all drinking water systems operators; require municipal water systems owners to meet all necessary conditions and obtain an owner's licence; hold municipalities with oversight functions to a statutory standard of care; strengthen compliance and enforcement provisions, including the creation of the new position of chief inspector; and amend section 62 of the Health Protection and Promotion Act to address vacancies of the position of medical officer of health.

Under the proposed act, the government would also be required to submit to the legislature an annual State of Ontario's Drinking Water report. We will continue to be accountable for our promises, and this report will provide a benchmark for doing that.

The proposed Safe Drinking Water Act has benefited from the ideas and comments put forward by stakeholders and members of the public alike. In addition to the extensive public process Commissioner O'Connor undertook through the Walkerton inquiry, this government has consulted broadly on technical details of the act. Further consultation will be held through upcoming legislative hearings and stakeholder meetings. I look forward to working with the opposition critics and the opposition House leaders to determine how those committee hearings will be made, where they will go, and get input from the public. The public is also encouraged to provide their comments through the Environmental Bill of Rights registry posting.

Safe drinking water remains a top priority of this government. We are committed to ensuring that Ontario has and enforces the best and toughest clean water policies in the world. We continue to make significant progress on several fronts with our clean water strategy, but there is more to be done. Our government is investing more than half a billion dollars in the next two years on clean, safe drinking water for the people of Ontario. This year alone, we are providing $245 million, including investments to help municipalities upgrade and make improvements to their water systems to meet our tough new standards.

In addition to today's announcements, this government has proven its commitment to taking action to protect our drinking water. In June, the Nutrient Management Act received royal assent, and I want to compliment the Minister of Agriculture for that, and last month Bill 175 was introduced. The first stage of the Sustainable Water and Sewage System Act will bring municipalities together with government to assess the full cost of water and sewage services.

The second stage will allow for development of full-cost recovery plans.

Safe drinking water is a non-partisan issue, and while a healthy debate is sure to ensue on the subject, I call on all my colleagues in the Legislature to help us take a giant step forward in protecting public health. The Safe Drinking Water Act is an environmental milestone for this province. By passing it, the members of this House will make Ontario a world leader in drinking water protection and preservation.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): In response, first of all, I think we have to remember why the government is bringing in this legislation at this time, some two and a half full years after the Walkerton tragedy. We must remember this is the government that cut the Ministry of the Environment to such an extent, damaging and deep cuts, that this brought about a situation where the risk to the people of this province was drastically increased. I now quote Dr Richard Schabas, the former chief medical officer of health of Ontario: "...the Premier looked at me and I was quite certain was hearing what I was saying, we weren't more than a few feet apart, and then he basically turned away from me and ... as far as I was concerned, the Premier was turning his back on public health...."

Then we had a situation where we had, I think most people in this province would agree, some high-quality provincial regional laboratories operated by the Ministry of the Environment. A decision was made by this government, in its efforts to slash so very quickly and without giving due consideration to the consequences of that slashing, and those regional laboratories were closed. Municipalities in this province, one of them in London, I say to my good friend from London, were forced to scramble over the next six to eight weeks to find an opportunity for someone to do their water testing. No specific rules were put in place at that time. The Red Tape Commission had intimidated Ministry of the Environment officials into not even proposing some of those rules, because at that time the Red Tape Commission was looking for ways of cutting government involvement.

The Ministry of the Environment was cut: one half of the operating budget and one third of the staff were chopped by this government. Decisions were made, despite internal memos that were shown to the Conservative caucus and to the Conservative cabinet, so that what the government was doing was increasing the risk measurably. That program of cutting was still invoked by this government. The Provincial Auditor—I think we all recognize, particularly those of you who sit on the committee that's involved with the Provincial Auditor—warned of the situation facing the sources of groundwater and drinking water in this province. In addition to this, two in a row of the Environmental Commissioners, one whom you fired because she was critical of the government, Eva Ligeti, and the subsequent Environmental Commissioner you put in place, both warned of the problem.

The minister talks of a bold plan for water sources. I must say to the minister that a bold plan, after two and a half years, to deal with the sources of drinking water in this province is not to appoint another committee to look into the matter and advise the minister. We would have expected some time ago that that bold plan would have been in effect. I think the minister recognizes as well, because he read the report and he'd be aware of it, that the present Environmental Commissioner said that in fact this government had cut, from the time it came into office to the year 2000, its number of water monitoring stations from 730 to 240, about 500 water monitoring stations cut, despite the fact that Justice O'Connor, the Provincial Auditor and two Environmental Commissioners had recommended against that, and for much more extensive monitoring. This bill deals not at all with the issue of the sources of drinking water. We must recognize that the contaminants getting into that drinking water are a major problem.

I say as well that the regulations to go along with the nutrient management legislation are nowhere near finished at this time. They're lacking in many areas. I implore the Minister of the Environment, who has that special responsibility, to look carefully at that. I think what has to happen if this bill is to be successful is that we have to have the Ministry of the Environment budget restored to what it was when this government came into office, the staffing levels and assistance to municipalities restored, and most assuredly, the immediate addressing of the problem of the sources of drinking water in this province.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I think the question for us today is: is this glass of water half full or half empty? It's certainly not full. I want to try to take the approach that today's piece of legislation that is before us—of course, we haven't had time to study the whole thing yet, although I thank the minister for the technical briefing this morning. The glass is clearly not full. There is still a lot of work to be done.

As a backdrop, I want to mention that I brought forward a safe drinking water bill about two years ago and we're just seeing that partial bill come to the light of day now, today. Indeed the bill before us, I think to be fair, goes a long way to fulfilling the narrow definition recommendations from Justice O'Connor, specifically around the pipes and pumps in the delivery, the treatment of water. The recommendations are followed fairly closely within that definition. Of course, the devil will be in the details. We'll have to look very closely at the powers of the minister and at what is left up to regulations.

I want to point out for the record that, after the Premier announced he would be bringing forward my bill and then a decision was made to go ahead with a government bill, I was not involved in the process, although the Premier stated that this morning. I was at that point frozen out of the loop. I wish I had been involved in the process because some of the pieces that are missing from this bill were in my bill. Some of those pieces are the safe drinking water fund to make sure municipalities have enough money to be able to bring in the kinds of requirements that come under this bill; the public's right to know; the registry I talked about; the public's ability to sue. That, by the way, can be remedied. I know Justice O'Connor didn't recommend going down that road. But if you bring the Safe Drinking Water Act under the Environmental Bill of Rights, which would then allow for investigations to be called and allow people to sue under certain circumstances, that might be the trade-off there.

What is really missing today, a big piece, what I would refer to as the hole in the bucket, is that here we are, two and a half years or so since people died in Walkerton and over 2,000 people became ill—some of those children will never recover—with a safe drinking water bill that deals with the pipes and pumps, but we have seen nothing on groundwater source protection.

I seem to recall that when Minister Clement was in the Ministry of the Environment back in 1999, he said they were working on groundwater source protection, and we saw nothing. Over the past two and a half years, all that the government, the Minister of the Environment, can bring forward on source protection—the guiding principle in Justice O'Connor's reports and recommendations is that there would be source-to-tap protection. The first 15 or 16 recommendations in his part two report talk specifically about source protection.

I have to point out to the minister today that I will be making amendments to this bill. I am going to want to see much more quickly, as are the people of this province and the people in Walkerton, the next piece of legislation, and that is source protection. Amend the EPA, as Justice O'Connor recommended. Do not wait for yet another committee.

It's astounding to find out that this advisory committee hasn't even been set up yet. It's like we're starting from ground zero here. After all this time we do not have a comprehensive piece of legislation before us today, and after what happened in Walkerton, that is unacceptable.

I want to say to the government that I'm happy to see, finally, that a safe drinking water bill was brought forward today. I will be reading it carefully. In particular, I am calling on the minister to make sure we have comprehensive public committee hearings clear across the province so the public can have a say in how this bill comes out at the end.

VISITORS

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I knew that you would want to know that Professor Gerald Gall is in the Speaker's gallery today. Last week, Professor Gall was made an Officer of the Order of Canada, and that was done by reason of the fact that he has been a tireless worker for individuals in this country and across the world. He is an individual who is well known as an expert on civil liberties and civil rights, and he has dedicated much of his life to that cause. He's accompanied here today by Karen Gall and their son, Andrew, they being my sister and nephew respectively.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I just thought people might be interested to know that Nancy Steele and Bill MacPherson, the grandparents of Alexander Steele, the page from Sault Ste Marie, are in the gallery today.

Mrs Sandra Papatello (Windsor West): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: If I may, I'm happy to introduce very prominent members of Windsor's Jewish community who are here at Queen's Park in the members' gallery. Mr Gary Katz, Ms Sharon Kaplan and Dr Plant, welcome to the House.

ORAL QUESTIONS

WATER QUALITY

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a question for the Premier. Today I watched with great interest as the Premier, with the appropriate backdrop, made his announcement, along with the Minister of the Environment, about a Safe Drinking Water Act.

I noted one exception: I know that his pangs of conscience were certainly present in the statements he made, but there was one particular part of the package that was recommended by Justice O'Connor, recommended by, shall we say, the Provincial Auditor and by two Environmental Commissioners, and that dealt with the sources of drinking water. The main criticism today that has been levelled too, and I think justifiably, is that after two and a half years all you have decided to do about the sources of drinking water, that is groundwater protection, is in fact to appoint yet another committee.

Could the Premier tell us why that was not included in the bill or in a bill previously presented to this House?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, the honourable member will know that Mr Justice O'Connor recommended different treatment for source groundwater and for the sources of water in the province, and we are following his recommendation in that regard.

I've had several discussions about this issue with the secretary of cabinet and others. We are undertaking the largest accounting and documentation of watershed and sources of water ever undertaken in the province of Ontario. The honourable member will surely understand, being a former Minister of the Environment himself, that this takes a considerable period of time. But we are treating the issue seriously and we are, as he has pointed out, asking independent advisory groups to give us their advice in the committee on this issue.

Mr Bradley: If the Premier were treating this matter seriously, as he says, he would have noted in the latest report of the Environmental Commissioner the following statement: "In much of southern Ontario and especially in southwestern Ontario, we know there is a problem with water quality in streams and rivers.... Remarkably," Ontario's "water quality monitoring system has been largely abandoned without the causes of poor water quality ever being addressed. I suspect that the problem may be worse than ever. But I can't say that for sure because the data is simply not available."

Under your watch as the Minister of Finance and now as Premier—particularly as Minister of Finance—the number of monitoring stations on waterways in this province was reduced from 730 to 240. Almost 500 monitoring stations on our rivers, lakes and streams have been reduced. Could the Premier explain why that would be, if they're so concerned as a government about the protection of our water supply?

Hon Mr Eves: I think the Minister of the Environment has a response to this particular question.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): In fact, it's been increased by another 90, I think, and the member opposite knows it has. We are in the process of implementing the recommendation from the Environmental Commissioner with respect to the monitoring stations. We've increased it, I think, by 90; it's up to 350. We've done a lot of work, in my opinion, to ensure that the water monitoring stations are in fact there. I can only say to you that we are going to continue to do that. Even the commissioner himself said he didn't know how many water monitoring stations are needed. He wasn't certain either.

By working with these associations and groups, we're just trying to determine exactly how many are needed. Maybe it's 400, maybe it's 500, maybe it's 750. But the fact of the matter is, we have to work to get this strategy together to determine how many you need.

Mr Bradley: Could the minister explain to all members of this House—or the Premier, one of the two; whoever wishes to answer this—I guess I'll address it to the Premier. He was the chief spokesperson today. Can you explain, if groundwater protection is so important, if you want to find out what's going into that groundwater or even surface water that you have out there, why on earth would you as a government reduce the number of water monitoring stations? I know you say you've added 90 since then, but why would you have reduced them from 730 to 240? Why on earth would you do that when the Provincial Auditor, two Environmental Commissioners and of course latterly Justice O'Connor have all said that you have to get a handle on this, and one of the ways to do it is to determine what's going into the waterways, and address that? Why did that reduction take place?

Hon Mr Stockwell: The question could be put to the ex-Minister of the Environment for five years in Ontario: why didn't you do a watershed-based management protection study at all? Why didn't you deliver a water-based strategy, period? You didn't do anything. You didn't deliver a water-based strategy study. The NDP didn't produce a water-based strategy either.

I say to the member opposite, the government is actually doing the work, working with AMO, working with the Ministry of Agriculture, working with the conservation authorities. All I've suggested to you is, you have to determine how many stations to have. So I look to the member opposite and say, for five long years, while you were Minister of the Environment, why didn't you even think about having a water-based protection strategy? It's beyond me that you couldn't have come up with the one approach that would have helped the situation: a water-based strategy. You never even thought of this and the NDP never even thought of this.

PICKERING NUCLEAR GENERATING STATION

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): My question is to the Premier and it concerns my growing worry about the increasingly serious, if not critical, situation at Pickering A. Only four and a half months ago, on June 6, 2002, our Provincial Auditor, the watchdog of public finances in the province of Ontario, said this to the members of this Legislature:

"I would urge the Ontario government as a shareholder to take a very active interest in the cost overruns and delays being experienced in restarting Pickering A. These delays could drive up electricity prices and the cost overruns could negatively affect Ontario Power Generation's cash flows and its contributions to reduce the stranded debt of the old Ontario Hydro."

Premier, as leader of the government of Ontario, why are you and your colleagues in the government so unwilling to allow immediate public hearings on precisely what is going on at Pickering A? What are the real reasons for the delays? What are the true costs and what are the short- and intermediate-term implications of the very serious situation developing about 30 kilometres east of this very place?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, if this was an easy issue, there would be hundreds of people who could answer the question in 10 seconds or less. Obviously this is not an easy issue. This is an issue of the nuclear generation of power, which is extremely complicated.

Obviously OPG has grossly underestimated—by their own admission, by the admission of the CEO yesterday in a speech—the cost of doing the required work at Pickering and has underestimated the date by which it would come on line. But let there be no mistake, this is not an easy issue to resolve and it does take expertise to resolve the issue. I don't see any of that expertise in the Legislature on either side.

Mr Conway: Let me agree with my colleague the Premier. I know better than most of you that this is not an easy problem. Let me remind you that five years ago, under the able leadership of Derwyn Shea, we had a select committee looking at the problem that brought the old Ontario Hydro to its knees, and we are reliving that nightmare now again. It is exactly the same situation, only with this difference: the hydro debt is going up, not down. Consumer pain is everywhere and it's going to get worse before it gets better.

Three weeks ago the independent electricity referee, the Independent Electricity Market Operator, said, on October 7, 2002, "There is a serious shortage of generating capacity to meet Ontario's growing electricity demand, and if steps are not taken soon, the next few months and next summer will be worse than what we've just come through." The auditor has begged us, as the responsible owners of Pickering A, to take a more active interest in understanding the problem.

Premier, what on earth have we got to hide? The public knows it has an obligation to pay. The public has a right to know what is going on and how big the bill will be. Will you now agree—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. The member's time is up.

Hon Mr Eves: First of all, the Minister of Energy is indeed trying to find out exactly what is going on at OPG with respect to Pickering.

I would say, with respect to the independent market operator, that the honourable member neglected to talk about the report, the 18-month outlook that was released late last month, on September 24, talking about energy production in this province. It said that the capability "is generally expected to be well above energy demand levels in each month of the outlook period," that being the next 18 months. "No additional energy is expected to be needed to meet the Ontario forecast energy demand." That paints quite a different picture than you just painted in your question of a moment ago.

Mr Conway: I say to my friend the Premier that the October 7, 2002, report from the independent market operator paints a very worrisome situation, and that's before it was generally understood how serious are the delays and cost overruns at Pickering A.

Yesterday, in OPG's third-quarter report, we find out now that our company, OPG, the successor company to the old Ontario Hydro, the company that controls 70% of the electricity marketplace today, the company that has more to do with keeping prices high than anybody else—do you know what they're now doing, according to this report? We are selling valuable hydroelectric assets like the Mississagi asset, and we are taking the income reported in the third-quarter statement yesterday, $100 million worth of asset sale revenue, and we're not doing what you said you would do, that you'd take that money and write down the billions of dollars of debt. No, you're not doing that. You're taking that money and giving it to the company, OPG, for operating expenses at Pickering.

All I'm asking for is simply this: we can't let Ontario Power Generation, with its record in the nuclear business, be both player and referee in this game that is so critically important to Ontario consumers of electricity and to Ontario businesses. Premier, please tell the electricity ratepayers that you're going to give them—

The Speaker: Order. The member's time is up.

Hon Mr Eves: Indeed, there is a plan in place to pay down and pay off the residual stranded debt of the old Ontario Hydro by the year 2015, I believe it is. That plan is in place.

With respect to the comments he makes about the generation capacity in the province of Ontario, the very independent market operator he is quoting now has said that over the next 18 months, barring some grossly unforeseen circumstance, there will be an excess of capacity in the province of Ontario, for the next year and a half.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Premier. Premier, your hydro deregulation and privatization scheme is causing incredible pain for small business owners across the province. Yesterday we talked with Cheryl Frenette, who owns Hilltop General Store, near Sault Ste Marie. Her hydro bill for the store this summer went from $1,400 to $3,300. She says that if she gets another two or three hydro bills like that, she will have to close down her store. Premier, where do you expect Cheryl Frenette to find an extra $1,900 for her monthly hydro bill?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, the honourable member is aware of the circumstances that have gone on with respect to the weather, the usage of power, in the province during the months of July, August and September. He's also aware that prices were below what they were before the market opened for the months of May and June. He is aware, of course, that they were above in July, August and September.

He is also aware that on half the days during the month of October, the price has been below what the price of power was before then. There is a commitment on behalf of OPG, on behalf of the government, to offer a rebate program to consumers for the cost of producing power by OPG in excess of 3.8 cents a kilowatt hour despite the fact that the average price before the market opened was 4.3 cents per kilowatt hour.

Mr Hampton: Well, Premier, Cheryl Frenette has heard your excuses. She said to me, "Does the Premier honestly believe that Ontario has never had a hot summer before?" This is a person who is faced with losing her business, and there are dozens of others across this province. Take Dave's Fish Market in Burlington or the Asian Food Store in Rexdale, or Ramundo's Deli in Welland, or Dalseg's Trading Post in my own riding—all of them small businesses, and all of them can't afford to pay their hydro bills, Premier. It's got nothing to do with a hot summer. It's got everything to do with your scheme of hydro privatization and deregulation. In Algoma district 4,000 people have signed petitions, just in the last 30 days, opposing hydro privatization and deregulation.

What these small businesses want to know is, why are you reaching in and taking the money right out of the till? When are you going to recognize that the problem is hydro privatization and deregulation and stop it now? That's what they want to know.

Hon Mr Eves: The leader of the third party is well aware that this summer was the hottest summer on record since 1955. This stuff isn't made up. If he spent any time in Ontario in the months of July, August and September, he would know that was the case.

There are two things that result in the cost of your hydro bill: the cost per kilowatt hour and the amount of hydro you use. Obviously, if you use twice as much hydro, the cost is going to be twice as much. Having said that, we have a rebate program that is going to rebate consumers the price they have paid over the suggested price, but I do want to remind the honourable member about what his government did when it was in power.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Eves: Well, he was the Attorney General. He sat at the cabinet table. He obviously agreed with all these decisions of the Rae government. You let the debt of Hydro go up by in excess of $3.5 billion, like you did all the other debts that the province had. You let that go from $39 billion to over $100 billion and you leave it for your children, grandchildren and great grandchildren to pay: "Don't bother me with the facts. We'll just keep on running up deficits of $10 billion to $14 billion a year and Hydro $3.5 billion—"

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. The Premier's time is up.

Mr Hampton: Premier, if you won't listen to those small businesses, maybe you'll listen to this other person who is very concerned about hydro prices. His name is Gary Carr. He is the MPP for Oakville, who admits that he is circulating a petition calling for a hydro rate freeze and a review of the government's hydro deregulation policy.

He says your arguments are all wrong: "It's true we had a very hot summer, but that alone doesn't explain the tremendous hikes people see in their current hydro bills." He also says, "If deregulation results in the highest hydro rates we've seen before now, I don't see much benefit to that, and neither do the people of Oakville."

Premier, your own MPPs are saying it's obvious something is drastically wrong with hydro deregulation. If your MPPs can figure it out, why are you so slow? Why can't you figure it out?

Hon Mr Eves: We know what your solution was, and that was to run up all kinds of debts by well over $100 billion. If anybody thinks that isn't costing the people you're talking about a lot of money—the interest on the debt alone is $9.3 billion a year, thanks to you and your government, in large part. You managed to virtually triple the amount of the debt of the province of Ontario and run up Hydro debt and run up workers' compensation unfunded liability, all in a matter of five years. You undid what had been done since Confederation in five short years. That's how you didn't solve those problems.

Unfortunately, I can't refer a question to the Speaker of the House.

Mr Hampton: Mr Speaker, I think the Premier took a shot at you.

PICKERING NUCLEAR GENERATING STATION

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): Premier, I want to talk about your other debt boondoggle: Pickering. The CEO of Ontario Power Generation now admits they are $2.5 billion over budget on Pickering, and we also know that this is increasing Hydro's debt.

Conservative governments had the original love affair with nuclear power. Remember Darlington? You said it was only going to cost $5 billion, and when you and the Liberals finished, it cost $15 billion, a $10-billion cost overrun. You'll also remember that during the 1980s it was discovered that Pickering was costing hundreds of millions of dollars each year in maintenance costs that were not supposed to happen with nuclear power. That's all history. That was all learned.

Your strategy, besides hydro privatization and deregulation, seems to be to dump it all back into nuclear. My question to you is, can you tell us why you didn't learn from the mistakes in the first place? Why do you want to repeat this mistake of billion-dollar debts on nuclear power?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I don't think there's a single party in this Legislature that is blameless in terms of Pickering and the cost of nuclear power. I seem to recall two Premiers named Peterson and Rae who did a pretty good job of racking up increased debt for Ontario Hydro through spending more money completing nuclear facilities when they were Premiers. I can see lots of members on all sides of the House who were members of cabinet in those eras who helped us get where we are today.

We are actually doing something about paying off the debt of the old Ontario Hydro and being transparent and open about how we got to where we are. We got to where we are by supplying consumers in Ontario with power not at cost, which was what Hydro was supposed to do, but with power at cost minus $38 billion.

Mr Hampton: Premier, I know you would not want to misinform the House, and I know you would want to read the 1995 annual report of Ontario Hydro. The chairman of the board was someone named Bill Farlinger, whom you put in place. This is what Mr Farlinger said in the 1995 Ontario Hydro report. He said that during the NDP years, they were actually able to pay down Hydro's debt by $730 million and that the debt repayments were actually increasing. This is your Bill Farlinger, the person you appointed in the summer of 1995 as the chair of Hydro, so let's be accurate about that, Premier.

But the question is this: you had an opportunity to change the direction, an opportunity to put some money into wind turbine energy, to promote an electricity conservation strategy; you had an opportunity—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Sorry to interrupt. The Minister of the Environment, come to order, please. You've got a Premier. The people want to hear the Premier answer. If he wants to defer to you, he will. The Premier is who the people want to hear. Yesterday it was very quiet when you weren't here, and I'd appreciate your co-operation.

Sorry for the interruption.

Mr Hampton: Speaker, he couldn't answer these questions when he was the Minister of Energy; I don't know why he has so much to say now.

Here's the story, Premier. Besides the hydro deregulation and privatization fiasco you've gotten the province into, instead of pursuing energy conservation, instead of investing in hydroelectrics and wind turbine energy, you're putting it all back into nuclear. How many times do you have to go back into nuclear before you figure out that it's very expensive and it leads to a lot of big debt? How long is it going to take?

Hon Mr Eves: First of all, I hope he knows that the numbers that he's referring to, the $715 million that he says the debt was paid down by, was in one year, 1995. Surely he of all people will recognize a significant event that took place in June 1995. He will also remember that the government that really paid down the debt was this government, not his government. Your legacy was adding three and a half billion dollars to Hydro's debt. That was your legacy; that's what you did about it. Surely the honourable member understands that the mix of power in the province of Ontario has to be a mix that doesn't rely upon any one specific aspect—nuclear, hydraulic, fossil fuel or gas-powered. It requires a mixture of all of the above. I would agree with him: we should be investing in more green sources of generating energy.

ONTARIO POWER GENERATION

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): My question is for the Premier. If you add up the salaries of the chair and the CEO at BC Hydro, it is $313,000 a year. If you add up the salaries of the chair and CEO of Ontario Power Generation, it is in excess of $2 million a year. I asked the energy minister in estimates about whether he thought the salaries were reasonable at OPG and he said, "I looked at the compensation packages and the verdict from an outside person said that they were reasonable." I said, "Do you accept that verdict?" and he said yes. My question for you is, do you accept that verdict? Do you think that these salaries are reasonable at Ontario Power Generation?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I'm sure the Minister of Energy has an appropriate response.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): The member opposite, as I reported to him in the estimates committee, shortly after I became Minister of Energy, our Premier asked me to look at the executive compensation at Ontario Power Generation. Rather than conducting it myself, we brought in outside experts, people who have a lot of skill and experience with respect to executive compensation in the province of Ontario. Those outside experts, after reviewing the compensation packages of the individuals in question, confirmed that they were reasonable in the marketplace.

I disagree with the escalating salaries we've seen in a whole host of sectors across our globe. Whether it's a sports star, in business, or in medical and physician services, the reality is, we want to ensure that we can attract people who have the right competence to ensure that this company can be run well.

Mr Bryant: I don't know why you're standing beside your Hydro man Farlinger, your Hydro man Osborne. You've got nothing good to say about the performance of Ontario Power Generation. Yesterday you said the performance on Pickering A was not Ontario Power Generation's finest hour. You said as minister that you're not happy with what you've seen—but you're happy with their salaries. I don't get it. Ontario consumers see their bills go up, yet they also see the salaries of the people running this show skyrocketing, quadruple that of their counterparts in BC and Quebec. When faced with this in Hydro One, you heeded the call of Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals, and Captain Clitheroe and her crew went down with her ship. Why not at OPG? Why are you standing beside your Hydro man? Is it because of the close relationship between Chairman Farlinger and this government? It's a serious charge, but it deserves an answer. Why are you standing beside your Hydro man when you've got nothing good to say about his performance?

Hon Mr Baird: I'll read from the report: "We reviewed the CEO's employment agreement and find it to be in line with responsible market practice."

The member opposite speaks of the chairman of Ontario Hydro. He doesn't mention his salary, which is nowhere near the amount he has spoken of. The member opposite cites Quebec and British Columbia, two places where a competitive marketplace is not in existence. This is a competitive market in the province of Ontario. It has expensive mixed generation, not just hydroelectric, not just fossil fuels, not just new emerging green powers; it also has substantial nuclear resources.

When this government, this Premier and the former minister stood in this place to take action on the Hydro One issue, this member stood in his place, fought it and voted against it. He should be ashamed of himself.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): My question today is to the Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. I'd like to say that I've been working with my colleagues Associate Minister Newman and Minister Clement for the past few months to extend interim beds at the Orillia Care Centre in my riding of Simcoe North. This will help ensure a smooth transition for residents to permanent long-term-care beds in the Simcoe area, once they are up and finally constructed. I'm very pleased to say that the beds have been extended for up to 12 months, past March 31, 2003. For the benefit of my constituents in Simcoe North, I ask the associate minister what the status is of interim long-term-care beds in the Orillia and Simcoe serviced area.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I thank the hard-working member for Simcoe North for his question. The interim bed program is consistent with one of the Ministry of Health and Long-Term Care's key strategies, and that is to anticipate and develop services to meet the needs of our growing and our aging population. Care provided through long-term-care facilities is an essential component of the continuum of services for our elderly Ontarians.

I'm pleased to say that the beds at the Orillia Care Centre have been extended to help provide even better long-term-care services for the people of central Ontario. Interim beds were implemented as a bridge until new long-term-care beds are built. I'm proud to say that 119 new beds are presently in operation in Orillia, with another 24 expected to be completed by November 2002; in Barrie, 423 beds, and 264 redeveloped beds have been awarded, with construction moving ahead.

I commend the member for Simcoe North for his dedication and for his commitment to long-term-care services on behalf of his constituents.

Mr Dunlop: I thank the associate minister for his response and for his assistance in the Orillia long-term-care centre.

There's no question that even better long-term care is even more important to meet the needs of Ontario's growing and aging population. I'm very proud to be part of a government that has made such unprecedented commitments to long-term-care services in our province. There's no question that these investments will make a real difference for seniors and others who require long-term care throughout our province. I'd like to ask the associate minister what steps our government has taken to ensure that the progress we've made in long-term care continues in the years to come.

Hon Mr Newman: Once again I thank the member for Simcoe North for his question. Long-term care has certainly come a long way in Ontario since our government was first elected by the people of Ontario in 1995. That's because we've taken strong action to improve the sector, unlike the Liberals and NDP, who seemed to hope the challenge of our growing and our aging population would somehow just go away.

As tens of thousands of long-term-care beds are built and redeveloped across Ontario, our government is providing funding of up to $10.35 per bed per day for 20 years to help with the cost of construction of long-term-care beds. That money goes to new and redeveloped facilities across our great province once the beds are built and once the beds are in operation, up to a maximum of $75,000 per bed.

There's no doubt this provides a strong incentive for long-term-care operators to put their beds in operation sooner rather than later. This will mean even greater care for residents and even greater peace of mind for the families of residents.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): My question is for the Minister of Energy. I was visited last weekend by a door-to-door electricity salesman. This individual bore a name tag proclaiming he was from Ontario Hydro; in fact, he assured me repeatedly that he was indeed from Ontario Hydro. If you look at the small print on the business card, Minister, you will see that this particular Ontario Hydro is in fact a division of Union Energy Inc, a private company. It was interesting that this Union Energy representative also insisted that his company was working with Thunder Bay Hydro, even though Union Energy of course is in direct competition with our local utility.

Minister, the code of conduct for independent retailers says, "The electricity retailer shall clearly indicate that the offer is not being made by a regulated distribution company and shall not seek to mislead or otherwise create any confusion in the mind of a consumer." Minister, will you agree that Union Energy is misrepresenting itself as Ontario Hydro and will you act now to stop this misrepresentation?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): The priority of our government is to ensure the people of Ontario receive a supply of safe, reliable and affordable electricity in Ontario. We do have a competitive marketplace and we have strengthened measures to protect consumers this past June with Bill 58, brought in by my predecessor.

If the member opposite has allegations that the market rules are not being obeyed, she should bring them forward to me directly. The Ontario Energy Board does have the authority to order compliance and can level substantial fines if people are breaking the law. I don't think it would be fair or appropriate if you asked me to adjudicate it based on the information you've provided me today, like any crime, but if the member opposite wants to present me with the information I'll ensure it reaches the authorities in short order.

Mrs McLeod: I just did bring it to you directly and I think it should actually concern you directly. You and I both know—and if you had acknowledged that in your answer—that Ontario Hydro sold its retail arm to Union Energy. It is now being run by a private company. Most consumers, I submit to you, don't know that. Consumers see the Ontario Hydro sign, they see the logo and they assume that they are making a contract with a public utility. They assume that your government is probably in some way underwriting that contract. In fact, Minister, I begin to wonder if in some ways, directly or not, you are in fact underwriting these private contracts. Your own regulator is now saying that it's probably a good idea for consumers to get into fixed contracts because they know the prices of electricity are about to go up.

So what happens if Union Energy Inc is not able to provide their customers with electricity at the 6.02 cents that they're currently selling it for? Do they go and look for a retroactive price increase, as Union Gas did? Do they absorb the losses, even to the point of bankruptcy? I think that's highly unlikely. Do they come to you, Minister, and ask for some kind of bailout so the private company can stay in business, or do they walk away and let the public utilities fix up the mess afterwards?

Hon Mr Baird: If the member opposite has specific examples and wants to provide me with all of the details, I'd be very pleased to look at them.

She may want to look at her caucus colleagues. It's been her party that has steadfastly supported the privatization and steadfastly supported an open market. Just what did you think would happen when we'd have an open market in Ontario? Look what her leader said: "I am in favour of privatization both in terms of the transmission and the generation." That's further than anyone on this side of the House ever said. But has she once got up in this House and spoken up against her leader? Not a single time. What did her own energy critic say when they were out trolling Bay Street for bucks? "Throughout Ontario's electricity restructuring process, Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals have been consistent supporters of the move to an open electricity market in Ontario. Please send me $350." The member opposite should take these concerns to her caucus meeting on Thursday morning and bring me the facts on Thursday afternoon.

SCHOOL SAFETY

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): My question is for the Minister of Education. Minister, as a parent I'm sure you agree that the safety of our students should be our utmost priority. All children in the province should have the right to learn in a safe and respectful environment. They should be able to attend class without the fear of violence, discrimination or sexual abuse. In order to ensure the safety of our children and all the children in this province, can you share with us some of the initiatives this government has enacted to protect our most valuable resource, our children?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I would be pleased to respond to that question. Indeed, our government was the very first government in the province to address the issue of ensuring that our schools provide a safe environment for both students and teachers. We introduced the Safe Schools Act in 2000 and we have subsequently introduced the Ontario schools code of conduct. Each board in the province is responsible for developing strategies to deal with harassment, threatening, bullying and issues of sexual abuse.

I'm pleased to say that this morning I spoke at the Canadian Safe School Leadership 2002 conference and I had the opportunity there to meet with a very dedicated group of directors, trustees, teachers and others. I can tell you that people are working aggressively with the government to ensure that our schools are indeed safe.

Mr Miller: I agree that students can't learn when they are in an unsafe environment or when they fear for their safety. Growing up is hard enough, and no student should be placed in a harmful environment or be subject to an irresponsible adult, especially if they abuse their authority.

Can you share with us the specific initiatives this government has enacted to protect our children from sexual misconduct by a trusted adult?

Hon Mrs Witmer: The issue of the need to protect our students from sexual abuse is a very, very important obligation that we have. So based on Justice Robins's review, our government is the very first ever to introduce legislation that better protects students from sexual abuse.

I'd just like to state what the act stipulates. The act says that employers must remove from the classroom a teacher charged with or convicted of an offence with minors, and also that if an employer removes a member or restricts duties for professional misconduct, he or she must report this action to the college registrar within 30 months.

So we now have very comprehensive definitions of sexual abuse, including sexual assault and harassment. I can tell you that it makes it very difficult for disciplined teachers to move from one board to the other.

COMMUNITY SAFETY

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): My question is for the Premier. The last few days have been very devastating for the Black community of Toronto and even more devastating, I'm sure, to the parents whose children have been killed on our streets. Unfortunately, another was shot this morning. Chief Fantino says that policing alone won't bring peace, and this was reiterated by the chiefs of police, with whom many of us met today. Chief Fantino says we need to fix the root causes, be they education or housing or opportunity.

Last year, before my election to this House, the New Democratic Party released a document called the Building Hope Action Plan. This was following extensive consultations with the Black community. Last week, Howard Hampton sent you a copy. There are 30 action steps contained within that plan. Given what has happened in these last few days, which ones will you implement first to get the guns off the street and return safe neighbourhoods to our citizens?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I think the Minister of Public Safety and Security can answer this question.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): Certainly we're all concerned, and I think I speak on behalf of all members of the Legislative Assembly, with the spike of homicides and crime that we've seen over the last number of days in the city of Toronto. Certainly the chief raised a significant number of issues that have to be identified in terms of dealing with the root causes of crime.

I have not seen the report that you have provided to the Premier, but we, along with all members of this assembly, want to assist the Toronto police and the police services across this province in addressing these challenges.

Mr Prue: Mr Premier, I'm going to ask you again, but perhaps the minister will answer. A couple of very easy things can be done, and I've just sent a copy of that report back across the floor. One is to institute community safety programs involving the police, youth and the community—the general neighbourhoods. Another very easy thing that can be done today is to give sufficient funds to the city or to other groups for recreation programs that will operate in the evenings and after hours so that our youth will have something to do other than to hang out on street corners.

Last week we gave you this road map; today I give it to you again. This road map is intended to transform the lives of so many of our most vulnerable citizens, so many of our young people who are at risk of death on our streets. Do you have the courage to sit in the driver's seat and take that road map where it needs to go?

Hon Mr Runciman: I certainly appreciate the party's input and their genuine concern about this issue. I have to say, looking at one of the references here to community policing, that I know there have been very significant efforts on the part of the Toronto Police Service, under the leadership of Chief Fantino, to reach out to the various minority communities in Toronto. I think there has been a real priority given to expansion of community policing as well in the city of Toronto.

Clearly, there is a willingness on the part of the Toronto Police Service. Meeting with the chiefs of police who are in the building today, as we speak, they are all concerned about this issue and I think they all want to work together, along with this government, with members of this assembly, to address these challenges. We welcome your input.

HOME CARE

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): My question is for the Premier. Premier, as you know, October is Ontario Community Support Month. Today we have in our gallery individuals representing different community support sectors and the people who provide the care and support services in our communities.

You made a commitment to the people of Ontario in 1998 to provide an additional $551 million. You still owe more than half of that money, over $140 million that you have committed to the community care sector that has not as yet been paid out to them for services to our communities. In a letter dated September 18, signed by 13 different organizations, you were specifically asked to do something about it. You well know that many services that used to be provided by community care are no longer available to those elderly and frail who want to live in their own home.

Since we all agree it's to the benefit of our seniors and most vulnerable to live in their own home environment as long as possible, why don't you live up to your solemn promise and commitment and make that funding available immediately so that people can stay in their own home environment as long as possible?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The Minister of Health has a response.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): As the honourable member knows, in fact we are continuing to meet our commitment when it comes to both the community and long-term-care sector and the at-home community care sector. This is a multi-year commitment. This commitment was made by the government of Ontario a number of years ago, and each year we have met a certain portion of that commitment on schedule, on plan. That will continue as our support for this community grows.

Mr Gerretsen: Minister, currently you are $140 million short. You are the minister who wrote, by way of a letter to your colleague David Turnbull on September 30 of this year, that the ministry "will undertake a communications campaign directed at ... increasing the awareness about" long-term care "redevelopment activities currently underway throughout the province; highlighting the new home-like environment and improved comfort and amenities being offered by the new and redeveloped facilities."

We all know what a home-like environment is. We all know what comfort is. We all know that people would prefer to stay in their own homes as long as possible. Will you tell the people in the gallery today that if you can find the money for this advertising campaign, surely you can find within your budget the money you solemnly promised to commit to this sector in 1998, so people can stay in their own homes with the community support they need? Will you tell them today that the funding will be there so they will be able to stay right where they want to be, in their very own home, where it is a real home, and not some home-like—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Minister.

Hon Mr Clement: I'm quite surprised by the honourable member's characterization of this. He should know, as Ontarians know, that when you look per capita, we have the most generous home care services in the entire Dominion of Canada, at $128 per capita. That is a commitment that has grown since 1995 by 72%. In fact, it's grown by 440% since they were the government of Ontario on the other side of the House. That is 100% provincial dollars, not a dime from the federal Liberal government, I might add.

We are proud of our commitment to community care. We are proud of our commitment to long-term care. This government is meeting the demands and the needs of the people of Ontario, and we will continue to do so.

SMALL BUSINESS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Minister of Consumer and Business Services. But first, for the members of the House, I'd like to extend my congratulations on your recent marriage; I commend you for that. As we all know, marriage is no small business decision.

However, on a more serious note, October is Small Business Month. We all know that small business creates more than half the jobs, almost one million new jobs, in the province of Ontario.

Sadly, back in 1995, I recall sitting down and listening to those small business people talk about their genuine frustration with the government of the past 10 years—red tape and bureaucratic handling and filings.

But today, fortunately, in my riding of Durham, there is hope. A branch of the Scugog Chamber of Commerce recently formed the Scugog Business Advocacy and Advisory Committee, which helps local enterprise, of course. I'd like to commend committee members Betty Penny, Julie Brock and Ed Olsen, just to name a few.

My question to the minister is very clear: Minister, what has this government done to make it easier for small—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member's time is up. Minister?

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): I appreciate the member's interest and enthusiasm in small business as well as my personal life.

As the member knows and said quite well, small business is the backbone of the Ontario economy. It's true: it used to be that small business people would have to wait in line for up to half a day to file their forms, renew their names or to sign up a new business name. It took them longer to file routine paperwork than it did to do their taxes, even using an abacus.

Once we were elected, we worked hard and we continue to work hard to make sure that we cut red tape and make businesses spend less time filling out forms and more time doing what they do best: creating jobs and investment in the economy. Now they can hop on the Net or stop by one of our electronic kiosks and be finished in the time it takes to make your morning coffee; a substantial improvement, and just one step that we're doing for small business.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you, Minister, for that. I'm certain you didn't have to line up to get your marriage licence.

However, I would also say we're moving ahead with entrepreneurship and e-commerce in our government; I know that. The Internet, of course, and kiosks are a very good way to eliminate the inconvenience for small business. Paperwork for small business is lost money, lost income and lost jobs.

I think there's much to be done. I know the Red Tape Commission is working tirelessly to eliminate barriers to opportunities and growth. But what additional initiatives, like the small business advisory committee that Mr Spina is working on—what is your ministry doing specifically to help small business during Small Business Month?

Hon Mr Hudak: The member puts it quite well. The last thing we want to do is to make businesses jump through more hoops in filling out routine paperwork. There are enough levels of government for them to deal with. In fact, the Ernie Eves government has been recognized by winning a gold award from the Commonwealth Association for Public Administration and Management in the United Kingdom for its work in streamlining processes, especially through electronic service delivery.

We're also working closely with the federal government in this area to streamline the registration process. We have something called the Joint On-line Registration Pilot project, which allows a small business that incorporates federally to similarly apply for Ontario Registration at the same time. There are also a number of joint business centres with the federal government which offer excellent resources for entrepreneurs across Ontario. This type of one-stop shopping frees up time and money and lets businesses concentrate on creating jobs and investment in small towns and large cities across the province of Ontario.

MUNICIPAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Minister, you can't pass off this question to the minister of rural affairs, because the question is for you. This is the question and this is the 14th day in which you've been silent. Journalists, all kinds of people, have been trying to get you to answer the question. Now I think I realize why you can't answer the question: it's because you really don't know the file. Here I have a deferral at the OMB. As you know, you're deferring the appeals on the decision by the OMB related to the ward boundaries that the city of Ottawa has already undertaken. You signed this, but strangely enough I see some fingerprints here of the minister of rural affairs.

My question to you is, is that the way you operate as a minister? You don't really take a look at what it means or assume your ministerial responsibilities; you just sign it because he said you should. Is that the way you operate?

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): Despite the direction from the person asking the question that I not refer it, I will refer it after this.

I understand that the people in Ottawa want to have a theory that Toronto is dictating everything in Ottawa, and it goes against your theory to even believe that a minister from Ottawa would have responsibility for this file to protect the rural interests in Ottawa. You've got all kinds of conspiracy theories: a plan from Toronto to take over Ottawa, and now you've even included fingerprints that you can somehow see on a letter, and that's a conspiracy.

Look, we're doing the best we can to make sure the rural residents in the Ottawa area are heard, that there's a proper process, and the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, rural division, is in charge of this file.

Mr Patten: I told you that you had to answer that, didn't I?

To the minister of rural affairs: when I asked you this question last week, you said there was plenty of time and plenty of opportunity for a review of this. Is it your intent to resolve this issue before the end of December—Elections Ontario is saying you must have recommendations in by that point, otherwise it would be too late, and the city of Ottawa will be encumbered with some wards that will have five times the population of others. Are you prepared to stand up for that kind of injustice and that kind of discrepancy? Is that what you want to see happen? Because the people of Ottawa will remember.

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): As the member opposite knows, it was a very real issue during the time of amalgamation, and it is still an issue today, that there be proper representation from the rural communities in the Ottawa area, so much so that they launched an appeal to the OMB. There's a deep amount of concern with respect to their representation being undermined at the council table.

We have had a stay in the proceedings in order to have a time out so they can discuss it. The offer has been made for our ministry to work with the appellants in the case and with council to see if there can't be a solution to this so that the representation of the rural communities is not watered down and undermined in this process.

ASSISTANCE TO FARMERS

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): My question is for the Minister of Agriculture and Food. Last month, I joined a large number of my caucus colleagues at the International Plowing Match in Glencoe. At that event our government provided a major announcement relating to financial assistance for Ontario farmers. I recall that delivering assistance as quickly as possible was a major priority. Minister, could you inform the Legislature and farmers across Ontario on any progress regarding the distribution of these funds?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I'd like to thank the member from Nipissing for his question and his support of agriculture in the province of Ontario.

I'm pleased to inform the Legislature that last week the first of approximately 50,000 cheques were delivered to Ontario farmers. As we have noted, financial assistance represents Ontario's 40% of the federal share, and that's the first year of a two-year transition program that we promised to comply with. The short-term aid, of course, will assist Ontario's agricultural industry as they make the transition to a longer-term approach where the risk management tools will be established by the federal government through the agricultural policy framework.

Payments to grain and oilseed producers were made through the market revenue insurance information that we received, and that started to flow last week. We are very proud that these dollars have gone out to the farmers, and we are sure they will be put to good use in the agricultural community.

Mr McDonald: Minister, your ongoing support for Ontario agriculture is well known by Ontario farmers.

I understand your ministry has conducted extensive consultations with Ontario farm organizations to determine the most effective method of distributing this money. Could you inform the Legislature as to what farm groups requested and how our government is responding?

Hon Mrs Johns: We did do a lot of consultation. We worked very closely with the Ontario farm groups to ensure that we came up with the right balance and the right method of payment. The agricultural community talked to us and said they needed a cash payment as opposed to something that went into a plan that may not be able to be triggered. So of course the Ontario portion of the transition money was sent through direct payment. It was also based on a compendium program that we have in Ontario called the market revenue insurance program, which best meets the needs of the agricultural community that was most in need: the grain and oilseed producers.

We put a little bit of dollars into the net income stabilization program because we wanted to make sure that every farmer in the province of Ontario benefited from the program. So we think that's the most effective method and we certainly—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the minister. The time is up.

YOUNG OFFENDER FACILITY

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): To the Minister of Public Safety: my colleague Tony Martin from Sault Ste Marie tells me that community is shaking its head in dismay at the prospect of you shutting down the only phase 2 young offender facility. That means that young offenders are going to have to be transported all the way to Sudbury, 300 kilometres away, transported back and forth with a new cost to the community of some half a million dollars a year for the mere transport alone. There will be no accessibility to parents, no accessibility to lawyers. Indeed, the job loss as well is a serious blow to a community that's already been hard hit by the Algoma restructuring.

How could you possibly contemplate shutting down that facility and using Sudbury as a base?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): I think this issue arose as a result of some media reports a week or so ago that talked about the decommissioning of the Soo jail, which indeed has been contemplated for some time. The Soo jail per diem costs are in the neighbourhood of $250, when the average across the system in the province is about $138 or $139 a day. So clearly this is a facility that we cannot contemplate keeping open.

Tied into this is the fact that the young offender facility is attached to the Soo jail, so I think there has been a conclusion reached that automatically the young offender facility would move to Sudbury. I want to indicate that that is a possibility, but no final decisions have been taken.

USE OF COAT OF ARMS

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I want to bring to your attention a matter that happened last night in Scarborough. There was a meeting that was attended by the member for Parkdale-High Park, and there were forms handed out at that meeting for the Ontario Provincial Education Network encouraging people to join. To the left of that name on the form appears to be the coat of arms of the province of Ontario being used for a highly partisan activity.

I'd ask you, Speaker, to rule and report back to the Legislative Assembly on whether or not members can use the coat of arms of the province of Ontario for partisan activities.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We'll check and see, if the member would give it to me, and we could talk to the appropriate member if something hasn't been done.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it's part of the 26,000-signature petition we have with regard to Highway 69.

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas many municipalities across northeastern Ontario have supported the four-laning of Highway 69 from Sudbury to Parry Sound, such as Sault Ste Marie and Sudbury; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of a government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government has failed to do so;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Harris-Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease.”

I of course affix my signature to this petition and give it to our page Nazir to bring it to the table.

DÉRÉGLEMENTATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell) : J'ai une pétition ici qui comprend plus de 1 300 noms, ce qui voudrait dire aussi que nous aurons atteint plus de 5 000 noms par la fin de la semaine.

« À l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario :

« Attendu que le gouvernement Harris-Eves a déréglementé le marché de l'électricité ontarien le 1^{er} mai 2002 sans que cela ait fait partie de ses programmes de 1995 ou 1999 et sans mandat de la population de l'Ontario ;

« Attendu que le prix de l'électricité a atteint des niveaux outrageux, augmentant parfois de 100 % depuis le 1^{er} mai 2002 et causant de graves difficultés financières aux Ontariens et Ontariennes ;

« Attendu qu'Ontario Power Generation (qui appartient au gouvernement de l'Ontario) a demandé à la Commission de l'énergie de l'Ontario la permission de réduire de 20 % le rabais promis aux Ontariens et Ontariennes si le prix de l'électricité dépassait les 3,8 cents le kilowattheure... ;

« Attendu que le gouvernement Harris-Eves a autorisé le versement de salaires et primes exorbitants de l'ordre de 2,2 $ millions par année à l'ancienne présidente de Hydro One et au-delà de 1,6 $ millions par année au vice-président d'Ontario Power Generation ;

« Nous, soussignés, demandons au gouvernement Harris-Eves de prendre des mesures immédiates pour faire en sorte que les Ontariens et Ontariennes payent ce service essentiel qu'est l'électricité à un juste prix et demandons également que le gouvernement conservateur et son chef, Ernie Eves, déclenchent une élection générale sur l'instabilité du marché de l'énergie pour ainsi donner aux Ontariens et Ontariennes la parole à ce sujet. »

J'y ajoute ma signature.

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport) : I have a petition addressed to the Parliament of Ontario. It reads as follows:

“Whereas the Ernie Eves Conservative government has legislated the opening of the Ontario electricity market as of May 1, 2002, and the price per kilowatt hour for electricity in the province of Ontario has nearly quadrupled since May 1; and

“Whereas Ernie Eves has done a poor job in educating the public as to the ramifications of an open electricity market in the province of Ontario and has done little to punish the unscrupulous sales practices of door-to-door energy retailers; and

“Whereas the” Eves “government appointed the board of directors for Hydro One who approved exorbitant salaries and compensation packages for Hydro One executives;

“Be it resolved that the Ontario government move immediately to protect our province's electricity consumers by addressing the serious generation problem in Ontario, by punishing unscrupulous electricity retailers and by moving forward with a rebate to offset the increasing costs of electricity in Ontario.”

Since I agree, I sign this document as well.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London) : “To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the Ontario government led by the Harris-Eves Tories has severely damaged public education and created turmoil in our schools since they took office in 1995; and

“Whereas the current Toronto-based education funding formula is broken when it comes to rural schools; and

“Whereas [community schools] are being threatened with closure; and “Whereas rural schools are the heart and soul of their communities;

“Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand” that the education minister “immediately address the funding formula in relation to rural schools and place a moratorium on rural school closures.”

I have signed this petition and give it to Pierre, a page from the riding of Elgin-Middlesex-London and a resident of Lambeth.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex) : I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

“Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million; and

“Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

“Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

“Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas; and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive rate increases.”

I have thousands of signatures in regard to this petition. This one is signed from persons from Tilbury and Pain Court. I hand it over to an excellent page, Alex.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): These are further long-term-care petitions from Markham, Warton, Owen Sound, Mississauga, Ottawa, Beamsville, Burlington, Sturgeon Falls, Kingston, Grimsby and Port Hope. It reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 per month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas the government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

I agree with it. I've signed it and I am now handing it to Matthew, our page.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Ernie Eves government promised the people of Ontario that the opening of the electricity market would deliver lower hydro rates and improve service; and

"Whereas hydro rates have risen 21% over the past five months since the opening of the market; and

"Whereas consumers have not been adequately informed about the unbundling of charges and therefore do not understand and cannot reconcile the charges shown on their hydro invoices;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government convene a legislative committee to oversee electricity issues in order to inform and protect the public interest."

I am in full agreement and have signed my name to this petition.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas the government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

I will very happily sign my name to this petition because I agree with it wholeheartedly. I will hand it to the page who is with me today, Michelle.

EDUCATION

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): This petition is addressed to the Parliament of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Ontario government wants to take an additional billion dollars out of the education system this year and every year; and

"Whereas the Ontario government has decided to hire uncertified teachers in kindergartens, libraries, for guidance, physical education, the arts, and technology; and

"Whereas the Ontario government wishes to remove the right to negotiate working conditions; and

"Whereas the Ontario government will remove at least 10,000 teachers from classrooms across the province; and

"Whereas the Ontario government has become the sole decision-maker on class size, preparation time and the length of the school day; and

"Whereas the Ontario government proposes to take decision-making powers out of the hands of locally elected community-minded trustees;

"We, the undersigned Ontario residents, strongly urge the government to repeal the Education Act and create an accessible, public, consultative process for students, parents, teachers, and school board administrators to study alternate solutions that have universal appeal and will lead to an improved educational system."

Since I agree, I'm delighted to sign this petition as well.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This is a petition to the Legislature Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and"

Whereas in the last three years 46 people have been killed on that dangerous stretch of highway; and

Whereas so far this year, 10 people have been killed needlessly on that stretch of highway; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of a government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government has failed to do so;

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Harris-Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

Of course I affix my signature to this petition. I give it to Wade, our page, to bring it to the table.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): A petition to the Legislature Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01...; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

This is signed by over a thousand constituents from all over the province, and I want to thank Mrs Janice Duskoc of Port Rowan for her efforts.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TIME ALLOCATION

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): I move that pursuant to standing order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 149, an Act to extend the red light cameras pilot projects to November 20, 2004 or for an indefinite period, when Bill 149 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill, without further debate or amendment, and at such time the bill shall be ordered for third reading, which order may be called on that same day; and

That, when the order for third reading is called, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

That the vote on second and third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred; and

That, in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Galt has moved government motion 49. The minister has the floor if he wishes. No? Then, in the rotation, the member for Chatham-Kent Essex.

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I'm pleased to rise and speak about the bill, but I'm not pleased to rise and talk about the fact that the government is once again this afternoon cutting off debate, for the public should know that time allocation means for the opposition that they're taking our time away; they're ending our time for debate.

I just want to contrast what has happened in recent times with the Harris-Eves government and what has happened in this regard in our past. For example, in the Peterson majority government they passed 183 bills and time allocation was only used three times. In the Harris-Eves government, from June 1999 to July 2002, they've passed only 71 bills and time allocation has been used 46 times. And since we have come back this fall they have invoked time allocation, taking debating time away from the opposition, six times.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): Six.

Mr Hoy: Six this fall alone.

So the government once again, with its majority and its heavy hand, is saying, "The debate of issues, and in particular the red light camera issue, is over. We want to end it."

We have this time this afternoon to make some comments, and I certainly want to make some brief comments, as do my colleagues, in terms of this time allocation motion and the impact it might have.

This time allocation motion is being put in place on Bill 149, the Red Light Cameras Pilot Projects Extension Act, 2002. Some time ago there was a bill passed that allowed for a red light camera pilot project to be used for red light cameras in proceedings concerning drivers who failed to stop at a red light and proceeded through the intersection before the green light came on. This was done in 1998 and the legislation allowed for it to continue until November 2002. What this bill would now do is allow for an extension of two more years of the use of red light cameras wherever they may be availed of and continue until 2004, unless the Lieutenant Governor were to repeal it before that date.

Surely, when it comes to safety on our highways, streets and roads, we want to ensure the very best for our public. And it seems that all too frequently people have been running red lights in various areas of the province. So it would seem reasonable that this pilot project—if indeed the government does not have satisfactory data as to the value of these red light cameras, whether it's saving lives, protecting people from serious injury, we clearly should support the continuation so that we can fully assess whether this red light camera pilot project should be made permanent.

The Canada Safety Council argues that the purpose of these cameras is to prevent collisions and not generate revenue or to punish persons, and I think that's what all members in this House are concerned with: the protection of the public. Certainly I agree that the use of red light cameras can be an effective tool in ensuring that our public drives in a safe and forthwith manner.

On the subject of transportation, I would like the House to also be reminded that I have a concern, and my constituents have a concern, about the abandonment of railroads and how it will have a negative impact on local communities and economies and can affect the attraction of new businesses and industries to certain areas of this province. Not only does the abandonment of railroads have an effect on those businesses and industries, it reduces the choice of transportation that persons and manufacturers might want to avail themselves of and locate in various areas.

In my riding of Chatham-Kent Essex we have a very high incidence of heart, stroke and cancer. Our air quality in Chatham-Kent Essex is very, very poor on certain occasions. I was actually quite astounded to learn that the small village where I come from, with a population of about 500 persons, has an air monitoring system nearby, and at times, in this country setting of Chatham-Kent, in the little village of Merlin, we can have smog days that exceed that of metro Toronto.

So we believe, and I support the notion, that rail lines are an integral part of our gateway to southwestern Ontario. And it happens to be that there are many embarked on a campaign to save a part of the Canadian Southwestern Railroad, 83 miles of track between a point west of Welland to St Thomas. This rail line is an important corridor. It links New York, Boston, Toronto, Detroit and Chicago with ourselves. So I think we should ensure that we leave the options available to people when it comes to rail travel.

I find it quite interesting that the government has decided that it would embark on red light cameras. It embarks on taking pictures of licence plates to collect tolls, but it will not support Bill 112 in its fullest and have it go to committee in a speedy fashion.

My Bill 112 would allow for bus drivers to identify the driver of a vehicle by licence plate. The government will allow for ticketing of persons through a photograph of a licence plate at a red light camera situation and collects tolls. It'll collect money by taking a picture, a photo, of a licence plate. But on five different occasions, as I introduced a bill to protect children while riding on school buses with the red lights flashing and having the bus driver identify the vehicle, an eyewitness account of the licence plate, it seems that this government at the very least has been very slow, after second reading, with all-party support of this bill, in getting it to committee, in having a full and extended debate, in bringing it back to this House and having the bill passed into law so that we can protect the 810,000 children who ride school buses daily on 16,000 buses. Obviously the police cannot follow 16,000 buses, which may have one, two or three routes per day, so we need a conviction mechanism. We need a conviction mechanism so that we can protect these children. There have been 13 deaths and over 80 injuries by persons who pass school buses with the red lights flashing here in Ontario.

I have wide support for this bill, from all quarters; 30,000 names were presented in this Legislature in regard to the support for this bill. Police associations support this bill. The Ontario School Bus Association supports it, the Canada Safety Council, the School Bus Operators' Association of Ontario, the Ontario Home and School Association, the Federated Women's Institutes of Ontario, the Ontario Farm Safety Association, Citizens for Responsible Driving, and countless municipality school boards, school bus operators and drivers, and the public at large, who have signed petitions totalling 30,000 names.

Colleen and Larry Marcuzzi, and Ed and Ginny Loxton, both families lost daughters to someone who passed a school bus while the red lights were flashing. A tragic, tragic event, that a young life would be taken away.

We need a strong deterrent so that the people of Ontario recognize and will understand that passing a school bus with the red lights flashing will not be tolerated in Ontario.

Currently, the bus driver must identify the face of the person driving the offending vehicle. It is virtually impossible to see that face. First of all, the bus drivers are watching their most precious cargo, that being the children, first and foremost.

Secondly, if the offending vehicle passes the bus from the back to the front, the bus driver only sees the back of one's head. Many of the vehicles today have blacked-out windows, which makes it virtually impossible to see people inside.

The speed of the vehicle is also a factor in not being able to recognize the person who is driving. But school bus operators and school bus drivers have told me they stand an excellent chance of recognizing the licence plate number. That is what my bill is all about: allowing the bus drivers to give an eyewitness account, not a photograph, of who passed a school bus illegally, and they would be available for cross-examination. It's hard to cross-examine a red light camera or a camera taking a photo on the 407 to collect monies.

I urge the government to allow this bill, as it has passed second reading, to go to committee to have a full debate. We'll answer any and all questions members in all parties might have. The support is real; it's been over countless years. I've introduced the bill five times. We persist with this bill because it's right for the children, and it's right for those bus drivers and bus operators to know there's a strong deterrent here in Ontario that will stop this habit of passing school buses recklessly.

In my summation, I just want to say that those red lights flashing don't mean slow down and they don't mean pass the bus when you think it's safe; they mean stop. In many cases, people will stop for railroad crossings. There are exceptions to everything, but in the main people will stop for railroad crossings. They will stop for stop signs. Apparently we have some people—a law was needed to have people stop at right lights on our streets. But for some reason, people take a dangerous attitude that they can pass a school bus when the red lights are flashing.

I say to the government, let's give our bus drivers a chance to ensure that their precious cargo returns home safe. Bus drivers have told me they drive white-knuckled, with not one car passing, not two, but as many as three in succession. A local TV station sent me film of this happening during an OPP blitz. They continued to pass.

I've had mothers hiding behind shrubbery in their yards filming people passing a school bus when the red lights are flashing. We have proof that it happens, the sad proof of deaths and injuries that have occurred in Ontario.

I continue to work for those families and those school bus drivers who need Bill 112 to be passed into law. I know there are others who want to talk to this time allocation motion, so I simply say, get this bill to committee, make it law and protect the children of Ontario who ride school buses.

Mr Marchese: I support this one-page bill. I think it's a good bill. I oppose strangulation motions on principle, but one has to accept that governments have a job to do, and from time to time they'll bring in strangulation motions to strangle debate. I understand why they do it. We just have to say that on principle we oppose them. But we do support Bill 149, because it extends the ability of cities to implement red light cameras, which we believe are a matter of safety. It's true. But I can't help wanting to make some comparisons with red light cameras and photo radar, because the two are almost intrinsically the same.

I want to bring you back, Speaker, because you were here, and bring on these four or five new Tories who are sitting across from me, because they weren't here in 1993-94. Just for their entertainment, listen to some of the things Mike Harris, their former leader, used to say about photo radar. This is what the former Premier, Mike Harris, then leader of the third party, asked with respect to the issue of photo radar: "My second question is to the Minister of Transportation. Late yesterday, your government brought in a motion to shut down debate on your totalitarian"—I can't believe he said that, but that's Mike Harris—"Orwellian"—I'm surprised he knows what the word means—"photo-radar cash-grab legislation."

Then he said, "Why are you so desperate to ram this legislation through that you are not even willing to listen to any viewpoint other than your own?"—to the five Tories who are here listening to what I'm saying about what Harris used to say.

Our minister, Gilles Pouliot, then Minister of Transportation, answered, "You can attest better than anyone"—speaking to the Speaker—"that we have spent a full five days debating this safety initiative...." I'll tell you, a full five days—we used to spend weeks and weeks debating bills in this place.

The former leader of the third party called what Pouliot, the Minister of Transportation, did, ramming through this legislation, called it "totalitarian" yet, "Orwellian" yet.

Then I wonder how this government could, in light of what your Premier used to say about photo radar, then introduce a bill that is about red light cameras, which is similar in nature to photo radar. You understand, there is no difference. The principle is the same. You attach cameras here and catch illegal activity that's going on there—a matter of safety. Mike Harris said that our photo radar bill was totalitarian, Orwellian and cash-grab legislation. You go figure that. Premier Mike Harris, now gone, God bless his soul, spoke so vehemently against photo radar, and then you people grab this red light camera bill. I say, why would you do that?

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): Then you're agreeing with Mike Harris.

Mr Marchese: It's not what I said. It's what Mike Harris said.

I want to know what some of the Tories say, particularly some of the new ones, what AL McDonald from Nipissing has to say about what Mike Harris used to say about photo radar. I'm interested in your opinion. I told you what Mike Harris said. I want to know what AL from Nipissing has to say about those remarks. He called it totalitarian. Bill 26, which your government introduced, a bill that would give municipalities, ministers, totalitarian powers to do literally anything they wanted was okayed by Mike Harris.

AL from Nipissing, when 80% of people across Toronto said, "We will not be amalgamated," your Mike Harris, the same guy who called our photo radar totalitarian and Orwellian, said, "We won't listen to the 80% of the people." It makes you wonder, though, right, AL? It makes you often wonder what people do in opposition.

I've got to tell you, AL from Nipissing—five days of debate on that. You understand, AL, because you've been here long enough. Some of the bills get debated—what?—for a day if we're lucky. Some of these things are dismissed expeditiously—

Hon Mr Galt: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: According to parliamentary procedure, we refer to members' riding names rather than their personal names.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): You are absolutely correct. Members should refer to the riding names, not to members' names.

Mr Marchese: We admire the whip's ability to be so perspicacious in his abilities; good heavens, yes. But with the same perspicacity that he made that comment, he would know that I referred to the member for Nipissing as AL. AL has a name; Nipissing has a member. The Nipissing member is called AL—AL from Nipissing. He knew that. With that sagaciousness of his, he would have known that. But mercifully we've got a sharp whip over there.

I want to tell the whip, just listen to what your former Premier used to say. He said, "You, in your haste, are recklessly disregarding the people of Ontario"—recklessly. We're talking about photo radar, a safety bill that these people presumably now, through the red light cameras, agree with. They said of our bill on photo radar we were in haste, "recklessly disregarding" the Ontario public. This is the Premier who back then, AL from Nipissing, used to be your leader of the third party, right here.

Let me get to Mr Stockwell, the Minister of the Environment, who said this about photo radar then, "Tell me what service they're providing to the public"—meaning photo radar—"by nailing every single driver to the cottage on Friday night and home on Sunday night because they're going 15 or 20 kilometres over the speed limit. They're not serving anybody. What are they doing? They're generating revenue for their coffers. That's what they're doing."

Let me understand this. The poor guy is going to the cottage. He's speeding by 10, 15, 20, 30, 40, 50 kilometres. Stockwell says it's not a problemo, right? They're just going to the cottage. On Sunday night, he says, they're coming back home. What's the big deal? I think to myself, if this is a matter of consistency, logic and safety, isn't that what red light cameras do? They catch some perpetrator of a crime going through a red light, potentially causing the life of somebody, potentially maiming someone. Yes, that guy might be going to the cottage, but he might be going through a red light, potentially causing harm to some human being, small, big, middle-aged, thin, old, whatever. They're human beings who could potentially be harmed by somebody going through a red light. The Minister of the Environment, then a member of the third party, said, "Tell me what harm they're doing." He called photo radar just "generating revenue for their coffers."

To be fair, AL from Nipissing, the Liberals argued the same stuff, so don't feel I'm picking on you, because the Liberals then opposed photo radar too. But they like red light cameras now, just as you like red light cameras now. I just wanted for the record, AL from Nipissing, to tell you what your friends used to say. Of course you like red light cameras now. If you were here then with Chris Stockwell, Mike Harris, Runciman and all these others, you wouldn't have liked it either then. But today you come here saying, "I like."

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: Photo radar? Right. I think there was an intelligent commentary, but I didn't pick up. Maybe the Hansard will. I'll look it up later.

I just wanted to tell you what your members used to say. "This isn't going to stop anyone from speeding in a rented car," says Stockwell. "Why would they stop speeding?" He goes on. There's so much more that Chris Stockwell said on this matter.

I want to bring to your attention, Speaker, and through you to the public, the inconsistencies, often, of politicians, how often we contradict ourselves and how difficult it is for the public to believe anyone. That's why so many are so cynical here. It's tough for the general public, for the general Joe, to say, "Whom do you believe?"

But I want to say, speaking to the issue of red light cameras, that New Democrats supported photo radar then and we support red light cameras today. Generally speaking, we take a consistent approach.

Mr McDonald: Let's just vote.

Mr Marchese: I know you just want to vote, but we need to make the points, right?

Here's the other point I want to make to you, AL from Nipissing. You had a two-year pilot project, right? How long do pilot projects last? When does a pilot project end? We're going to go to four years now as a pilot. A pilot is generally—I don't know—a year. You sort of look at the matter and you study it, say, one year. You say, "Hmm, all right. Let's give it another year, two years." If you don't have enough evidence in by now, you've got a problem on your hands, right? Something is wrong when a pilot project is extended two more years into another pilot phase. It speaks obviously to a dilemma of sorts, because you as a government would have to argue or give reasons why you're doing that. Why would you be doing that?

I'm looking forward to Julia's remarks, the member from York North, to see what her speaking notes say in this regard. I want to know, when does a pilot project end?

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington): When it ends.

Mr Marchese: When it ends, yes. But it's not quite true. As I was explaining earlier to the former Minister of Culture, pilot projects have an end, really, and they're usually time-specific. They don't last four years. They just don't last that long—ought not to—and if they last that long, there's a problem.

I argue that cities ought not to come begging to you every two years for permission to introduce red light cameras. Cities on their own have the ability and the knowledge to introduce red light cameras without having to come to beg to the province to do this. Why is it that you insist on holding on to this power and not liberate yourselves and the cities to be able to do what they ought to do is incomprehensible to me?

Perhaps the member from York North will also speak to this. I'm not sure what her speaking notes say. But hopefully they will say why it is that the province insists on holding on to the power of giving permission only to cities, holding on to the power of saying to cities yes or no. Why do you do that? Cities surely are mature enough to deal with this. Of all the things they don't need, it's the government in this case to continually pass a law that allows them to do something or not.

You are good, generally speaking, at flushing your problems down to the municipal level. You have flushed down every conceivable problem you have to the municipalities. Your taking back of education taxes and giving the cities back more responsibilities—of transportation, God bless them; of child care; and completely giving them housing as a social responsibility where they're going to have to raise property taxes to pay for housing—is an act of irresponsibility to the highest degree. You have flushed every conceivable responsibility to the city so that the city has to go to the taxpayer to get the money to pay for those problems.

But red light cameras are not something for which you, AL from Nipissing, can give municipalities the power. Speak up when it's your turn; you're next. Tell Julia you want to speak. You were a former—what?

Mr McDonald: Deputy mayor.

Mr Marchese: You have the experience to speak about how able you are or were to take this on. You know because you were there. You could tell the Premier, "Ernie, they can do it. I was there; I was the deputy mayor of Nipissing," up there somewhere in your little town up there.

The problem is, the member from York North has a speech and she's not going to address my questions. The speeches are written by some young bureaucrat over there sitting at the back who gives you the speeches, obviously. I've got to tell you, I'm not a fan of that kind of stuff.

I want people like the member from Nipissing to stand up and say, "Here's my view." That's what I want. And I want the member from York North to answer my questions, and if she can't I want the member from Nipissing to get up and do it, and I want him to take just five minutes. Don't take 10, AL from Nipissing, just five, a couple of minutes to say Marchese is right or wrong, that Marchese is right in giving municipalities the power to implement their own red light cameras or not. You tell me, because you've had the experience, Deputy Mayor, you had the experience—a small city, it's true, but nonetheless it doesn't matter.

Mr McDonald: It's not that small: 56,000.

Mr Marchese: But it doesn't matter: 56,000, big, small, it doesn't matter. You were the deputy mayor, with a whole lot of experience. I want you to just walk over to the member from York North and say, "Julia, just give me some time, because the member from Trinity-Spadina needs some answers." Go ahead, AL, I want you to do that for me, please, so I know. Go ask. He's asking; the member from Nipissing is asking.

The Acting Speaker: You know full well that you need to be addressing your comments through the Chair and that you do not refer to members by their names but by their constituencies. Thank you.

Mr Marchese: The member from Nipissing just went to the member from York North to ask for her permission to speak. You might ask the whip, because the whip has some say in these matters. Whip, the member from Nipissing would like a couple of minutes to respond to my question. Is that OK?

Hon Mr Galt: You'll have to check with the Speaker.

Mr Marchese: Check with the Speaker? It's not his business what you do.

Hon Mr Galt: I'm not chairing this Legislature.

Mr Marchese: No, but it's none of his business whether you'd permit the member from Nipissing to take five minutes or not. It's your business.

Anyway, I'm just having some fun here. That's not the point, really. We are against strangulation motions on principle; we are. That's not the problem. We support this bill, but what we say is that if there's one thing we probably will agree with the member from Nipissing on it is that red light cameras are something cities can take on because they've got the skills. It's not that complicated, really, when you come down to it. It's really easy. It's about safety. They're the closest to their communities so they know where to put these red light cameras, they know when to take them off, they know whether to put more or fewer in some of those streets. They're the ones who are best positioned to deal with these issues of safety. That's what we are arguing on this side.

Then I want the government to comment whether you will make this a permanent feature of what cities should be able to do. And if you don't want the cities to do it, will you end this pilot project and say, "We're going to permit cities to be able to do it all the time?"

The pilot project has got to end at some point. It's not complicated, right? You've got a red light camera that focuses on the problem: they speed and you catch the culprit. It's intended to prevent people from speeding recklessly through red lights. How effective it's going to be in the end is always a matter of degree and/or serious questioning, no doubt. But when people know you've got red light cameras keeping an eye on you, you're more likely to stop when you get to a red light than to take the chance of going through it, to take the chance of making the turn on the red light. It will seriously affect people's behaviour, because that's what you've got to do. You have to change the culture of what people do.

Listen, we live in big cities, those of us who live in big cities, or small, I suspect. We've got a whole lot of—hey, there's Chris Stockwell, Minister of the Environment. I just quoted you earlier. We live in a big city where people are busy, so busy that, yes, sometimes they do reckless things, but that's no reason that we should risk going through red lights and risk lives, risk maiming people. No one ought to be that busy that you can't take the time to slow down.

Mr McDonald: Just vote yes.

Mr Marchese: The member from Nipissing, AL, says, "Just vote yes." No, AL from Nipissing; it's more than just voting yes, more than just sitting down and saying yes. I want to point out the contradictions so that you remember. I want to point out what your Minister of the Environment said then. I want to point out what your then leader, then Premier, said. You need to know, AL from Nipissing, so that you can correct your own actions, so you are aware of your own contradictions, because you people are mired in them. You are mired all the time in your own contradictions. You seem to get away with it, but your popularity is slowly diminishing. God bless, sometimes you think someone is up there looking after us.

So I say to you, end the pilot. Make it a permanent feature of what cities ought to do. Make it permanent by saying to the city, "You can do it on your own," and give each municipality, wherever they are, the power to be able to do it however they see fit.

The member from Nipissing, AL, is going to stand up next, after me, take five minutes—right, Julia from York North?—to respond to some of these questions because I know, Chris, that script that she has ready to be delivered doesn't answer my questions. She's going to say, "Oh, this is about safety, this is really good, we've got to do it, let's end the debate." That's what she's going to say. I know that. But that's not what her Premier used to say about photo radar: "It's all nonsense."

She's got to get rid of that speech that one of those young bureaucrats wrote and speak from whatever heart she's got. And you too, AL from Nipissing. Don't deliver speeches on the basis of what they write for you. Speak from here. Yes, you might be caught in a contradiction if you speak from here, but that's OK, because at least it comes from your heart, right? As opposed to those controlled debates, those boxed-in debates that get written for you. You can't be a fan of such stuff. I wouldn't have any fun reading speeches. It would be a crime. Wouldn't that be so, member from Perth-Middlesex? Yes, it would be. I know you're listening. You're very attentive to what we have to say, as one of the people who's in that chair from time to time.

So three things: First, AL from Nipissing, when does the pilot end? You've got to answer that. It's a simple question. And you can't say, like the former Minister of Culture, "When it ends." That's too cute. The pilot has to end at some point.

Second, why do you insist on holding on to this power? Why do you think cities are incapable, former deputy mayor, of doing this on their own? Why, if it's such a simple matter, can't you give this power to the cities to overview, administer? Why can't you do that? And after you've answered these questions, then some of us can sit down a little more quickly and get out of the way, right?

But don't stand up talking about how good this is, this is great for safety, good for kids, good for senior citizens, good for the people, badda-boom, badda-boom. That's why I quoted your former Premier about what he said about photo radar, because he said it was dumb, because he called our bill totalitarian, Orwellian. Like the Tenant Protection Act that Mike Harris, the former Premier, passed wasn't Orwellian—the Tenant Protection Act, which doesn't protect tenants; it protects landlords—that's not Orwellian. Saying to 80% of the people in the city of Toronto, in the Metro region, "We're against amalgamating," and disregarding their opinion, that's not totalitarian, but photo radar was totalitarian.

You see, Speaker, how funny it is. You've got to be able to contain yourself when you read stuff like that. You've got to contain yourself and try not to laugh or cry because it's bizarre.

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): You're doing a good job of containing yourself.

Mr Marchese: You've got to, because otherwise you break down, either in tears or in laughter. You can't do it, and the Speaker wouldn't know how to contain himself if he witnessed such a spectacle either. Isn't that so?

So I think I've had enough to—

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): No, no, keep it up.

Mr Marchese: I could, but the member for Timmins-James Bay wants to speak on this too. I've got to tell you, I am happy when I have an hour to speak. I am, because 10 minutes is just not good enough. Strangulation debates, I love them too. If I had an hour to speak on that, this is the place to do it, right? This is the only place that people get to watch us and listen to us. Otherwise—

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: But it's true, Julia. So get rid of that script. Speak from the heart. OK? Let me just see you, because you're coming up next. You're not going to let AL from Nipissing speak. I know you. The whip laughed and he's not giving you permission to allow him to speak; I know that too. The whip is talking to somebody else right here on the Liberal benches.

Speaker, thank you for being attentive, as you always are. You've contained yourself very well. Thank you. My friend from Timmins-James Bay is going to take over in a short little while as we get around the turn.

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): I'm very pleased today to rise and offer my support for the time allocation motion in regard to the Red Light Cameras Pilot Projects Extension Act, 2002.

As my honourable colleagues will recall, the Minister of Transportation introduced this bill for first reading last June. The legislation would build on our impressive road safety record and on the success of the Red Light Cameras Pilot Projects Act, 1998, which was passed by the Legislature in December, 1998. That legislation authorized several municipalities in the province to install and operate red light cameras at selected intersections for a trial period of two years.

Under the proposed bill, the House would authorize a two-year extension of the pilot projects that have been underway in six municipalities over the past two years. Those projects are designed to test the effectiveness of red light cameras at high-risk intersections in deterring drivers from running red lights. This bill would allow the pilot projects to continue until November 20, 2004. The proposed bill that's before us proves once again this government's commitment to improving road safety, and improving intersection safety is part of our broader effort to counter aggressive driving.

As I mentioned earlier, the legislation authorizing municipalities to implement a red light camera enforcement pilot project was passed in December, 1998. The legislation called for a two-year pilot period during which participating municipalities would evaluate the effectiveness of red light cameras in preventing collisions at intersections.

Under the existing legislation, the red light cameras pilot projects are scheduled to end in November of this year. Six municipalities decided to participate in the pilot projects. They are the cities of Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa and the regional municipalities of Peel, Halton and Waterloo. These municipalities have taken a lead role in implementing red light cameras pilot projects. Five of these six participating municipalities have formally asked to extend the legislation and allow the pilot projects to continue for another two years, until November 20, 2004.

The draft legislation before us responds to the municipalities' request to extend the red light cameras pilot projects for a further two years. It would allow these municipalities additional time to gather more information on the effectiveness of red light cameras as a deterrent to drivers who run red lights.

As I mentioned, Ontario already has an outstanding road safety record. Our roads are the safest in Canada and the second-safest in all of North America. Our government is proud of this record. But we also recognize that there is still room to improve. Making Ontario's roads even safer is the goal of this bill.

I think it is important to point out that red light running is a significant cause of injuries and fatalities in Ontario. Based on highway traffic data for the year 2000, red light running accounted for more than 7,000 collisions and approximately 3.1% of all traffic-related fatalities. From the same data we also know, at municipal intersections in the province, almost one quarter of all collisions occur at intersections where there are traffic signals. More than 14% of those collisions can be attributed directly to drivers who run red lights. The undeniable fact is that almost half of all the deaths at municipal intersections that have traffic signals are caused by drivers who run the red light. Clearly, we must continue our efforts to improve driver behaviour by reducing and eventually eliminating this dangerous practice.

I'm sure my colleagues in the Legislature will agree that we pay a very high price for those irresponsible drivers who run red lights. The annual cost of collisions in Ontario has been estimated at about $9 billion. The cost of red light running, including hospital bills, property damage and the pain and suffering of victims, has been estimated at close to $300 million.

All stakeholders believe that a concerted effort is required to improve driver behaviour. We know it will take a combination of enforcement and education measures to end red light running, so, in addition to undertaking the red light cameras pilot projects, the participating municipalities were asked to step up their traditional enforcement methods. In each participating municipality local police conducted traditional enforcement blitzes on red light running for at least 20 hours at selected high-risk intersections during each year of the pilot project. The idea here was to have a basis for evaluating the effects of increased enforcement and the operation of red light cameras.

Preliminary results from the participating municipalities show a 40% decrease in red light running violations at intersections. As of September 30, 2002, these participating municipalities have charged about 25,500 red light runners detected by red light cameras. The final evaluation of the red light projects which examines the full two years of pilot data in terms of violations and impact on road safety will not be completed until 2003. This reflects the time required to compile all the collision data necessary for the evaluation.

I would like to stress that the public is generally very supportive of red light cameras. A recent Environics study indicated that red light cameras are supported by some 55% of all Canadians. Here in Ontario, support is much higher, at 84%. In addition, I would like to point out that a number of other transportation stakeholders, including the Canadian Automobile Association and the Canadian Safety Council, have also expressed their support for extending the red light cameras pilot project.

As I mentioned earlier, Ontario currently has the safest roads in Canada. We are proud of this accomplishment and we are determined to make our road safety record even better. Intersection safety represents an important part of our government's broader efforts to reduce aggressive driving throughout the province. Traffic statistics and common sense tell us that drivers who disobey red light signals pose a serious hazard to other road users and to themselves. Ultimately, red light running needs to be addressed through a combination of public awareness, vigilant enforcement and effective legislation, all of which are geared to changing driver behaviour. While the government continues to believe that traditional police enforcement measures represent a highly effective means of targeting drivers who run red lights, we want to give our municipal partners a chance to test and evaluate this additional tool for reducing red light running.

As a result, the government is proposing legislation that would extend the red light cameras pilot project for a further two years. That extension would give us more data to assess the effectiveness of red light cameras in enforcement. By drawing on that enhanced data, we can better decide on the extent to which this technology should be used in the future. The proposed legislation would also allow the end date of the pilot projects to be repealed before November 20, 2004, by means of an order in council. In effect, that would make the legislation permanent.

I would like to conclude my remarks today by again expressing my strong approval of this proposed legislation, and by strongly urging all members of the Legislature to join me in supporting this important initiative, which will help to make Ontario's roads even safer.

Mr Sergio: I join the debate on Bill 149, the so-called red light cameras, thanks to our colleague here, Mike Colle for Eglinton-Lawrence, who has been working very persistently on the idea. It's finally here, not for first but for second reading. My thanks to the minister for introducing the bill for second reading as well, after some three years in waiting. The fact that we are dealing with the second reading now is because the red light cameras that have been installed have proven to be an effective measure in control, being a deterrent to a lot of speeding traffic, but also those going through red lights. That was the intent. It is not as much the cost, because I believe if we can save not only one person from fatal injuries but any injury whatsoever, I think it's worthwhile.

Red light cameras do more than that. At a time when resources are very short, if I may say, they are practically replacing a number of our police force members for much more important issues. They do free up a lot of the police's time. In 2001 alone, some 9,000 speeders, infractions, drivers going through red lights, were caught. That shows us that it's still being done. Red light cameras doesn't mean that we'll be able to eliminate all the bad habits, those drivers who go through red lights. I don't think we'll be eliminating that completely, but at least it's a big deterrent. It is a message that we are sending to people who are speeding or going through red lights that indeed, sooner or later we are going to catch them. Sooner or later they will realize that the roads and intersections do not belong to them alone. They belong to other people, to other drivers and to pedestrians as well. I would hope that once they are caught, they will realize it doesn't pay to go through a red light. I hope they will soon realize it's better to slow down, take the extra two or three minutes, and then go on. I hope they would soon realize that it doesn't pay to cause pain and suffering.

In my own area, for example, I have a number of major intersections and I would love to have cameras at every intersection. I have one at Jane and Finch, which is a very busy intersection, and one with one of the most accidents as well. I would love to have red light cameras at the intersections of Weston Road and Wilson, Weston Road and Finch, Jane and Wilson, Steeles and Islington Avenue.

Often it's not that they go through the red light and cause no harm. The problem is that often these drivers with bad habits cause serious accidents to innocent people, let alone to passengers. They cause serious injuries to innocent bystanders. They could be people waiting at the intersection to cross or they could be in a bus shelter. The fact is that it's a very bad habit to approach an intersection—do you know what's even worse? They speed even more when they are about to approach an intersection. Instead of slowing down and saying, "Hey, you never know"—there could be other cars coming or people crossing or whatever—they tend to speed even more.

It is good that the minister has introduced the legislation for second reading to extend the red light cameras for a period of two or more years. He has not attached any time as to two or more; it can be very indefinite. I can tell you, from speaking to some of my constituents, they are saying, "Do anything that would curtail speeding, that would curtail drivers going through red lights, that would curtail traffic accidents, that would do anything to make our roads more safe."

I think this would go a long way to inject some peace of mind, not only in our drivers but in our pedestrians as well. So I am pleased that the minister has introduced this legislation for second reading, extending it for two or more years.

I would like to see as well not only the existing municipalities that now have the red light cameras as a pilot project and have requested to extend them—I think there is one municipality, but I have no idea, because I'm not privy to the information, why they're not willing to request the extension. But all the other municipalities have said, "It's working. It's good. It's having an effect. It's having an impact. We want to renew it." I would like to see allowing all other municipalities that request red light cameras to have them.

I think the cost can even be less than $90,000 per unit. The fact is that they pay for themselves. Those red light cameras, automatic machines or whatever they are, pay for themselves. They are there in silence. They are there as eyes in the sky, as my colleague Bartolucci mentioned. They are there watching those with bad habits.

What more pleasing thing can there be for a driver than to say, "I'm aware that the road does not belong to me alone, that it belongs to others as well." It makes them aware that there is something, someone, watching out there. I think that instead of curtailing it, we should expand this service.

As I was mentioning before, I have constituents of mine who say, "Do anything to make our roads safer." As a matter of fact, they are saying, "Bring back photo radar." I know that it would please some and displease some others, perhaps those coming into the city from the GTA. They are in a rush. They want to get downtown to their office, to their place of employment, as quickly as possible. Listen, we can't please everybody. The fact is that we should do everything possible to make our roads safer.

In my own community, police station 31, the only police station I have in my area, is understaffed. So it's not a question that we can post one or two traffic officers or whatever on a regular basis and say, "Watch and then go and catch them." It doesn't work that way. It is impossible. There are many other important things, crimes, that they have to attend to. Their time is very valuable.

I believe my time is coming to a close. I am supporting this legislation. Thanks to my colleague from Eglinton-Lawrence, who has been working very hard to bring it to the forefront. I appreciate that the minister has introduced it for second reading. I think we have to get on with it and hopefully expand the number of red light cameras throughout the city and throughout the various municipalities, because I believe that everyone must be responsible for our safer communities, our safer streets.

Having said that, my time has come to a close. I thank you for the time allowed to me to speak on Bill 149.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I want to take a couple of minutes in this debate to make three points that I think need to be made yet again.

The government is back again with another time allocation motion. I know that my good friend the House leader of the New Democratic Party will speak to that. I'm sure he's going to talk about how this government said it was going to be different, how this government said in opposition and when it ran in the election of 1995 that they were going to be different, that they were going to build a better democracy, that it was going to be Utopia when it came to the democracy they would build in this great province.

And here we are again, with another time allocation motion. The government decides it doesn't want to do things the way they should be done in this Legislature, which is to give proper time for debate, to give the opportunity for members of the public to come to committee to speak on bills like this one, so that the police chiefs who were here in numbers today would have been able to come before the committee to talk about what they would have liked to see in this bill when it comes to red light cameras, and about how they probably would have liked to see this expanded to photo radar or other initiatives when it comes to the use of technology, so that we wouldn't have to be coming back with yet another bill, as we did with this one, because we didn't get it right in the first place.

Government brought this bill in some years ago to give municipalities the ability to do this as a pilot project. Now we're back again. We're having to reaffirm that authority we gave to the municipalities by way of this bill. All I'm saying is that if the legislative process was such that we had proper debate in this Legislature, and the government didn't yet again use time allocation and allowed things to go to committee, we probably wouldn't have to be here with this bill. That's the first point.

The second point I want to make: where were you guys when photo radar was around? Boy, I find this a really amusing story. On photo radar, I remember Michael Harris, Chris Stockwell, Bob Runciman and a whole bunch of people who sat in the Tory party, the third party, when we were in government, and they just got up and railed against the technology. They said that to use cameras was an invasion of privacy. There are all kinds of quotes in Hansard that one could use to show how they didn't like the use of technology when it came to the surveillance of traffic, be it photo radar or red light cameras at the time—I remember that in the debate at the time, we had talked about red light cameras as one initiative, and I remember Mr Stockwell and others getting up in the House and railing against the use of technology.

I just find it passing strange that the government has yet again flip-flopped. They have changed their minds. They've decided that what was said in opposition was a different thing, and now that they are in government, they see it another way.

Mr John C. Cleary (Stormont-Dundas-Charlottenburgh): That was then, this is now.

Mr Bisson: That was then, this is now. As my good friend Mr Cleary has pointed out, they gave a quite different line when they were members of the opposition, but when they were the government it was a complete change of position.

So I say, better late than never. If you are going to get on to the bandwagon of technology, it would have been good to see you guys there prior to 1995. You have changed your mind, but I just want to point out that this is not in keeping with what you were saying when you were the third party back before 1995. I just have to point it out, because the government always likes to talk about how basically they always do what they say and say what they do. Well, that was a case where they didn't do so.

The last point I want to make is a point that my good friend the member from Beaches-East York has raised as our municipal affairs critic, and this has to be said for the debate. We gave a temporary authority to municipalities to deal with this issue. We said, "Temporarily, we as a provincial Legislature will allow you to deal with those traffic issues within your communities, when it comes to red lights, by the way of use of these technologies." I would just think that we have evolved in this province to the point that we trust municipalities enough to give them that authority in the first place so that they don't have to come back to the Legislature and change the legislation every time it comes to this kind of issue.

To the members across the way, if you had taken your time and done this right and allowed this bill to go to committee, as it should, we would be able to take a look at the issue of giving municipalities the authority they need to deal with these types of issues on their own. I believe that in the end they are better positioned to decide where a red light camera should or should not be installed in a community, because they are the ones who are closest to the people, they are the ones having to deal with this on a daily basis. It is certainly not the province of Ontario that sees what happens on the corner of one street and the other in some community in the province.

With that, I know that my good friend the House leader, Mr Kormos, has much to say, but yet again I just had to say it. Here we go again: say one thing when you are in opposition, but Tories say quite a different thing when they come to being government, both on this bill and on the issue of democracy. This is a sad day in democracy when we are back with yet another time allocation motion.

Mr McDonald: It gives me great pleasure to rise today in the House to offer my support of the Red Light Cameras Pilot Projects Extension Act, 2002. The bill was first introduced before our summer recess last June, and you would remember that the purpose of this legislation is to extend the red light camera projects for an additional two years, which would last until about November 2004.

Ontario has the safest roads in Canada and the second-safest in North America. The legislation before us today would build on Ontario's strong record of road safety. The proposed legislation would amend the provisions of the Red Light Cameras Pilot Projects Act of 1998, I believe, which was passed by the Legislature in December of that year. Under that legislation, the province authorized municipalities to install and operate red light cameras at intersections within their respective jurisdictions. The legislation provided for a pilot project of two years. However, it now appears that the municipalities have indicated that they would like to have more time to assess this technology's effectiveness.

It is interesting that our government is listening to the municipalities and is reintroducing this legislation to extend the pilot projects. I find it very interesting that the members on the other side of the House are agreeing to support this legislation but are dragging their feet. They are dragging this out and they want to go on and on and on about it.

I would just ask that we all work together to pass this legislation, which is very important. The municipalities are asking for us to extend the pilot project. I was the deputy mayor of the city of North Bay when I was there and I always found that if you asked and came with a reasonable request, the government of Ontario usually listened. Here, these municipalities are coming and asking us to extend this pilot project, and I firmly agree that we should. I think we should support these municipalities.

Under the draft legislation that we are currently considering, the government is proposing a two-year extension of the red light cameras pilot projects. These pilots have been underway in six municipalities over the past two years. They're designed to test the effectiveness of red light cameras at major intersections as a deterrent to drivers who run red lights.

Red light running scares and angers motorists, yet many of these same drivers admit to putting themselves and others at risk. A recent survey shows that 96% of drivers—Mr Kormos, 96% of drivers—are afraid of being hit by a red light runner, but nearly one in five admit to running a red light in the last 10 intersections—not 10 days, 10 intersections.

Evidence elsewhere indicates that red light cameras have led to significant decreases in intersection violations and crashes. In fact, red light cameras have become a routine in many countries. Red light camera systems are currently operating in more than 45 countries, including Australia, Germany, Hong Kong, Singapore, South Africa and the United Kingdom. That's just to name a few examples.

In the United States, 12 states have legislation permitting the use of red light cameras. New York City, for instance, has the largest red light camera program in the United States. There, the red light violations at photo-enforced locations have been reduced by 60%.

In Canada, red light cameras have been installed in British Columbia, Alberta and Manitoba as well as here in Ontario. Here, six municipalities are participating in the pilot projects. They are the cities of Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa and the regional municipalities of Peel, Halton and Waterloo. These municipalities implemented two-year projects in November 2000. Preliminary results show that red light running violations are down by 40%. The final evaluation of these pilot projects is expected in 2003.

I would now like to briefly describe how red light cameras work. Red light camera systems are connected to traffic lights, and the sensors are buried in the pavement at the crosswalk or stop line. The cameras are set to detect red light runners and not motorists that enter when the light is amber.

The system continuously monitors the traffic signal and triggers the camera to photograph the rear plates of vehicles entering the intersection after—after—the light turns red. A second photograph is taken to show the offending vehicle in the intersection.

Both photos are of the rear of the vehicle. The camera records the date, time and speed of the vehicle. A clear image of the vehicle is produced under a wide range of light and weather conditions. Plate numbers are matched with plate registrant data provided by the Ministry of Transportation.

I think that's very clear. I think that's great technology. It's a great way to protect the motorists and pedestrians of the province of Ontario.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): It sounds like photo radar to me.

Mr McDonald: I'm sure you agree, member from Niagara Centre, that this is a great pilot project. I'm urging you—and I think you support this legislation, I really do. You want to stand up and support it, and I think you have stood up and said you're going to support this. I thank you for that.

If a provincial offences officer believes that red light running has occurred, a ticket is issued.

All told, the municipalities piloting the project are rotating 18 cameras through a total of 70 intersections. Increased police enforcement took place at an additional 30 intersections in these same six jurisdictions. The participating municipalities charged more than 25,500 vehicle owners from November 20, 2000, to September 30, 2002, for red light running.

Preliminary data shows a 40% reduction in red light violations at these test sites. In other words, these pilot projects are working. They're reducing the number of individuals who are running through red lights. I believe that we should extend this pilot project. In fact, the municipalities are even asking us to and I believe that we should listen to them.

While these results are only preliminary, they suggest that red light cameras may have significant road safety potential. I think the stats that I've just conversed with you about show it's working fine. They also suggest that it is well worth our while to extend the pilot projects for a further 24 months.

I believe it is important that, together with the province, these municipalities have shown tremendous leadership in exploring approaches to enforcing our traffic laws. On behalf of the government, I'd like to commend them on their efforts as outstanding road safety partners.

We all know that many efforts and approaches are needed to improve safety on our roads. That is why, in addition to the red light camera projects, the government has asked the participating municipalities to increase their efforts at traditional enforcement. As a result, the police services in each municipality undertook special enforcement blitzes to discourage drivers from running red lights. The campaigns were required to last a minimum of 20 hours a year at selected high-risk intersections for each year the pilot projects were carried out. The goal here was to give us data as a basis for comparing the effectiveness of red light cameras and traditional enforcement methods, and a combination of the two.

By giving the municipalities another two years to study the effectiveness of red light cameras, this proposed legislation could have a significant impact on the future of road safety in Ontario. Certainly, after four years, we'll be in a much better position to assess the results of the projects and, with those results, the potential benefits of red light cameras.

Ontario can be proud of its outstanding record in road safety. We have an average of 1.05 road fatalities a year for every 10,000 licensed drivers. Ontario has the lowest fatality rate in Canada and the second-lowest in North America. That's why I'm urging all of us here in the Legislature to support this legislation so that we will continue to add safety to pedestrians and motorists on our highways and roads here in Ontario.

At the same time, we must all recognize there is room for improvement. It is estimated that collisions in Ontario cost approximately $9 billion a year. The cost of red light running has been estimated at close to $300 million, including hospital bills and property damage as well as the pain and suffering of the collision victims.

Our government will continue to place a high priority on maintaining the province's excellent record in road safety while continuing to work for safer roads in the future. Red light cameras may have an important role to play in the future of road safety. Extending the red light pilot projects that have been underway for the past two years will help us determine what that role should be.

The bill would respond to the municipalities' requests by letting the pilot projects continue until November 20, 2004. If evaluation shows red light cameras are an effective tool, this legislation contains a provision for repealing the deadline for completing the pilot projects before November 20, 2004.

This speaks to the concerns that some of the members opposite had about extending the red light project. We want to study the effectiveness of this for another two years in co-operation with the municipalities, which have requested an extension. They've requested it. They've asked the province of Ontario for the extension of the two years, and I believe that every member in this House would want to support their request and support this legislation.

There would be a provision for repealing the deadline for completing the pilot projects before November 20, 2004, through an order in council. In effect, that would make the legislation permanent.

The proposed legislation is designed to improve the safety of our roads. Ultimately it could and will help save lives. So I ask all my colleagues here in the Legislature to join with me today in supporting this important initiative, in partnering with the municipalities that want to continue with this important pilot project to provide that safety factor for our pedestrians and motorists in the province.

Mr John Gerretsen (Kingston and the Islands): Why don't you just make it permanent?

Mr McDonald: I understand the member from Kingston would stand up and say that he's going to support this as well, and I appreciate his support. You will get an opportunity to speak. I'm happy to turn it over to you at any time so you can stand up and say that you will support this legislation, you'll support the people of Ontario, the pedestrians and the motorists and the municipalities that are requesting this extension, that you will support that. And I believe that you will. I believe you'll do the right thing and we'll all stand up here and support this legislation.

Mr Speaker, I've taken enough time tonight and I would like to thank you for the opportunity to speak on this bill.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): It's remarkable how things change in this House. I can remember that the members across the way, when we first started to talk about the need for red light cameras, said they didn't work. They said that they were an invasion of privacy. They said to let the policemen do it; they don't need red light cameras.

Mr Kormos: Orwellian.

Mr Colle: Yes, Orwellian. Day after day they blocked every attempt to try to introduce my private—

Interjection.

Mr Colle: Yes. They just refused to listen. Now they're basically quoting back some of the things that I put into the record. I guess somehow there's been a change over there. They realize the people of Ontario are very serious about safety on the roads. They didn't believe this government, which for three years blocked this legislation. Ironically enough, this government is now still saying we need another pilot project.

Very mature municipalities like the city of Toronto said, "We should have the right to employ a safety device if it works." Why should they have to come back here begging to Queen's Park to get a simple camera system that saves lives? This government itself says that they work. They've reduced red light running by 40%. They are in 40 countries. What other proof do you need if the municipality and the police force want them? This is the paternalistic attitude of this government that continually downloads to municipalities and then, when municipalities want to do something, says, "You can't." As you know, even if the municipality wants to put a certain notice on a tax bill they can't do it unless the Minister of Finance says it's OK. This is how paternalistic and ludicrous it is.

When it comes to safety, they're putting up bureaucratic roadblocks. I think any municipality that wants to have red light cameras or other safety initiatives like traffic calming should be able to do it without begging Queen's Park and interfering with good safety regimens that they have in municipalities. Because Queen's Park doesn't really understand how cities work. They're more interested in power and control. They're not on the streets with the traffic officers; they're not there with the local transportation officials who know best about how to make streets safe. That's why we're back here again.

This is an automatic piece of legislation but somehow this government has to put the municipalities through another two years of pilot projects. Nowhere else in the world where you have this kind of technology do they have these types of bureaucratic roadblocks like they do here at Queen's Park, where they want to control the stoplights, school boards and swimming pools, they want to control the whole world. But Queen's Park does not know best, and that's certainly been proven in the way they made such a mess of the hydro fiasco—if you want to see the proof in the pudding.

One of the interesting things that the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police have brought forward is that they are great supporters of red light camera legislation; they have been from day one. But they do mention that one of the things they want to see us help them with is the whole issue of traffic safety in Ontario. They're very concerned that the serious problems with traffic are not given enough attention. Look at some of the facts they put forward: an estimated 85% of motor vehicle collisions are caused by driver error; impaired driving remains the leading criminal cause of death; in 2001 there were 2,900 traffic fatalities.

The RIDE program, as well as regular patrol enforcement, has deterred many potential drinking drivers. Maybe we need RIDE going all year round; why just at holiday time? Sixty per cent of unbelted fatally injured occupants in rollover crashes were ejected from their vehicles. We have to do more education about keeping that seat belt on. Almost 600 vulnerable road users, that is, pedestrians, cyclists and motorists, were killed in 2001 in traffic-related crashes. These are some of the things the Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police is very concerned about and wants this government to pay more attention to. Thirty per cent of all fatally injured pedestrians were seniors, who are at risk when they cross an intersection, especially when people don't obey a simple red light.

The Ontario Association of Chiefs of Police is asking for help. What they're saying is that they've got front-line officers who because of downloading now spend their time as court officials. Remember in the old days when they used to have court Commissioners that used to take care of the routine transportation of criminals? Now you've got front-line officers driving prisoners all across the province when that could be done through the province. The Attorney General's office should be doing that, not front-line officers. They could be doing better things in terms of tracking down criminals. They don't want to be spending time being taxi drivers for criminals.

The front-line officers also say that they're spending too much time on paperwork. This pilot project is more paperwork for front-line officers. That's why they're saying that the government has really been dragging their feet on the integrated justice project. The front-line officers have got all their homework done, they're all integrated from the front-line officers' perspective, but this government has basically dropped the ball on the promised private sector partnership they're supposed to put in place—it's not there any more. The integrated justice project is basically nowhere right now because this government has not put in the resources to allow the police to, in essence, get rid of the paperwork that is now on their desk, prohibiting them from doing their regular routine work, which is catching criminals and preventing the horrific homicides, for instance, that occur in Toronto.

The police chiefs of Ontario say they need help in getting away from their desks, getting away from the bureaucracy and getting out there to do their work of preventing accidents and crime. But this government, with its downloading attitude, has not given them the resources, basically, on their end of the bargain to enable them to do what they do best, and that is make our roads and streets safer. This government is not really living up to its commitment, especially in those two areas, the integrated justice system project, which they said they were going to do, and they have not fulfilled their commitment there.

I would also say the critical thing here is that many things are done best by local municipalities. From day one, this government has intervened with downloading. In other words they've said, "You've got to take care now of social housing, you now have to take up public transit, you have to take care of the welfare system, you've got to take care of social services—on the back of property taxpayers." Subsequently, the municipalities are scrambling to do what they do best, and that is, make our roads safer, pick up the garbage and take care of our children's recreation programs. They can't do it because of the avalanche of downloading of all these services, and one of them is the downloading of the responsibility of our courts. The policing of our courts should be done, certainly, in acute situations when you have a violent criminal who maybe should be taken to wherever he or she has been assigned as a result of the verdict. But there's too much time spent by good officers doing paperwork because of this government letting front-line officers down. So let's get rid of the paperwork.

This legislation is a no-brainer. We said it should have been in the first piece of legislation, when they refused to have public meetings. The clause should have been in there to trigger a further pilot project if you wanted it. Instead, they didn't listen; they didn't have public meetings. Now we're back here again fixing up the legislation because they didn't listen a couple of years ago when this legislation was introduced.

What we're saying here is, get out of the business of sticking your nose into things you know nothing about. Let the local police, the local mayors and the local ratepayers do what they do best, and that is, take care of issues that affect people in their neighbourhoods, their streets, their parks and playgrounds, and spend less time interfering and less time downloading. Let them do their work. Get off their backs and give them the tools to service and protect people.

Instead, all you're doing is interfering, downloading and forgetting that they are taxpayers. They are citizens who are mature adults. They have elected officials and very vibrant ratepayer groups. Let them do the work. Why do you keep interfering in what the police know best? From day one the police were in favour of this and you blocked the police from implementing these red-light cameras.

Your government, your Mike Harris said it was crazy. Are you going to stand up and say Mike Harris was wrong because he blocked the red light cameras? Stand up in your place and say Mike Harris was wrong in blocking red light camera legislation. I dare the member for Nipissing to stand up and say that Mike Harris should have passed my private member's bill four years ago instead of blocking it. Stand up and say that.

Mr Kormos: Yes, I am amazed. I listened to the comments of the member for Nipissing, who has such glowing support for the use of photo technology in apprehending violators of the Highway Traffic Act. I took it to its next logical stage and I could all but hear the member for Nipissing endorsing photo radar, because every one of the arguments that he made on behalf of photo red light is similarly applicable to photo radar.

Let's put into context this particular piece of legislation because this indeed is, among other things, inter alia, yet a tool in the tool box. In no small part, this flows from the bifurcation of the provincial offences system and the downloading of a portion of the provincial offences system to municipalities who opt in. I challenge the member for Nipissing, in the context of that, to explain why this isn't as much an opportunity to generate cash flow for that municipality.

I have no doubt about the effectiveness and I can't quarrel with these statistics that the member reads into the record. I'm not aware of any contrary statistics and, indeed, the numbers that have been offered to us are phenomenal. I was in Kingston once when I got T-boned in an intersection by a person who went through a red light. At the end of the day, the fact that there wasn't red light radar there may not have deterred that person. But for the fact that had that person in that community known that community was using red light photo apprehension—I mean, that obviously cleans up a whole lot of people's acts.

But one of the problems is—and let's be very candid and honest about this, because some of the same traditional arguments against the utilization of technology merely to impose a fine still prevail, and that is that one has to be very, very careful that this sort of technology is but a supplement to strong police presence as compared to a surrogate for it. I have no doubt about the statistics that were read during the course of this afternoon's time allocation motion debate that red light runners are a serious problem. Other Highway Traffic Act violators are a serious problem. Speeders are a serious problem. Drunk drivers are a serious problem. The problem is that when you're relying solely upon the photo technology, the camera doesn't record that the person who went through that red light may well have been drunk to boot, which is what caused him or her to run the red light in the first place.

I find it interesting that this government has done a 180-degree turnaround in terms of their support for this technology. In terms of the bill, I agree: if the technology, as has been indicated, has been effective in those municipalities where it's been used, well, for Pete's sake, don't just extend the time frame for those prototypical municipalities where the matter is being experimented with. Give every municipality here in Ontario the opportunity, if it so chooses, to use this photo technology to apprehend people who go through red lights. Because I have no doubt—common sense tells you—that once word spreads in town that that municipality uses this kind of technology, people are going to be far more careful about running red lights. I have no doubt about and no quarrel with the fact that people who run red lights constitute a significant danger to other people using the roadway, both people in vehicles as well as pedestrians, no two ways about it.

But the issue isn't the legislation today. The issue is the time allocation motion, because the legislation requires more than just cursory examination. You've already heard some of the critique: why is yet another mere extension, when the government would say it's been oh so successful? Why is it restricted to only those municipalities that have been the prototypes for the utilization of this technology? If it indeed has been oh so successful, why aren't other municipalities given the opportunity to utilize the technology as well? But today is the time allocation motion.

During the course of this debate, what do I get served on me but another notice of yet another motion allocating the time on Bill 148. Yikes. Once again, this time allocation will preclude, prohibit, prevent, not just restrict but eliminate any third reading debate. These guys over here are trying to rewrite the standing orders through the back door when they haven't got the courage, the guts or the gonads to do it through the front door eliminating third reading debate. Bill after bill after bill after bill has had third reading debate denied it.

I understand that this government may have very little regard for parliamentary traditions and for the good service that those traditions and rules have provided democracies over the course of—we're not just talking years; we're talking decades, generations, centuries. I find it incredibly frustrating that this government, in its time allocation motions, hasn't just curtailed any prolonging of second reading debate, but indeed, during the course of passing a time allocation motion, eliminates any prospect of third reading debate. There's something incredibly frightening about that, there's something incredibly insidious about that, there's something incredibly—I don't know—unparliamentary about that, I suppose.

It causes one to wonder why the government would be so fearful of third reading debate. It causes one to wonder why the government is so fearful of public hearings, committee hearings. It causes one to wonder why this government is so fearful of even second reading debate that extends beyond three mere afternoons. One can only arrive at some irresistible conclusions, I suppose, and that is that government members are disinclined, disinterested and ill equipped to stand up in their place here in this Legislature during the course of debate and explain why they're supporting or—far be it from me—not supporting a piece of government legislation.

One would think that individual members of the government backbenches would have a serious interest in resisting time allocation motions, because not only does it shut down the opposition, it shuts out backbench members of this government. I would expect backbenchers in this government to stand up and express their anger and their concern with their Premier, with their House leader, with their whip, with all the other capos in this band here across the way.

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Capos, capo, c-a-p-o, and the plural has "s", of course.

One would think there would be a rebellion brewing, Spartacus-like, among the oppressed backbenchers of this government caucus. Why, we heard—it was so inspiring—one of the government backbenchers indeed rise up and throw off his shackles and speak out clearly and firmly against this government's policy of deregulation and privatization of hydroelectricity and electricity in general in this province. What a refreshing thing to hear one of the government members soundly criticize this government's electricity policy, the privatization and deregulation of electricity.

I saw that member being scrummed outside after question period and he was relishing the opportunity with all of the TV cameras and the print reporters and the radio reporters. That government member was relishing the opportunity to condemn soundly this government's policy of deregulation and privatization of electricity, hydroelectricity amongst it, here in the province of Ontario.

That government member, that Conservative caucus member, with pride spoke out on behalf of his constituents, saying that this government's policy on hydro deregulation and privatization is wrong-headed, that it's resulting in higher and higher electricity prices and something has got to be done about it. That government caucus member showed boldness and accountability and responsibility to his own constituents and was bravely and boldly speaking out against yet more wrong-headed, ill-designed, ill-conceived, poorly planned and indeed dangerous government policy.

Nobody had a chance to ask that member and he won't have a chance to join the debate about time allocation motions, and for the life of me—thank you very much, Kalaneet. Kalaneet is the page from down in Fonthill-Pelham way, for Niagara Centre. Her dad was in the members' gallery earlier today. I had lunch with her yesterday, and she is—that's OK, Kalaneet—one of the most delightful young people: incredibly bright, incredibly mature, incredibly responsible and well travelled. She's but a fraction of a fraction of my age, and her passport has got far more visa stamps in it than mine has ever imagined acquiring. She's at least bilingual and on the verge of being trilingual. I was just so pleased and proud to have Kalaneet join the other pages here at Queen's Park.

I digress for a minute. She just brought me some material from the library. She was doing some research for me on an earlier bill, so I appreciate that very much. I want to tell Kalaneet how proud I am that she's been a page representing Niagara Centre here. I'm looking forward to reading about her in the years to come as she excels at the things that she plans to do. She told me—I hope this doesn't embarrass her, but she has a passion about getting into pediatric medicine. I have no doubt that she will excel at that, that she will be a leader in her discipline, in her field, and that during the course of acquiring those skills she's going to impress a whole lot of other folks along the way.

I should mention to you that New Democrats are voting against this time allocation motion. We are opposed to it. The time allocation motion is grossly premature. There have been but three brief afternoons of debate on this matter. During the course of that debate, you've heard a number of issues that can be legitimately raised around this bill.

One is the question as to why the bill is but another extension when the government says that the experiment has been oh so successful, why the bill continues to restrict the utilization of this technology to but those prototype municipalities that first were permitted to use them, as well as the clear observation that this government endorses photo radar when it so wholeheartedly campaigned against photo radar in its 1995 election bid and appears to have done a complete reversal, a complete flip-flop on the issue, and now appears to be contradicting everything that it claimed was wrong, evil—indeed—and I quote from the former leader, the absent leader.

One columnist referred to the exercise like the child's game of "Where's Waldo," looking for Waldo. Instead, over the course of the last weekend it was a matter of "Where's Mike," looking for Mike—can you spot him in this big picture of all these little heads? But former leader of the Conservative Party Michael D. Harris, referring to this same photo technology as totalitarian, Orwellian and mere cash grab—my goodness. Full circle. Yet indeed not even anywhere near far enough.

This legislation warrants committee hearings. I suspect there'd be a whole lot of municipalities that want the same opportunity that municipalities like Toronto and Ottawa have had over the course of the last few years and will have over the next few years. I suppose it's to be said that nothing surprises me any more at Queen's Park. I repeat once again: New Democrats will not be supporting this time allocation motion or any of the other government's time allocation motions in any event.

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): I am pleased to speak to this bill that addresses a weakness in the original bill, which was to be too specific on deadlines for research and was to find out what would be the effect of the red light cameras at certain intersections in cities and towns that would choose to participate in a pilot project.

We're spending all of this time looking at extending a bill that had a sunset clause for another two years. It does afford us, I suppose, an opportunity to say what we have learned heretofore.

The first thing I want to do is acknowledge my good friend Mr Colle from Eglinton-Lawrence, who in 1997-98 was very, very active in promoting the use of these cameras and highlighting the dangers throughout various parts of Ontario. I recall one day when Mr Colle came to Ottawa—he lives in Toronto—and we spent the better part of a morning at the corner of Rideau and King Edward, which is a very, very busy intersection in Ottawa. There had been a number of fatalities and some very tragic ones indeed. We spoke to people, we gave them brochures and we gave them some insight on research that showed the effectiveness of these cameras at stoplights in other jurisdictions, and that we should at least test the particular cameras in our jurisdictions, which of course would end up paying for themselves over time because of the violations that would occur. The ensuing fines would help pay for the technology.

The government decided that it would get into the business of at least doing the tests after many questions and being unable to refute some of the research as to why we should move ahead with this. So they put forward a particular bill.

The Canada Safety Council talks about signage, for example, that should forewarn people and drivers before they come to a traffic light. Frankly, I have some misgivings about that. They argue that this is a deterrent. How many warnings do you need? You know the traffic violations. Anybody who drives has to take a driver's test and they know that you should not go through a red light. That's pretty fundamental. To warn somebody, in my opinion, is unnecessary. The council feels this is a way for municipalities to make a tax grab. If there are people who are running red lights, then good luck to the municipality that has been able to recapture some of the funds.

I would like to refer to one of our planning experts in Ottawa. His name is Barry Weller. He's a geographer at the University of Ottawa and he's studied traffic patterns at length. He has some very good points to make.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): A geophysist.

Mr Patten: He's a geographer, and he has some good points to make about traffic in Ottawa. He said, "There is no question that there are plenty of bad drivers. Ottawa police and local politicians get a steady stream of complaints from citizens, as do the newspapers from their readers." He outlines that our deputy police chief Larry Hill of the Ottawa Police Service says that traffic violations are indeed up—this is as recently as last August—probably because of increased enforcement. There are always poor drivers out there or people who are prepared to risk their own lives and certainly others.

Obviously this is, according to Mr Weller, a very obstinate problem or it would have gone away a long time ago. Ottawa is one of the cities that participated in this project. There are other ways that cameras could be used in Ottawa, says Mr Weller. He talks about the high-occupancy vehicle lane on bridges, pedestrians, cyclists and in-line skaters. Of course, Mr Weller is way ahead of most of us. I think he has a keen interest in this subject, obviously, and is prepared to look at any possible way of being able to catch people in traffic violations.

I'm the critic for science and technology; however, I also, as a human being and as a member, have some concerns about the growing use of cameras as a generalization. I can recall a couple of years ago when I walked into my bank and all of a sudden I saw this little glass window. I wondered what that was and I said, "You know, it looks like there's a camera there."

Hon Mr Stockwell: There probably was.

Mr Patten: Indeed, there was. It was when I was using the ATM machine. I phoned the bank manager and asked, "What is this?" He told me, "This is for your protection—they're going to take my picture for my protection—"because this will catch thieves who may be trying to rob some of these machines." I said, "Fair enough, but it might have been nice or at least courteous to notify your members." As a matter of fact, it wasn't the bank manager, it was the assistant bank manager. The woman said, "It's not our decision, it's head office." I said, "Fine, I'll phone John Cleghorn myself."

Hon Mr Stockwell: Now we know where you bank.

Mr Patten: Yes, now you know what the bank is. I phoned him but he wasn't really aware of all of this, so he put me on to a vice-president. I spoke to a vice-president and finally they put up a notification saying that these are cameras in these particular machines that are there to protect depositors, blah, blah, blah, which was great.

I think it was the member for Scarborough-Agincourt who pointed out that on the average someone who lives in Toronto gets filmed eight times a day. You get filmed at the bank, you get filmed going through, perhaps, a red light—although the cameras aren't designed for that; it's only the licence plates—and you get filmed maybe walking down the street. As members, we get filmed in the hallways. So I say to members, be very careful. Make sure you straighten yourself up as you walk out of the washroom—

Interjection.

Mr Patten: Exactly, so that you don't embarrass yourselves and you don't see a lot of OPP officers standing around laughing at members who may be exercising a wee bit of indiscretion.

I just wanted to say that, because there's a human rights issue that a lot of people point out and that I believe has some validity. But I am supportive and our party is supportive. If we had a motion from the House leader on this legislation, I think all parties would agree and we could get on to more substantive issues that I'm sure he would want to have. At this time I'd like to share my time with one of my colleagues.

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): As a civil engineer, I am very interested in traffic management, so I am pleased to speak to this bill. I think it is sometimes very frustrating to people when one bad driver can create a situation that causes literally hundreds or thousands to be in an accident or to be backed up and to create problems.

Just in the last three and a half years that I've been driving to Toronto on a regular basis, I think the roads are actually much safer in this area. I say that because at five or 10 kilometres an hour, driving through downtown Toronto or even driving on the Don Valley or the 401, it's very difficult to have a serious accident. So if there is a good side to gridlock, it's that the accidents are much less severe and there are far fewer of them. On the other hand, gridlock costs everybody time and money.

As I drive into Toronto and see the backups and the problems, there is a frustration that exists with drivers as people try to get from home to work or vice versa, to make deliveries or just make a living. Although I think I understand why they run red lights, it is still inexcusable. I also appreciate that from the viewpoint of using our police resources, it is simply not possible for someone to sit at each of these corners. The idea of a camera that will photograph someone going through and then sending them a bill has a great deal of merit.

Indeed, were I doing it, I would put the camera boxes—the containers that go outside the cameras—at almost every intersection. In my experience as a school board chair, we put cameras on school buses. It solved a lot of arguments afterward as to whether John or Mary had misbehaved, when the parents were invited in to see the video. We put the cases on almost all the buses and we simply moved the cameras from case to case so that no one actually ever knew whether it was on. I'd suggest that's an easy way to increase effectiveness.

I believe, though, that there is a need to negotiate with other jurisdictions, whether it be Toronto, Ottawa or Windsor, whatever city chooses to use these over the long run. We have people from outside the province coming into Ontario. They may choose to violate a red light and they need to be subject to the same standards that Ontario citizens are. We need to negotiate with other provinces and adjoining US states to ensure that if someone is photographed, that state or province makes a commitment that it is a legal fine that could be imposed on them.

We have that on some things now, I believe, such as the 407, if someone from out of province is on the 407 and their licence plate is photographed. It's one thing to make it legal for the bill to be sent to them. We also need agreement from the other jurisdictions that they will enforce the collection of the fine, so that if someone goes through a red light here in Toronto, the other state or province will ensure the money is in fact collected.

Having said that, there's great merit to the bill. I struggle as always with the concept of time allocation. Once again, as with virtually every bill before this House, the attempt is to stifle conversation on it and to force it through, rather than doing it co-operatively and saying, "Let's look at amendments." There has never been a government bill from any party that's been perfect. Listen to some advice. I'm a civil engineer.

Interjection.

Mr Parsons: I would ask the Minister of the Environment to at least be civil. If you can be half the person I am, you'll be a better person for that. I'm out of time.

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): The member opposite just finished saying that he was an engineer. Did he know the member for Lanark-Carleton was a lawyer and an engineer? I think most members do know that and I'd like that to be read into the record.

I just want to quickly point out that in August, 1998, because red light running was a problem in this province and elsewhere, we brought in stiffer penalties under the Highway Traffic Act for drivers who run red and amber lights. We more than doubled the fine for running a red light, from a minimum of $60 to a minimum of $150. Red light running is dangerous and irresponsible and is also a significant cause of injuries and deaths on Ontario roads.

What else did we decide to do about this? Last June the Minister of Transportation introduced this bill. This is a one-page bill. The participating municipalities and our government would like to see this bill passed as soon as possible, and I'm going to get to the charges of the members opposite about the time allocation motion, which is really what we're talking about tonight, a time allocation motion for the red light camera project.

This legislation is amending the provisions of the Red Light Cameras Pilot Projects Act, 1998, and that statute was approved by this Legislature in December, 1998. Its provisions authorize municipalities to install and operate cameras at intersections as a tool to help reduce red light running. This was a bill that was passed to introduce red light cameras as a pilot. The act provided municipalities with the authority to conduct red light cameras pilot projects for a two-year period. The participating municipalities are conducting a study to assess the effectiveness of red light cameras at high-risk intersections as a deterrent to drivers who run red lights. Under the proposed bill, the pilot projects would be extended for another two years until November 2004.

So why are we here today? We brought in the bill to let municipalities pilot this project. The six municipalities currently participating in the pilot projects asked the province to enable them to test red light cameras further, for an extended period of time. The six participating municipalities are the cities of Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa and the regional municipalities of Peel, Halton and Waterloo. In addition to piloting the red light cameras, the six municipalities have also conducted a number of enforcement blitzes on local roads in co-operation with local police. The goal of this dual approach is to help determine the combined effectiveness of red light cameras and increase traditional enforcement in deterring red light running.

The initial results of the red light camera projects are promising, but the municipalities feel they need a longer period to evaluate this technology. Hence, they've asked us to extend the pilot for another two years. Five of the six municipalities only have asked the government for this two-year extension of pilot projects. So the government is seeking the Legislature's approval to let the red light camera projects run for another two years.

The members opposite—the member for Welland-Thorold and the member for Prince Edward-Hastings—get up and talk in such phony terms, with such phony outrage about a time allocation motion on this bill. We're outraged on this side of the House that the members opposite support the bill—it's a one-page bill—and they won't let it go through. So they're keeping us here speaking about this bill over and over and over again, when every member of the Legislature is in favour of the bill.

Why do they do that? I want everyone at home to know it's just a little parliamentary trick. Instead of letting the government go on and talk about other bills which are perhaps more pressing and more important to the issues of the day in the province, the members hold us up and keep us debating this one-page bill that they agree with. So our House leader, the good Minister of the Environment, the member for Etobicoke Centre, who is at his wits' end in trying to negotiate with the members opposite to let this bill go through, which they agree with, finally said, "I've got to introduce a time allocation motion. Otherwise, we'll never stop debating this bill, and we've got other things we want to move on with." So he introduced this time allocation motion that we came here to speak to.

The members opposite get up with great theatrics about this government ramming things through. Well, it's phony. It's completely and totally phony. And then do you know what they're going to do at the end of the session? They're going to add up all the time allocation motions and all the bills that the government time-allocated, as if it's some big, sinister plot by the government to shut down democratic debate.

It's all just a little game of inside politics and inside baseball. The only people who are hurt by it, quite frankly, are the people of the province of Ontario. Why? Because the legislators that they elect to come in here to debate bills for the province that will improve their lives—everything else is put on hold while they play their little inside baseball game of not allowing the government to move forward with this one-page bill that they agree with.

So it's absurd. Every time the people at home hear the members opposite get up and frown and do the anti-democratic rant about time allocation motions, know and understand that the members opposite refuse to let these bills go through, and that's why our good House leader, who bends over backwards for the members opposite, has to introduce these time allocation motions.

Thank you, Speaker. I'll leave some time for my colleagues.

Hon Mr Stockwell: If any member on the government side wants to speak, I'll be happy to give that.

As the government House leader, it is tiresome to hear these arguments placed by the opposition. And it's not debate. I don't mind having debate on things we honestly disagree with, and that's what this place was meant to be. I say to my friend Mr Marchese, this is what we were supposed to be sent here to do. But right now we have three bills before this House—three—that we're all voting in favour of, and we're going to take 12 sessional days because the members opposite won't let the bill go through so we can actually debate something that you guys may think is important.

I say to the member for—I don't know; it was Fort York.

Mr Marchese: Trinity-Spadina.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Trinity-Spadina. OK. The House leader for your party insists on having three days' debate. And you know, it's so sad; it's so terribly sad. He insists on all these days of debate, and he can't even find anyone in his own caucus to debate the bill. So he makes everyone hang around at night because he won't get anyone in here, and he tells me—

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm not letting you off the hook; I'm coming to the Liberals in a second. But then I end up with a situation—I appeal to the NDP caucus. You tell us this is becoming irrelevant. Well, yes, it is becoming irrelevant in here, because we're taking 12 days—for instance, debating this bill. This bill for the testing of red light cameras was passed in 1999. Everybody voted in favour of it. Same thing.

The municipalities asked us, "We need to extend this two more years. Can you please pass something through the Legislature?" We said, "OK. If you want us to do that, we will." We bring it to the House, and what do we get? The same tired old arguments of shutting down debate on a bill that's going to extend red light cameras for two years that the local municipalities asked us to pass. It's awful. What an absolutely disgraceful use of public time in this place. Disgraceful. It is a disgraceful use of public taxpayers' time to stand in this place and argue this bill for four days in the Legislature.

I did say to the members opposite, "There are some important bills on the order paper. You want six days or seven days to talk about those rather than time allocation? Let's do that." What a far better approach, to take time on bills that we have a fundamental disagreement about. But no. What the members opposite want to do is say, "Oh, the government shut down debate. There's another time allocation motion they are moving on another bill that we're voting in favour of."

This is idiotic, just patently idiotic, that we have to sit here for four sessional days to talk about a bill that we're all voting in favour of and that the municipalities asked us to pass, and all you guys agree with the municipalities asking us to pass this bill. We've got bills that everyone wants to talk about, but we end up with the House leader from the third party insisting that nothing goes through this House unless you time-allocate it, regardless of how insignificant it is.

You want to hear another one we're doing? Bill 148, the Emergency Readiness Act, in case an emergency happens. We all agree with this bill; we're all voting in favour of it. "But we'll hold it up because you haven't time-allocated that, even though we're also voting in favour of emergency preparedness." So if something goes wrong and we're not prepared, the public can know full well that it's not passed because the members opposite, particularly the third party House leader, didn't want it to go by until we had to time-allocate it, even though they're voting in favour of it.

Here's a beauty. Do you know what else we can't get through, directly responsible to the member from Welland-Thorold? When you see a cop pulling someone over on the highway ahead of you, you should slow down and pull to the left. But, holy smokes, we should debate that, even though we're voting in favour of it, four days. What do you think we're debating: "Speed up and pull to the right"? "Stop in the middle of the highway and let someone hit you from behind"? "Slow down and pull to the left." But no, we need to have three days of debate on that and a time allocation because the member from Welland-Thorold is dysfunctional.

Interjection: Like the Osbournes.

Hon Mr Stockwell: He can't get along with the Libs or the Conservatives or his own caucus. He could have his own show like the Osbournes; honest to God, he could. He's dysfunctional. His own caucus doesn't even like being here. Then when he makes us all stay here at night to debate a bill, he doesn't have anyone to speak to it because his own caucus thinks he's nuts. This is where we're left, and that's the difficulty. I'm constantly having to deal with this.

Now we've got the Safe Drinking Water Act, which I think everyone would like to talk to. We could have six, seven or eight days' debate. But we can't, because instead of passing these things quickly and not using four days—we could have seven or eight days on the Safe Drinking Water Act or another bill that you may not like. I understand. We should have debate on that. We can't because we've used up all this silly time. That's what it is, silly time, for the member from Welland-Thorold to be silly.

Then I get in here and the civil engineer—where is he from? Ernie Parsons, the member for Prince Edward-Hastings—stands here and starts railing on about time allocation motions. "Oh, you're shutting down debate. The government House leader is not letting us, and here's another time allocation on red light cameras." Then when they come in with, "If you see a cop giving a guy a ticket on the 400, you should slow down and move to the left," "Oh, you're time-allocating us. We're all voting in favour of this bill, but what an awful person you are.

You're shutting down the democratic process." What do you want to do, Ernie? What do you want to do, pull to the right and hit the cop? This is where we are. This is how crazy this place has become.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): Red light cameras—just pulling over to the side.

Hon Mr Stockwell: No. The red light camera bill, and then pulling to the left is a different bill, and the emergency preparedness is another bill. So that's 12 days of debate on bills we're all voting in favour of. We've already had four days of debate on this red light camera bill when we originally passed it.

So the time allocation stuff you get, I say to the public out there—

Mr Bartolucci: Who brings in the agenda?

Hon Mr Stockwell: We do. Who orders the business of the House? To the member for Sudbury, who I find to be an honourable and decent person and who I think does deal with this in a very fair and honest fashion, we do. We order the business of the government.

But the point I'm trying to make here, and I know it's not too difficult a point for the members opposite to get, is that we have to bring this bill in. It has to pass the Legislature. It can't be done by regulation. So we order the business of the House and we call this. What I try to do, if it's a non-controversial bill that we're all working in favour of to get passed, is say, "Look guys, let's have one day of debate on this." We're all in favour. We're not making any yards. You make us sit at night. No one comes anyway. Nobody wants to debate the bill. Even the guy who is holding us up can't find anyone in his own caucus to debate the bill. He can't even debate the bill. He gets an hour leadoff and he talks for 20 minutes. There's nobody else to talk to.

Why don't we make a deal and get these bills through in one day, I say to the member for Sudbury and others? Then we could take all those extra days—we're sitting here until the 12th anyway—and talk about bills that mean something to people.

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming-Cochrane): Why don't we vote now?

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'd love to, except now it's a time allocation motion. I have to wait until my members are here, because if we vote early they may not be close by. So I've got to bring all the members back to vote on a time allocation—

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: This isn't complicated. You know what? I'm going to explain this one to you.

Mr Kormos: Where are they?

Hon Mr Stockwell: To the member from Welland-Thorold, this is obviously too complicated again. What happens is that we have ministers with offices all around Toronto. They're told to come back at 10 to 6 when the vote happens. If you call it early, they won't be back. I'm sure you're not voting in favour of a time allocation bill, so we won't have enough members here, and it loses. I've got to come back and reintroduce the bill and do it all again for the dysfunctional family on the very end of the row over there.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: There's the civil engineer from Prince Edward-Hastings, the deep thinker, the pointy head of the Liberal caucus, the guy who just railed on at me because it's another time allocation motion. He wasn't here when I was talking about it. Maybe he was watching TV, I don't know.

What I was trying to get across to you was that we have no choice but to time-allocate these. I don't think you want to spend any more than three days debating this bill; I can't believe it. My sense from your House leader and the whip is that I don't think you wanted to spend three days debating this. I don't think you wanted to spend two days debating this. I think you would have done it in one day.

Member for Prince Edward-Hastings, here's the trick: unless I get agreement, I have to time-allocate after three days of debate. If you get this book, the standing orders book, if you pick up the standing orders book, it says right in there—you want to read the standing orders book—that if you can't get agreement, you have three days of debate before you can time-allocate a bill. And you know who just railed on at us for time-allocating another bill?

Mr Parsons: But you do it for every bill.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Yes, we do it for every bill. We don't have a choice.

Mr Parsons: You do.

Hon Mr Stockwell: OK, last time—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Stockwell: No, I have five minutes. Maybe I can get it across. Slow down a bit. He was in the education field. I know you're going to get this. Don't you get it? I have to have three days of debate on everything, and if I can't get you to agree not to debate this any more, I have to move a time allocation bill. There are three bills before the House right now, Ernie—148, 149 and 191—that we all agree with, but I just spent 12 days debating these bills we all agree with. We could use those 12 days debating—here's an idea—something we don't agree about.

Mr Parsons: You do it for every bill.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Oh, Mr Speaker—

Mr Bartolucci: The problem is we don't trust each other.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I don't necessarily think we don't trust each other; I think it's to the point we're at now where we have our friend who just won't let anything go through. I appreciate the fact that, yes, you tend to be a little more co-operative with the Liberal Party, but then I have to sit here and listen to that all day, that somehow I've submerged this place in the sewer system by not allowing proper democratic debate, which is what I want.

I want to have good, healthy debate on bills we don't agree with.

Mr Parsons: Sometimes.

Mr Stockwell: Well, it happened once to me. Oh no, let me talk about that. We had an agreement, but I had to go back to the Attorney General. He said no. That happens. But what I did with my friend from the NDP, Mr Kormos, when we had an agreement, was that he got his end of the agreement done, and then when it was my turn to get my end of the agreement done that was to my benefit, he said, "I'm not doing that." That was it. That's an agreement in Peter Kormos's world.

So here's the difficulty, folks: why don't we all get together? Why don't we all agree that these three bills should go through? If you want to have, say, eight days on one bill, six days on another bill and nine days on another bill, we can. We can actually sit here and do something meaningful instead of being caught here at night debating a bill nobody wants to debate, making everybody stay and adjourn at 20 after 7 because we can't find anybody to sit in this place to talk about a bill everybody agrees with. Now I am frustrated.

What we are left with at the end is maybe this public plea. It's not working behind the scenes. It's not working as a group getting together. So it's a public plea to the opposition parties to chat with your House leaders and say what it is you want. If you want to go out to committee on the water bills, let's go out on committee on the water bills.

Mr Parsons: We want a new government House leader.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Apparently you do, Ernie. I understand that. You're just a witty guy. You're quick off the mark and you want to get all these things on the record. But do you know what? You don't get to pick the government House leader, and I don't get to pick the third party House leader or your House leader. So we have what we have. Right? So why can't we come together and work out an agreement? We've tried.

Anyway, the member for Welland is back, and he's working with his family over there, the Osbournes, and he's trying to determine exactly where we move forward from here.

I say to the public out there, be very careful when you hear about another time allocation motion, because as in every issue you're going to find in your life, in most instances there are two sides to every story. I think when you hear the other side of the story, you may understand that we are left with no alternative but to time allocate, because we debate bills that I would like to debate for more days for the same number of days we debate bills we all agree on.

Mr Hoy: Why don't you sit more often?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Sit more often? I say to the member for Chatham, sit more often? This House has never sat more than when the rules were changed to sit in the afternoon and evening. We have double sessional days every day. Why?

Interjections.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm doing my best.

We couldn't sit any more often. We've never had more sessional days in the history of this place than when we started double-ending them. Why? Because we have to spend more days debating this kind of bill. So it's an awful shame.

In the old days, they used to say it would take a long time to get stuff through the House; you're right. Some bills would spend three or four months in the House, and they'd be debated through those three or four months. And you know why that worked? Because the other bills like these would take 15 minutes. I don't mind debating a bill for three or four months that we have complete disagreement on, because at least there's an interesting debate, there's a difference of opinion and the democratic process gets served.

Why we have to debate these bills—

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: There's Caplan muttering away again, understanding as little as possible. He can't understand it; he doesn't.

Why we have to debate these bills for three days, when we all agree with it, is beyond me. So I make another public plea.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Caplan, you don't have to read out loud when you read. There's this old saying, that you can actually keep it in your head. Your lips are moving.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allocated for debate.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. Order, government House leader.

Mr Galt has moved government notice of motion 49. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1748 to 1758.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 29 October 2002

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mardi 29 octobre 2002

The House met at 1845.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

AGRICULTURAL EMPLOYEES PROTECTION ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA PROTECTION DES EMPLOYÉS AGRICOLES

Resuming the debate adjourned on October 24, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 187, An Act to protect the rights of agricultural employees / Projet de loi 187, Loi visant à protéger les droits des employés agricoles.

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming-Cochrane): As a farmer who still lives on a farm, it's certainly an honour and a pleasure to speak to this bill tonight. I start with talking about agriculture in general. It was the first occupation that the people who settled these parts of the world we now call Ontario embarked upon. It was necessary, obviously simultaneously, to obtain shelter and be able to produce food. Most of southern Ontario and a lot of northern Ontario provided a very fertile and productive land base, which today is one of the best agricultural producing areas in the world.

In Ontario we produce 200 different commodities, which for the size we are probably has one of the most varied scopes of agriculture anywhere in the world. We are blessed with a tremendous climate and tremendous soil. Our geographic location and access to markets are ideal. We have, maybe until as of late, some of the best research in the world, because we as governments used to fund a lot of that. We need to be putting more money into our research to keep on the cutting edge of agricultural effectiveness and efficiency.

Ontario is agriculture, and it's a big base of it. We are not only self-sufficient in the crops we produce, but we are major exporters around the world of our agricultural commodities. It's been a very important industry. It's been the base industry. In fact, if you take the whole agri-food industry in this province, it's the second-biggest employer in Ontario, after automobiles. The whole spectrum of the agri-food business is big business and very vital to a self-sufficient society. Agriculture has a special place with people but also with government.

Governments have looked upon agriculture as obviously vital to the population, that we need to be self-sufficient, and we also need to be able to produce food at the most reasonable price we can to make sure our people are fed. So governments pay special attention to agriculture and have given it a lot of assistance because it's a very tough occupation. I can't think of any business that is as challenging as agriculture. There are so many variables out there that challenge agriculture: soil conditions, the weather, world markets. It's a very tough occupation, it's challenging and I would say that for people who are in agriculture, it's a calling. It's not something you're really going to get rich at, but it's something that somehow is in the blood. It is something that whether you were born to it or came to it, such as I, there's something very basic about producing food from scratch, literally scratching the ground and making the soil viable so that you can plant seed and produce food. It's very satisfying.

It sort of reminds me of how people used to be very self-sufficient in the old days and provided for all their means. Today most of us are quite isolated from that, but those that toil on the land know how to produce the basic foodstuffs. It's a tough business. It is probably the ultimate small business today in Ontario. It's a small business with lots of challenges, and it needs protection.

Agriculture has moved from the base of just being the family farm that historically has been made up of a family of husband and wife, with children chipping in. As farms grew larger and more affluent, they were able to hire hired hands to help. Most farmers need some sort of labour assistance, mostly on a seasonal basis, and many of those people come from overseas. The migrant workers come in, and there are a lot of them from around the world, a lot from the Caribbean countries. There are maybe about 10,000 farm workers in Ontario. About 3,000 are migrant workers, and they are protected under federal legislation. For the 7,000 or so farm workers from Ontario, they come under our jurisdiction.

Historically, it has been looked upon as being the ultimate small business, that there probably wasn't a requirement for the organization that unionization brings to a workplace. I know, when I talk to large employers, that they really appreciate the democratic organization that unionization brings to that workplace. A large employer needs to be able to communicate with their workers and having a union structure is the way to do that. But it has been seen historically that for the farm of a few workers, that really wasn't necessary.

The ultimate right of unionization would be the right to strike. That of course has been seen, and still is seen today, as not really being part of a business that deals with perishable goods and livestock. Even when, in the 1990s, the NDP government brought in an agricultural labour relations bill and allowed unionization of farms, the right to strike was forbidden at that time. A dispute resolution system was put in place. It was a mediation process, with binding arbitration if that failed.

After several attempts to organize certain farming operations in Ontario, when the Harris government first came in in 1995, they basically revoked that agricultural labour relations bill. One of the main commercial food unions, the food and commercial workers, went to the courts to challenge the Mike Harris bill that got rid of the right of farm workers to unionize. What we have before us today in this bill, Bill 187, is this government's response to the Supreme Court decision that basically said that while there is no right in our Constitution to organize and collectively bargain, there certainly is a right to associate. The Supreme Court said that this legislation was contrary to our constitutional rights to associate through the Charter of Rights and Freedoms.

This bill takes one step back to the right all Canadians have of being able to associate. This bill, in its one step, and only one step, allows farm workers to associate, discuss and meet about work conditions and wages, and to have only discussions with their employers. At the same time, it protects the employees from any sort of intimidation from their employers, but it doesn't give them the right to unionize or collectively bargain.

For the majority of farm operations out there, this bill would suffice; it would be suitable. For most of the farm operations out there—I would say about 95% of them; maybe a higher percentage—are basically mom-and-pop family farms that maybe have a couple of workers, maybe a couple of full-time seasonal and maybe some other, temporary workers. This bill probably addresses the majority of situations in agriculture today and certainly would have addressed agriculture 30 or 40 years ago.

Agriculture today is vastly different than it was in the mid-last century. Now we have large agribusinesses that are very large employers, so we really have two classes of operations. The ones I know most about, which are mostly in my area of northeastern Ontario and in most of this province, are the family farms. They are basically family businesses, with the help of a few workers. This bill probably addresses that situation sufficiently.

But we also have today, because of international markets and expanding agribusiness operations, very large agricultural employers, many of which employ 50 to 200 people in vast operations, whether they be the incredibly growing greenhouse industry of southwestern Ontario, the Chatham-Kent and Essex area, where there are high heat units in southwestern Ontario, one of the most ideal places to have a greenhouse industry—that greenhouse industry has just literally, to maybe mix a metaphor, mushroomed, which is the very opposite type of operation, which is in the dark and underground. But these operations have basically absolutely expanded to an incredible extent, making Ontario a highly competitive agricultural entity. We're keeping up not only with vegetable and fruit production under glass, but also the flower trade. We are big producers of fruit, vegetables and flowers in southwestern Ontario, ideally suited to the markets of Toronto and Montreal but also the United States.

There are also other operations, such as mushroom farms, that are basically 24-hour-a-day operations, where workers work in very difficult and tough situations. What I think is required there is an opportunity for those workers who are finding themselves the employees of big employers to be allowed to have the next step. That really needs to be considered.

In consultations on our side, we have talked to the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and we have told them of our view about that. In fact, our leader, Dalton McGuinty, talked to my friend and neighbour Jack Wilkinson, who is the president of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture and used to be your neighbour, I suppose, down your way years ago, and told him what we would do if we became the government after the next election, that we felt the workers for the large agricultural employers who have in the range of 50 to 200 employees need to have the opportunity to collectively bargain and to organize.

I would say that because we have to look at the rights of workers. Historically we have protected farming and agriculture, and as a farmer and ex-Minister of Agriculture, I certainly support that. The reason we have done that is because of the nature of the operations and that agriculture didn't have those vast numbers of employees working at one particular entity, and that sort of organization or protection wasn't required. But now agriculture is moving, literally, into the 21st century with vast operations, many of them agriculturally associated. There may be canning operations, freezer-packer operations. Some of those are running on two or three shifts a day during the season. They have a multitude of employees, and basically they're working in factories. Yes, because it's a primary food source, a perishable food source that has to be processed, we have given in government that sort of protection against the right to strike against work. That right of striking has to be forbidden in this particular industry, but I think formulas could be arranged that allow for mediation and binding arbitration, if necessary, for those large employers.

There's another area where agricultural workers have not had the protection of government. Quite frankly, I find it very hard to believe, but agricultural workers are exempt from all of Ontario's occupational health and safety legislation. We have very good legislation that protects the working women and men in this province from all the hazards in the workplace. We do our very best in legislation—we can always do better, and we keep looking at it to make it better—to protect our men and women who go to work every day to make sure they can come home to their families at the end of that working day.

I suppose for the reason that we put agriculture in a special place and we want to give it special protection and we want to protect that sector of the economy, we have basically sacrificed the workers in that industry to say that they should be exempt from this legislation. I think that's something all of us in this House really have to re-examine. I think it's time that we looked at our agricultural workers and said to them that they deserve the same rights as any other worker in society. Why should agricultural workers be exempt from occupational health and safety legislation? If we deem that every other worker in the province should have that protection, then why not our agricultural workers?

We have to do this with a sensitivity that understands the nature of agricultural production. We know that it's a different type of workplace. We're dealing with live animals, and we know that we have to make sure we treat those animals with respect and dignity and make sure no cruelty is done to them.

We are also dealing with perishable goods, and we have to make sure those gifts we are producing that are going to feed our province have to be protected also, because we should never waste food. Therefore that food should be protected. We have to bring that in balance, and while we protect the perishable goods and we protect the livestock, we also have to make sure—

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): He's coming home. I think they're getting a seat ready for you up there, David.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Order. Would the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound come to order? Thank you.

Mr Ramsay: I appreciate the comments of the member from Bruce-Grey, but I think it's important that we bring balance to our legislation that there are competing rights in society. We have to make sure that our farmers are protected. We have to make sure that our agricultural sector is protected. On the other hand, that doesn't mean that we sacrifice the rights of workers to do that. There needs to be balance. We can do that with sensitivity. Looking at that and the common sense way of doing that would be to look at those large workplaces. Not the size of the farm, not the revenue of the farm; what we're talking about are employees here. If you have an operation that has 50 or 200 or 300 people, well, then that's a workplace that should have the rights of unionization, like any other workplace. When you're talking about a mom-and-pop operation with a few people, maybe just seasonal, then I think this legislation hits the mark for that.

I'm saying we'll support this legislation, that this is a first step. But if I get the opportunity, after the next go-round, I think we need, in consultation with labour and with the agricultural groups, to look at our next move.

I would move adjournment of the debate at this time.

The Acting Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1902 to 1932.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please stand and remain standing.

All those opposed will please stand and remain standing.

Clerk of the House (Mr Claude L. DesRosiers): The ayes are 14; the nays are 23.

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

Further debate?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Thank you very much for the opportunity to speak on this legislation. As the member for Timiskaming was discussing this matter in some considerable detail, he was pointing out—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Stop the clock. We really need it to be quiet while the member for St Catharines makes his presentation.

Mr Bradley: I think one thing all members in the House would agree on is the following: we would want to ensure that the working conditions on farms across this province are such that those who are doing the work are not placed in jeopardy or that their safety is not compromised. Some members of the Legislature—my friend for Niagara Centre has described in some detail and colourfully, but also accurately, circumstances that face some farm workers who have less than what you would call glorious jobs to perform. He has also described, as have others, including my friend Mr Ramsay, circumstances where you have some very large operations which would not be defined as family farms. More and more we see a movement, unfortunately in my view but nevertheless it is happening, toward what we would call industrial operations or industrial farms, with a large number of workers and with conditions that are not acceptable to most fair-minded people in Ontario. It seems to me, as my colleague Mr Ramsay has suggested, that somewhere along the line in the next step we must address those circumstances that confront people who are not in the mom-and-pop type of farming operation but are in the larger operations which in essence are industries.

I express my concern about that. I've listened with a good deal of interest about some of the problems confronting our farm workers. I reside in the Niagara Peninsula, where a number of the people who are working on farms, certainly not all, are in fact offshore workers. Years ago that wasn't necessarily the case. In many cases it was students who were doing the work and others who were new to the country, sometimes, but not offshore workers brought in for the purpose of dealing with the farm operations. It seems to me that what the Minister of Agriculture and Food and the Minister of Labour would want to see happen is a reduction in the number of accidents that happen on farms, for instance, and that the working conditions are acceptable to the people of Ontario. What you find, largely, on the mom-and-pop types of farms, the family farms, is that those who work with them are very often almost members of the family. They're people who are accepted, and accepting of the chores that are necessary to keep the farm in operation. The relationship between the workers in that situation and the families themselves is often a very good one. Where the problem arises is where we get away from the family farm, even the larger family farm, and into operations which clearly are of an industrial nature. That has to be addressed with further legislation.

It is important as well that we ensure the viability of farms. One of the things I've wanted to see in our province over the years is the retention of agricultural land for agricultural purposes. Members of this House will know that on two separate occasions I have brought resolutions before the House, passed on both occasions, dealing with the issue of the preservation of agricultural land. The first was asking the provincial government in a general way to take any and all action necessary to preserve the quantity and quality of agricultural land that exists in the province today. As we've pointed out, if you look at the country of Canada as a whole, the amount of arable land, the amount of land that is contained within climatic conditions conducive to the growing of crops, is relatively small compared to the large size of the country. It seems to me that the prime agricultural land that is available to us should not be disappearing the way it is today to development.

If farmers could be guaranteed that they are going to be given a fair shake, they might well be prepared to buy into the efforts to preserve agricultural land. Those of you who know the Niagara Peninsula would know the area that I am talking about. I have had unanimously passed in this Legislature, at least by a voice vote, a resolution which called for the establishment of an agricultural preserve in the Niagara region. I was pleased to note the support of two cabinet ministers from the Niagara region in that regard, as well as the overwhelming majority of members of this House.

To be fair to the farmers, of course, you have to ensure, if you are going to establish an agricultural preserve, that they are going to be able to make a decent living from that land. That's always extremely important. For instance, if we look at the issue of grape land, the vineyards in the province, there are some within the wine industry who would like to see the establishment not necessarily of an agricultural preserve but of a vineyard preserve similar to that in the Napa Valley. I think the Napa Valley is a good example in many ways. But at the same time, some of those individuals are not prepared to guarantee that they are going to purchase the grapes that are grown within that agricultural preserve. It seems to me that there is a compelling case to be made by the grape growers in our part of the province and other parts of the province that if their land is to be kept in agricultural production for the purposes of growing grapes, they should be guaranteed that there is going to be a market for those grapes and that they are going to get a decent price for them. That would certainly allow farmers to have the kind of inflow of funds and profits which would be helpful in having them compensate those who work on the farms in a way that we would all consider to be appropriate.

I believe as well that we have a couple of choices in the province. We as Canadians and—let's be more definite and parochial—we as Ontarians have a choice of either paying the price that is deserved at the farm gate for the products produced on our farms, whether it's grown crops or whether it is other agricultural production that takes place, including cattle farming and so on—either we are prepared to pay the appropriate price so the farmer has a viable operation or, conversely, we're prepared to support government programs which are of assistance to farmers. So far, my observation has been, as I think it is for many, particularly in the agricultural community, that consumers have not been prepared to pay the kind of prices that the farmers believe are fair and that would provide a reasonable return on their investment. That is why I am supportive when the federal and provincial governments provide programs to assist farmers who face a lot of unknowns that people in other businesses don't face. They are particularly susceptible to changes in weather and in climate.

That gets me, of course, to another subject. Farmers would be among those individuals who would be very much in favour of the Kyoto accord and the protection that it would afford to their crops.

Interjections.

Mr Bradley: As well, they know that they would benefit from the alternative fuels that can be produced by agricultural production.

I want to hear the "No, they're not" now, because I know I won't hear the "No, they're not." I have heard from those farmers who will say to me, "We look forward to contributing to the production of alternative fuels through ethanol and through biodiesel products which will help the environment and which will be much more benign environmentally in terms of the burning of fuels to allow our vehicles to travel around the province." Many of those farmers have been very helpful there. But they're looking for the kind of justifiable assistance that is necessary to keep them in a viable operation.

I have watched for a number of years as there has been a paving of agricultural land in the Niagara Peninsula. There are some municipal politicians who will not be satisfied until they've paved every last square centimetre from the edge of Metropolitan Toronto, as we used to call it, to Fort Erie, from the Niagara River to Lake Ontario to Lake Erie. When they've paved it all, they will have reached paradise. That's how far-thinking some of those individuals are. They say, "Unless we can grow every year, we cannot be a viable community." And I ask the question, "So when you've paved every last inch of land"—just as I say to those who like cutting the trees, "When you've cut all the trees, then what do you do? You come to government and say, 'Well, we have to do something else now.'" In terms of the agricultural land, if they paved it all, what do they do, put it up on stilts next and keep paving? Do they go out into the lake? That's the silliness of the argument that they make.

I know there are many members of this House who want to assist farmers in carrying out their operations and want to preserve agricultural land, which is why they do not want to permit what I call death by a thousand cuts; that is, the so-called economic severance which many of them look for. Because some of us who represent communities that have some agricultural land in them realize that there are folks who move out from the urban part of a city to the rural part of a municipality, and then they want to complain about the noise, the odours, the dust. They're the ones who moved from the downtown part or the built-up part of the city out to the countryside, and then they want to dictate to farmers what kind of agricultural operations they have.

So I think it's important that we plan carefully, that Smart Growth really means smart growth and is not simply a terminology used as an interim until we have paved all this land.

I'm not in airplanes very much, but for people who are, and once in a while when I am, it's actually appalling to leave the Toronto airport, for instance, Pearson International Airport, Pearson airport, and look over the land that's just being gobbled up for development purposes. The developers are happy. They're making money hand over fist. What it encourages is the kind of urban sprawl that brings about problems in terms of the utilization of individual vehicles, because oftentimes governments will say it's not practical to have public transportation out into those areas. So I am concerned.

I was pleased to see the support that I received in the House, speaking-wise, from many of the members for preserving agricultural land in this province and, at the same time, preserving those farmers who are on the land.

There are some people who will tell you—you could have the most lush land available and the best climatic conditions, and they'll say, "Oh, you can't grow anything on that." I can think of one person who always makes a representation to city council in St Catharines who says that. No matter what the land is, it's no good for growing. Yet you look out there and we have grapes growing, apricots, apples, peaches, pears, cherries. That's in terms of the tender fruit.

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): Grapes.

Mr Bradley: Of course the grapes in great abundance, strawberries in the spring, raspberries. We have all kinds of products available, in terms of fresh fruits as well as vegetables, in our part of the province; and some growing of game, for instance, cattle and other animals. So we have a major agricultural area there that I want to see preserved.

How can we do it? We can do it through, as the Minister of the Environment would know—and he would be in agreement with this—using appropriate planning mechanisms to ensure that we don't gobble up all of this agricultural land. I know he would agree with those kinds of appropriate planning mechanisms.

He would also not want to see the paving and developing of the Niagara Escarpment in our area. I wish his ministry still had control of the Niagara Escarpment. It's now given over to the Ministry of Natural Resources. I always thought that, at least in theory, the Ministry of the Environment would be more inclined to protect those lands that are part of the escarpment. What is frightening, of course, is that the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound is the parliamentary assistant to the Minister of the Environment. I know the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound is not a fan of the Niagara Escarpment Commission, to say the least. So it would be my hope that on some issues the Minister of the Environment might listen to the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound but that on other issues he would listen to his seatmate, the Honourable Norm Sterling, who was responsible for the establishment of the Niagara Escarpment plan and believes strongly in appointing people to the Niagara Escarpment Commission who actually want to preserve the land within the mandate of the commission, rather than pave it.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: I'm being interrupted again. The last time I got interrupted significantly by the Minister of the Environment, the Speaker was giving out penalties. For a relatively benign interjection, I had to depart from the Legislature, which I must say was a headline story in my local newspaper. Many of course think it's nice to be feisty, but I kind of regretted, after 25 years without ever having to leave the Legislature out of something other than my volition, even if it was only for the afternoon, that I was asked to. I know the Speaker was very reluctant to do so and, simply as the referee in a game where a penalty has been called on the home team, had to call a penalty on the opposition to even it up. I know that his mother forgives him for that. I know that Mrs Carr, if she's watching this evening, has now, I think, with my benevolence toward the Speaker, forgiven the Speaker for a decision which not everyone in the House might have agreed with on that particular occasion.

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): Everybody does.

Mr Bradley: The Deputy Speaker may have had a different take on it on that occasion.

Anyway, looking at this bill that we have before us, I think one of the things that we have to do as a province, through the Ministry of Agriculture and Food—and the Minister of Environment is the former Minister of Labour—is do everything possible to ensure safety in the farm setting. Farm settings are often exempted. The former Minister of Labour would know that the incidence of accidents on farms, as it is in other areas, is too great. Some of the accidents are fatal, and some of the accidents cause lifelong impairment for the person. That is most unfortunate. But what I do think has to happen—and this bill obviously is going to pass—is that when we look at the industrial operations involved with farming, we have to ensure that those individuals are in a position for collective bargaining and unionization, where there are the large, non-family operations, and that as much assistance as possible should be provided to other farm workers in the small operations, which are the mom-and-pop or the family operations in this province. I hope that we will see, subsequent to this legislation or perhaps as an amendment to this legislation, an opportunity to deal with those industrial operations.

The Minister of the Environment, who is here this evening, just so his family is aware that he is not at a hockey game or something—

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): Or at the Albany Club.

Mr Bradley: —or at the Albany Club, as the member for Sudbury says—will take that into account as a former Minister of Labour and presently as the Minister of the Environment, because I know he deals with the issue of the application of pesticides. He would be diligent in wanting to ensure that those who are the applicators of the pesticides are indeed protected in a health and safety manner. I do hope that we see that additional step forthcoming, and I hope we do everything we can to maintain the viability of family farms in this province.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): It is always entertaining to hear the member from St Catharines. I especially was interested in his remembrance of the other day when Mr Speaker had him unceremoniously removed from this chamber. I understand it was the very first time.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): Uncharacteristic.

Mr Prue: Yes, it was very uncharacteristic. I hope Mrs Carr forgives her son; I hope she does. And I would hope the Premier is equally forgiving of Mr Carr after what came out here today. I'm sure he is in great need of forgiveness, and perhaps all members of the House should forgive him.

The member is always very interesting to listen to. He made a number of points. In the time allotted to me—I only have a little—I'm just going to pick one, and that is the whole issue of farm safety.

The argument has been made by two out of the three parts of this House that farm workers really don't need to be protected in quite the same way as unionized workers. Quite frankly, that is a wrong thing to say, because in the eight years for which we have statistics, the last eight years, 1,049 people have died on farms in this country. It is a very dangerous occupation. That is more people than have died in all of the auto plants. That is more people than have died in all of the manufacturing plants. That is more people than have died in all of the industries in Canada. This is the most dangerous one, and it is the one for which farm workers need the most protection. It is the one for which they need unions and collective bargaining to protect themselves.

Mr Johnson: It's a privilege to be able to get up and add my comments tonight. A little later on I hope to take more time. I did want to just make a comment or two about the member for St Catharines, because I didn't hear anything about Bill 187 and the farm workers' right to associate. I listened intently until the end and I didn't hear a thing about 187. Quite frankly, I understand it. For the Liberals it's a particularly squirming type of situation that they find themselves in.

Mr Marchese: It's a slithering issue, isn't it?

Mr Johnson: It would seem so—those kinds of visions. The people will want to understand why that is so. Of course, the reason is that when our government thought that the former NDP legislation should not be enforced, the Liberals opposed that. So when we brought in Bill 187 they were caught a little flat-footed, because they couldn't, they thought, be seen supporting it, nor could they be caught not supporting it. So they sat on their duffs and didn't vote either for or against it at first reading. So I can actually understand why the member from St Catharines—besides wanting to make the Niagara Peninsula into a land reserve and do all those other things that would grossly manipulate farm practices Ontario—didn't want to touch on Bill 187.

Mr Patten: It is a pleasure for me to stand here and challenge the member for Perth-Middlesex across the way, who said that the member from St Catharines did not address Bill 187. Right at the outset he said there is a simple principle here, and the principle is that all workers, no matter who they are and where they come from, should all be in a safe environment, should all be remunerated adequately and should all be protected from abuse.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): He didn't say anything like that.

Mr Patten: Those are my words. I'm paraphrasing what he said, but I believe that's essentially the principle of what he said when he began to speak this evening. He's a man of principle. That is what should drive this particular issue.

The member for St Catharines has also, I might say—and I'm sure most members of the House would acknowledge this—been around for a fair amount of time and, because of that, has developed a certain nimbleness in his ability to draw what may appear to be obtuse relationships to the main issue, which in fact are not. Later on, he weaves these issues back into his argument.

For example, he mentioned that he was thrown out of the House for the first time. I think he felt like an abused worker. I think this is what he was trying to say in his own manner. He forgave the Speaker for that, and I'm sure he knows that his mother probably forgave the Speaker at the same time. That was very important.

He went on to talk about the rich heritage of his area, the St Catharines-Niagara area, in terms of what it produces and his worry about—

The Acting Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I listened to the remarks made by the member for St Catharines. I've got to tell you, I was disappointed that he didn't say anything about the chicken catchers from his part of the world. My colleague from Niagara Centre last week spent a great deal of time during his remarks talking about the appalling conditions that chicken catchers from that part of Niagara have to deal with, folks who are working piecemeal, working through the night under appalling conditions, who can't even get a bottle of water from the contractor they're working for, folks who are getting shafted, folks who desperately need a right to organize a trade union in order to have their health and safety protected, to get decent wages and to get water from the employer. I thought the member for St Catharines was going to talk about why we should be debating a bill tonight that allows agricultural workers to be unionized, because that's the only way, through collective bargaining, that they're going to get some decent wages and some decent health and safety.

Workers don't need the right to associate. Goodness, they have that under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This government isn't giving them any new rights through the bill we're dealing with. The Liberals should recognize that. The Liberals should be voting against the government bill because it doesn't do a single thing to help agricultural workers.

I hope the member for St Catharines reconsiders and decides he's going to fight for his chicken catchers tonight and that he's going to vote against this government bill and vote for a bill that would allow agricultural workers to unionize in Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: Response?

Mr Bradley: One thing I want to reconsider, if I could, would be that contract with Manitoba Hydro for 4 cents per kilowatt hour that was cancelled by the NDP government that would have been benign, clean electricity coming into the province of Ontario.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: It was a great deal at the time, as the member for Burlington points out. I'm sorry that got cancelled: I know the member, if she could, would want to reconsider that.

I want to thank all of my colleagues for their interventions this evening. I did make reference to the earlier speech by the member for Niagara Centre where he discussed the appalling conditions that exist. I think in those circumstances what should happen is that an investigation by the Ministry of Labour into this practice should be initiated.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: In fairness, the conditions the member for Niagara Centre has described don't sound like conditions that would fit within any fair law I would think of in the province of Ontario. I think that is deserving of investigation by the Ministry of Labour and the Ministry of Agriculture and Food. I did mention earlier that in the larger industrial operations, there is justification for unionization and for collective bargaining.

One thing I was glad the member for Beaches-East York brought up was the whole issue of the cost of hydro. As you would know, not only are consumers phoning me, not only are business people phoning me, but members of the farming community are being impacted immensely by the huge increases in the price of electric power in this province, increases attributable to the policies of this government.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate? Just to help the member for Trinity-Spadina, we are now in 10-minute speeches.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): Ten minutes?

Interjection.

Mr Marchese: No, I need the whole 10 minutes. There is so much to say.

I've got to tell you before I begin on Bill 187, it's not for me to speak about the Liberal position. It's not my job. It's the job of the Liberals to explain theirs and the job of the electorate to decide who carries what position on what issues. That's the point, isn't it?

I want to begin by talking about the title. The title of Bill 187 says agricultural worker protection act. Let me be clear, because Mr Runciman is here. Does that sound the like the Victims' Bill of Rights to you? To remind Monsieur Stockwell and others who are in this room, did that bill confer any rights on victims? It didn't. Judge Day told us, and told them, that there were no rights. But if you listen to the title of the bill, member for Nipissing, Victims' Bill of Rights, you would likely think, "Gee, there are plenty of rights in that bill and victims will be protected. They'll have rights. They'll be able to go to the courts. They'll be able to do all sorts of things, because the bill says so."

Under this bill, the agricultural workers protection act, it says that workers will be protected, like the Victims' Bill of Rights. Judge Day told Chris Stockwell, the Minister of the Environment, and Mr Runciman, whose title no one can remember, that victims have no rights.

Do you remember the Tenant Protection Act, Jim? You remember that one, eh? When you say Tenant Protection Act, Chris Stockwell and others clap. What they're clapping for is the opposite of what the bill gives you. The only rights are the ones contained in the title, nothing more, because in its substance there are no rights. The people watching this particular political channel know, because they've seen the debates, they've heard the debates. They listen to Tories and they listen to New Democrats on this side as we demystify the bills, exfoliate those terrible onions they put out, and the public is able to see, "Ah, now I understand." Because you peel the layers and then you say, "OK, now we get to the bottom of it." That's the point of exfoliating the onion, right?

The Tenant Protection Act gave no rights to tenants. In fact, vacancy decontrol says that as soon as you leave an apartment, the owner of that apartment building is able to jack up the rents as much as he can—and they do. In the city of Toronto and beyond, rents are so unreachably high, so obscenely high that most of the 3.3 million tenants have very little protection from the so-called Tenant Protection Act. All they're getting is whacked by this government. They smile and proudly say, "The Tenant Protection Act: isn't that great?" And they're doing the same thing with this particular bill, the agricultural worker protection act.

Speaker, I'm drawing parallels for your benefit and that of the public watching so they can see the links, because there is a master plan at work. It isn't just a bill that pops out with no connection to any previous bill. There's a connection. You guys know what you're doing. That's why I often say that you're good—you're bad, but you're good at what you're doing. And bad is an understatement.

Look what this bill does: it says you can form an association. What it means is that it's a café kind of club. You go to the coffee shop and chat a little bit, have a little coffee, sip and chat and talk. That's what we mean by an association. It's powerless. You go nowhere except for a coffee somewhere.

Ms Martel: They don't need a bill.

Mr Marchese: As my colleague said, you can do it now. So what more rights are they getting than what they already have? Freedom to associate? We can all associate. And now you've got it in law, the freedom to associate.

Mr Kormos: That's big of them.

Mr Marchese: That's big. Let's follow this through a little bit. The next one says, "make representations to their employers" through their association. So you go pleadingly, because you don't go there with rights, knowing full well you're backed by law. You go there pleading to Mr Stockwell and say, "Please, Stockwell, can I have some bread? Can you change the working conditions? Can you increase my minimum wage? I know how you feel, but please don't hurt me. I know what your position is on minimum wage, but do you think maybe 5 cents more would be OK?" "Make representations to their employers" through their association—a lot of power, substance, big stuff for the workers. Man, are they going to be protected by this law.

What else does it say here? You can use a delegate to make those representations. So you can go to Stockwell's friend or Runciman's friend and say, "Please, can you go and talk to them? You know Chris. If you know him, maybe we can squeeze a couple of cents more from him, change the working conditions. But don't be harsh, don't be hard. You've got to go gentle, because if they don't like what you say, it's going to be bad."

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): Let's talk about the Liberal position on this.

Mr Marchese: The Liberals stand with you. It's not my job to play that role, where you sit on the fence so superbly well on both sides of it. It's a tough one. I can't do it.

Hon Mr Stockwell: And it discolours the fence too.

Mr Marchese: It does more than discolour the fence.

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): It's so nice to see you guys getting along.

Mr Marchese: Yeah, this is man's talk. It's not good. Move on, please.

Ms Martel: What does the employer have to do?

Mr Marchese: Well, let's just see here. "The employer shall listen to"—by law, we're going to have the employer listen. That's big. This is power. We're talking about a bill called the agricultural workers protection act. This is power we're giving to the worker. It says, "The employer shall listen to ... or read" representations. The employer can read the representation himself. We're giving the employer power to read representations, and we're giving the worker power to have the employer listen to the representation. They're good, right? These guys are really, really good.

I've got two minutes left. Man, does time fly.

They have the right not to be treated in an arbitrary or discriminatory manner by their bosses because of their association or their representation. So you understand, the only power, the only appeal process, the only thing you can deal with is the arbitrary or discriminatory language only as it relates to their belonging to an association. It doesn't talk about the conditions, wages, health and safety conditions. It doesn't deal with that. It only deals with issues connected to association.

Have I told you enough, Speaker? In the brief time I've had, is that clear? It think it's clear, more or less. We had a bill in 1994 that gave the workers the protection they needed. We understood that striking in farm areas is a difficult one. To strike would be a problem. We understood that, and in our bill in 1994 we recognized that. Why couldn't this government just take that bill again—even though we know their insolence in having to abolish it because they're so beholden to agribusiness. We understand. But after having understood, after years in power, they could have taken that bill and said, "Ah, we can do it." For God's sake, give them some modicum of power. It takes us nowhere. It takes us, Speaker, to a desire for me to move adjournment of this debate.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Marchese has moved adjournment of the debate. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

Hon Mr Stockwell: A point of order, Mr Speaker.

The Acting Speaker: You're out of order.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I have a point of order regardless.
Interjections.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Oh, OK. Thank you.

The Acting Speaker: Mr Marchese has moved adjournment of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion the nays have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 30-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 2015 to 2045.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please stand and remain standing.

All those opposed will please stand and remain standing.

Clerk of the House: The ayes are 12; the nays are 24.

The Acting Speaker: I declare the motion lost. The member for Trinity-Spadina.

Mr Marchese: It's my last 15 seconds.

Workers have no rights, just like in the Victims' Bill of Rights where the victims had no rights, just like in the Tenant Protection Act where the tenants had no rights. In this act, the so-called agricultural workers protection act, the workers don't have any rights. We're talking about workers earning minimum wage—minimum wage—and those who come from outside of these parts get minimum wage and have to pay for their room and board. We're talking about people who have no protection whatsoever, poor working people with no one to help them. We have a government that passes a bill that purports to help them and does nothing of the sort—a shameless act presented, disguised, as one that gives rights and has no rights whatsoever for those poor workers.

The Acting Speaker: Questions or comments?

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): On this particular bill—you always have to bring it back to the riding, to the people I represent in Durham. I honestly believe, when I think of the Ocala Orchards or Archibald Orchards and the number of people that they have, seasonally, I might add, to harvest the crops for the food I eat—it almost brings tears to my eyes. To think that they can be shut down by some inordinate group of people—I think of Sid Ryan and people like that who would shut it down at the most opportune time.

At least I understand where the members of the NDP are coming from. The Liberals are waffling once again. Look, there are five Liberals here and almost the entire NDP caucus. The real opposition here is the NDP, and I understand that. They stand for Sid Ryan. They stand for the Ontario Federation of Labour. Howard has been the strongest voice in this House in terms of opposition. Dalton's not even here tonight for this important debate.

But this is about the safety of food, the quality of food. This is about fresh, quality food in the province of Ontario. There are those who want to stop this—

Interjection.

Mr O'Toole: I'm disappointed by the opposition here tonight.

This bill, of course, makes sure that we have an ongoing commitment to food quality and food safety and also allows members of organizations to have an opportunity where farm workers can associate. This is part of this bill. It allows them to associate. It's the ability to stop the production and the seasonal operations of farming operations in this province.

So I am standing in support of my constituents, the agricultural community in my riding. I don't want to see strikes on family farms.

Mr Bradley: The concern that the member for Trinity-Spadina has for those involved in agricultural production was evident from the speech he delivered to the Legislature this evening. He described some circumstances, particularly as you get into the larger operations, that are of concern, probably to people on all sides.

There was a time when all we had in the province, essentially, were family farms, what we refer to as the mom-and-pop operations. Now we have—and the Minister of the Environment, of all people, should know, and the Minister of Agriculture would know—a number of operations which are in essence industrial operations. In some cases very intensive farming is taking place; a large number of people are employed. Special circumstances confront those who are in those particular occupations, and they are deserving of the kind of protection that others in an industrial setting would enjoy.

In addition, I have to say, as I did before, that the member for Niagara Centre brought a very compelling case to the Minister of Labour, here this evening—you're the former Minister of Labour sitting across from me—about the conditions facing those who deal with the chickens, who have to catch the chickens, and the very difficult times they have.

I'm pleased that the member for Trinity-Spadina has addressed all the issues that he felt were compelling to members of this House, and I want to commend him on his address this evening.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): I want to congratulate the member for Trinity-Spadina for outlining very clearly for the public of Ontario just how bad this legislation is, that this legislation makes it impossible for workers who work in the agricultural industry to come together, to form a union to, for example, take positions with respect to worker health and safety. It deprives those workers of coming together and forming an association and collective-bargaining around issues like health and safety and improving health and safety standards in the workplace. It prevents those workers from coming together and bargaining for a fair wage. It prevents those workers from coming together and forming an association and going to the table and bargaining over working conditions.

We've seen resolutions from the Conservative members of the House here dealing with their working conditions. They want a 25% increase in pay. They have no trouble passing legislation, coming together, forming an association and putting forward legislation to give themselves a 25% increase in pay. But to some worker out there who's working in unsafe working conditions, who's working very long hours, who doesn't have the benefit of Conservative cabinet minister expense accounts, some poor worker who wants to form an association, a union, for the purpose of collective bargaining, to have a say in their health and safety, to have a say in their working conditions, to bargain for fair wages, what do the Conservatives say? "No. We're not going to permit—"

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: The government House leader will come to order.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Come to order. I am warning the government House leader.

The member for Niagara Falls.

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): It's very interesting to sit back and listen to some of the hypocrisy from the members opposite. Oh, I withdraw, Speaker. I'd pick another word, but I can't think of it right now: the mendacity of the members opposite.

Earlier this evening we discussed a time allocation motion. As the House leader for the government pointed out—I started off and he finished off so eloquently—we had a bill before the House that was one page, the red light camera bill. The members opposite wanted to debate it for four days, even though they agreed with the bill. Finally, the House leader had no choice but to move time allocation. The members opposite cried and went on about the anti-democratic House leader moving time allocation. They said, "We want to debate bills." Well, you supported the bill. It didn't make much sense.

The House leader was correct. He said, "We want to save time. Instead of debating for four days and having time allocation motions on a bill that everybody agrees with, let's save the time to debate something we disagree on." Well, here tonight we have such a bill: a bill to stop the unionization of the family farms. The NDP's opposed to the bill, the government's in favour of the bill and the Liberals are all over the map. Here's the bill where the House leader was right. There are differences of opinion. He wants to debate this bill. What do the Liberals and NDP do twice already tonight? Move adjournment of the debate. They don't want to debate it.

Thirty-minute bells rang so we could waste 30 minutes of debate time. That was by the Liberals. We came back. We voted, "Let's keep on debating. We love debate. We love democracy." The NDP comes in and they move adjournment of debate—another wasted 30-minute bell. We came in here. We brought in our people from all over Toronto, where they were out busy working. They came and they voted and said, "We want more debate. We are the champions of democracy." What the heck is the matter with you guys?

The Acting Speaker: Response?

Mr Marchese: I just thank my friends—and foes, of course. I just want to make reference to the member for Durham, because he talked about how this is a bill about safety and food and the quality of food. Why didn't he call this bill the agricultural safety protection act or the agricultural quality of food protection act? That's not what it's about.

It was sad to see him say what he thinks of the farmers. He wants to start crying. What pitiful stuff. Why doesn't he talk about the poor farm workers as well, who toil in those farms day in and day out for minimum wage?

Interjection: Or less.

Mr Marchese: Or less, because the migrant workers who are here get the minimum wage but they've got to pay room and board. Why doesn't he cry for those workers? It's pitiful what you hear in this place.

This other guy, from Niagara Falls, talks about how this bill is about stopping the unionization of farm workers. Why doesn't he call this bill what it is, the anti-union bill? Why doesn't he say, "This is the agricultural stop-the-unionization-of-farm-workers act? Why doesn't he say it straight out, instead of calling it the agricultural worker protection act? The hypocrisy, I tell you. All right, I take it back; I withdraw.

We're talking about farm workers, minimum-wage workers. These are the people who are scraping by. We're talking about a bill that gives no protection or rights to these workers. We're not talking about appellants or applicants. We're talking about farm workers who come as supplicants to these people, pleading for rights: minimum wages and fair working conditions. They come pleading, because that's what this bill is all about: pleading for crumbs. That's not what workers want.

Call it what this bill is. It's an anti-unionization farm workers act. Say that.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): I want to set the record straight. There are some things that need to be clarified when we look at this piece of legislation.

First of all, it is a balanced piece of legislation. It represents a significant advance in facilitating employee-employer relationships. All of us who come from communities where agriculture forms a very important part of our economy recognize how important it is to our quality of life and the importance of making sure we continue this balance.

At issue is the freedom of association, as guaranteed in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This bill would extend legislative protections to agricultural workers to ensure that their rights to form and join associations can be exercised in a meaningful way.

Before this piece of legislation was introduced, there was a great deal of discussion within the industry—members of the agricultural industry and representatives of organized labour—and from this, then, came this bill. The message received was that Ontario agriculture employers value the relationship they already have with their employees. They believe it is a good one. We heard that it's important to treat all agricultural employees in a consistent manner. We heard that Ontario's agricultural production must not be vulnerable to the risk of potentially devastating labour disruptions.

When this bill was drafted, we remembered what we had heard. So the proposed legislation before us today does respect individual and constitutional rights of agricultural employees, while having regard to the unique characteristics of agriculture. The proposed legislation would enable agricultural employees to exercise their rights to form and join an employees' association, to participate in the lawful activities of that association and to have the right to assemble and make representations to an employer through an employees' association. The proposed legislation would ensure that all of this could be done free from interference, coercion and discrimination.

It's important to emphasize that the proposed legislation contains no restrictions on the composition of an employees' association other than that the association be comprised of agriculture employees. An employees' association could be comprised of agricultural employees from any number of farms. It could be organized on any basis that employees want. It could be a branch of another organization, including a branch or local of a union. A union or other organization could assist employees in forming an employees' association whether the association was formed as a branch or local of the union or other organization or as a separate association. To be clear, while an agriculture employee may join an association that is a union, the proposed legislation does not extend collective bargaining to agricultural workers.

It is also worth noting that the proposed legislation is not about workplace health and safety and is directed at agricultural employees' rights of association. It would enhance the ability of employees and employers to communicate about terms and conditions of employment, including any concerns about workplace health and safety.

It would give recourse should an individual or association believe that their rights have been contravened. It would give the Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal authority to hear complaints about alleged contraventions of the act and to issue remedial orders.

The proposed legislation would also protect a farm's most valuable assets—land, livestock and crops—by recognizing an employer's right to control access to his property—not prohibit access, mind you, but to control it. Any person or group could apply to the Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal for access to farm property where agricultural employees reside for the purpose of encouraging the employees to join an association. When dealing with such applications, the tribunal would take into consideration human health and safety, normal agricultural practices, animal health and safety, plant health, planting and harvesting, biosecurity needs, privacy and property rights. These are essential considerations to ensure that normal agricultural operations are not unduly interfered with.

The proposed legislation would protect the rights of Ontario's agricultural employees and would also recognize the unique characteristics of Ontario's agricultural operations.

I would also like to speak to another aspect of this piece of legislation that many have suggested: the issues of farm safety. Certainly, when I look at the members of my community and the concerns they have about farm safety—I know they have worked very hard with the Farm Safety Association of Ontario to make sure that farms become safer places—we have some extremely important information with regard to farm safety. If you look at the period of the last few years, there are some disturbing statistics, which fortunately are improving. One of them is that of 109 fatalities on farms between 1996 and 2001, 17 were under the age of 16, and of the same number, 109 fatalities, 23 were over the age of 65. We're talking here about farm families, and we're talking about the kinds of dangers that must be addressed on farms. The agricultural employee fatality rate was 4.54 per 100,000 employees in 2000. The rate of agricultural employee lost-time injuries declined by 25% from 1996 to 2001. So some of the fearmongering we have heard with regard to health and safety for employees has certainly been an ongoing issue and has certainly been addressed by much of the work that has been done by the Farm Safety Association.

The Canadian statistics demonstrate that in Ontario over the past few years, there has been a significant decline in the number of work-related farm fatalities between 1990—about 40 per year—and 1998—about 20 per year. When you look at the combination of this balanced piece of legislation and the work that has been done by the Farm Safety Association and the results of that work and the decline we are seeing, all of this is designed to continue to ensure that agriculture does have a very firm foundation and future in the province of Ontario.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): The debate around this issue—and it's a complex and highly sensitive issue—has been going on for a long time. I'm not sure that any government has really resolved all the issues that are involved. Obviously this bill is being presented as an agricultural bill—concern for what needs to happen in order to sustain agricultural operations. It's presented as employer-worker protection, as opposed to being presented as labour law. If it were being presented as labour law, the balancing of powers might look quite different than it does in this particular legislation.

I share some of the concerns that have been expressed by the previous speaker, and which I know are going to be expressed by my colleague when he rises to speak next, because he is one of the individuals who has persuaded us, along with others, that the issue of the perishability of goods in an agricultural setting is one that has to be taken into consideration. The fact that the fruit has to be picked and that the cows have to be milked is a factor that has to be taken into account in terms of determining whether or not an agricultural operation can sustain a labour disruption. I think that's the kind of question that would have to be addressed if what we were looking at tonight was in fact labour law, as opposed to a law presented by the Ministry of Agriculture.

I think the case can be made, where the labour disruption would create too great a hardship, that there can be some alternative; we look in health services, obviously, at areas of essential services, recognizing that a labour disruption would not be sustainable. When we reach that conclusion, I don't think it takes away the onus on government to make sure there really is protection of workers and, secondly, that there is labour law to be considered that would differentiate a small family farm operation from a larger, more industrial kind of complex, which many once-upon-a-time family farms have now become. I think there is still more work to be done by this and future governments on this issue.

Mr Prue: These chambers have been here for a long time, and I am sure that similar words were coming out of the government benches at the turn of the century. I'm sure the same words were spoken about factories and mines and where children were working. I am sure the same words were coming out of members' mouths who sat in that very seat back there, talking about protecting factories from those horrible workers who were seeking to unionize, from those horrible people who were seeking health and safety for themselves and for their children. I'm sure the same words we're hearing today came out of mouths on those benches all those many years ago.

You can say that after one year you've gone from 40 deaths per year to 29 on the family farm. That is still 29 deaths too many; 29 deaths that people who were properly able to deal with the situation, who were able to collectively bargain, to form a meaningful association, could speak to. These are absolutely controllable, and people have the right to try, as best they can, to control their own destiny. It is not enough for governments, people in this House, to control that destiny. People have to collectively, or sometimes individually if they are powerful enough, control their own destiny.

That is what is missing in this bill. You are treating these people, who are often poorly educated, who are often from outside this country, as if they have no destiny to control. They have a right as human beings to expect fair wages and good working conditions. They have a right to express that in any way they deem appropriate, not through some Mickey Mouse association, but from something they want to control and elect themselves, someone who will speak for them and who will do it right.

Mr Johnson: I just wanted to congratulate the member for York North on an excellent presentation and analysis of Bill 187. I might like, at some time, to further debate the member for Beaches-East York on the differences between mining and factories, and farming, because I know of many farming operations—I think particularly of beef operations—where an interruption would actually ruin production for a year and a half. I think there are great differences, and I think that farmers in my constituency would be quite disappointed if didn't point that out.

I was thinking that the member for York North forgot to point out the Liberal leadership, the McLeod-McGuinty leadership, crawling on their knees up Highway 11 to call on Jack Wilkinson, the leader of the Ontario Federation of Agriculture, quite a capable, dynamic leader, and I can imagine the reason. They wanted to try to explain to him why they all sat on their hands during first reading in this House. I would think Mr Wilkinson would have some questions for them, and I would love to be the fly on the wall to hear what kind of story the McLeod-McGuinty Liberals would tell that particularly respected leader in the north.

I did want to add my comments to the member for York North and to congratulate her on a very excellent presentation.

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): The government would have us believe that they care a great deal about agriculture and farmland and farmers across the province. But I can tell you, as a member from Thunder Bay—and my colleague from Thunder Bay-Atikokan will back me up in this—we certainly don't feel there is much concern being shown for agriculture in northwestern Ontario, with the impending closure of the Thunder Bay agricultural research station, which is happening this coming Thursday, October 31. It's been a battle we have been really fighting. Here we have one of the great stories of economic diversification in northwestern Ontario, something this government tells us they want us to promote and want to support, yet the agricultural research station, which has just been an extraordinary story from the point of view of new products, new soils, new soybean production, things that never could have happened before in our farmland—we have 238 farms in that area, in the Thunder Bay district. We have 27,000 acres that are under cultivation in the area. We have 27,000 other acres that could be used. Through the work of a gentleman named Gordon Scheifele, who has been heading up the agricultural research station, it's been just remarkable what has happened in terms of the future for agriculture in northwestern Ontario, and that's about to end. We are really full of despair about that. Certainly the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce have gotten up about this and asked the government to help. I have spoken to the Minister of Agriculture about it. She would explain to you that the funding comes through the University of Guelph, and their funding has been cut back. So they have made a decision to no longer fund the station.

But it's the government's responsibility and opportunity to support this agricultural research station. Certainly, we are pleading with Northern Development and Mines Minister Jim Wilson. We know there is lots of money in the heritage fund. We think that can be a way to keep this research station open. We believe it's vital to keep it open, we think it's incredibly important to keep it open and we believe that if the government really cared about agriculture in northwestern Ontario, they would find the small amount of money that is needed to keep that agricultural research station open in Thunder Bay.

The Acting Speaker: Response?

Mrs Munro: Thank you to the members from Thunder Bay-Atikokan, Beaches-East York, Perth-Middlesex and Thunder Bay-Superior North. My first comment would be to the member from Thunder Bay-Superior North in that a two-minute response is a response; that is, to the information that has been provided. I wasn't aware of any that was made.

To the member from Beaches-East York, I think that an effort to try to draw out an Oliver Twist kind of attitude toward the legislation frankly fails because of the fact that throughout the piece of legislation we're discussing this evening is the balance that is being presented here, the opportunity to recognize an individual's charter rights, the opportunity then to form an association and a balance, which the member from Thunder Bay-Atikokan referred to, that looks at what is essential to the preservation of agricultural viability on the one hand and ensuring the opportunity for employees to associate.

The comment that was made with regard to the number of injuries: I think I was very clear about the fact that one injury or fatality is one too many. The important thing to recognize here is the work done by the Farm Safety Association of Ontario and others to address the kinds of dangers that exist in the agricultural community as a workplace and to find methods to respond to them.

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): C'est un plaisir pour moi de prendre part à ce débat ce soir. C'est suite à la décision de la Cour suprême que l'on a dû procéder avec ce projet de loi 187, Loi visant à protéger les droits des employés agricoles. Ce projet de loi 187 pourrait avoir des conséquences négatives sur l'avenir et l'opération actuelle de nos fermes familiales. Avec certains amendements, je vais définitivement apporter mon appui à ce projet de loi.

Je voudrais apporter aussi une précision. J'ai écouté tout à l'heure la députée de Nickel Belt. Je comprends très bien sa situation lorsque nous parlons d'employés sur des fermes avec une quantité d'employés tels que des producteurs de tabac, pour un exemple. Je veux aussi préciser que la position que je prendrai ce soir ou demain, lorsque le vote sera demandé, c'est que j'appuie définitivement les corps syndicaux lorsque vient le temps de protéger l'employé.

N'eût été des syndicats, je pourrais dire que beaucoup de gens qui travaillent sur les chantiers de construction ne pourraient pas continuer à vivre adéquatement ni avoir une qualité de vie, puisque aujourd'hui nous savons que sur la construction, rendus à l'âge de 55 ans, nous avons à travailler maintenant 11 et 12 mois par année. Dans le passé, nous travaillions seulement six à huit mois par année mais aujourd'hui, avec les conditions que nous avons, nous devons travailler sur les chantiers de construction. C'est grâce aux syndicats que nous pouvons apporter une sécurité d'emploi à ces employés.

Mais je dois dire que lorsque je parle de fermes familiales en Ontario, la moyenne de vaches qui sont traitées par jour est de 51. La traite se fait en moyenne sur 51 vaches sur nos fermes laitières en Ontario. Si nous procédions à ce que la Cour suprême a décidé, je crois que nos fermiers ne pourraient plus continuer. Nous savons que de plus en plus, le nombre de fermes diminuent en Ontario. Je regarde dans ma circonscription pour un exemple.

Pour apporter plus d'attention aux élus du secteur urbain, j'ai demandé à plusieurs députés de venir passer une journée sur la ferme afin de comprendre davantage le travail et l'importance de la ferme familiale. La députée de Windsor-Ouest, Sandra Pupatello, lorsque je lui ai demandé de venir travailler sur la ferme, m'a dit, « Voyons, Jean-Marc, c'est tout automatisé maintenant. » Elle a su ce que c'était parce qu'à 4 h 30 le matin, on se lève et on ne peut pas aller se coucher avant 11 heures le soir. Alvin Curling, le député de Scarborough-Rouge River, m'a dit, « À Toronto, nous travaillons de 9 heures à 5 heures, mais ici c'est de 5 heures à 9 heures, l'inverse. Aussi, sur la ferme on doit aller travailler pour gagner notre déjeuner. Sur la ferme on doit travailler, aller déjeuner et retourner au travail. » Mario Sergio, le député de York-Ouest, a été travailler sur la ferme de Pierre Bercier à Ste Rose et il a compris ce que c'est, travailler sur la ferme.

On ne peut pas se permettre d'avoir une grève sur les fermes. Pour ceux qui sont conscients de la ferme laitière, une vache pour quelques jours peut attendre 20 minutes pour la traite. Pour quelques jours, 20 minutes est le maximum que l'on peut attendre pour la traite. Même à cinq minutes la vache commence à être nerveuse. Voyez-vous une grève sur une ferme familiale où on a un ou deux employés? Avoir une grève, quand l'employeur actuellement doit travailler sept jours par semaine? Maintenant c'est de 5 heures à 11 heures, et même à 2 heures du matin, puisqu'on doit procéder à trois traites par jour au lieu d'une ou deux, comme dans le passé.

Les agriculteurs dans ma région travaillent en étroite collaboration avec le Collège d'Alfred, qui est un campus de l'Université de Guelph. Encore une fois, je comprends très bien la situation de la députée de Nickel Belt. J'ai rencontré l'Union des cultivateurs franco-ontariens le lundi 21 octobre. Ils m'ont répondu par lettre, que j'ai reçue le 23 octobre, et je vais lire quelques paragraphes de cette lettre. Elle m'a été adressée par Alain Delorme, directeur général de l'Union des cultivateurs franco-ontariens. Il me dit :

« 1. Malgré que la loi, pour satisfaire la clientèle agricole, ne permet pas le droit de négociations collectives, il pourrait y avoir escalade vers des pouvoirs de négociations avec le temps, ou pire encore, des pouvoirs de négociations donnés par la cour, ce qui aurait pour effet de nuire considérablement aux opérations agricoles normales, très saisonnières et très fragiles reliées aux animaux, aux fruits et légumes et autres productions périssables. Les entreprises agricoles pourraient être très négativement affectées au niveau financier par une escalade éventuelle vers des pouvoirs de négociations collectives. Même les petites entreprises à employé unique pourraient éventuellement avoir à faire face à des revendications de régimes collectifs si leur employé décide de joindre les rangs d'une association de travailleurs.

« Le problème est que ces associations, même si elles n'ont pas présentement le pouvoir de négociations collectives, elles l'obtiendront avec le temps et les efforts qu'elles y mettront. À ce moment, tout le secteur agricole sera confronté à des revendications qui soit mettront les entreprises en péril ou soit pousseront les prix des denrées vers le haut. »

Mais, monsieur le Président, le deuxième point, l'autre point très important « qui est bon de souligner est celui des travailleurs saisonniers étrangers qui affluent vers l'Ontario au moment de la récolte. Ces gens se comptent par milliers et se retrouvent plus souvent qu'autrement dans des conditions de travail assez misérables. C'est-à-dire: sous le salaire minimum, conditions de travail difficiles et non sanitaires, longues heures de travail, et logeant à des endroits où les conditions sont moins que désirables. » Je peux dire même que ces personnes qu'il appelle des esclaves, qui sont sous la juridiction du fédéral, demeurent dans des endroits encore pires qu'en brousse de l'Afrique, parce que là-bas on a des conditions meilleures. « Je comprends alors pourquoi il y a un certain mouvement vers la syndicalisation et le droit de négociations collectives à l'intérieur des entreprises qui offrent ces conditions. »

Il m'a dit à considérer: « La solution ne serait-elle pas plutôt de se tourner vers une réglementation qui assurerait des conditions de travail et de rémunération minimums pour les travailleurs agricoles qui sont pour l'instant exclus du code des normes de travail. » C'est juste.

Merci, monsieur le Président.

The Acting Speaker: It being 9:30 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow afternoon.

The House adjourned at 2130.

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mercredi 30 octobre 2002

The House met at 1330.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH STATION

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): It is with great frustration but still some measure of hope that I address the Legislature today. As a northern member acutely conscious of the need for us to continually diversify our economy, I am appalled that the government of Ontario is doing nothing to stop the closure of the Thunder Bay agricultural research station scheduled for tomorrow.

This utterly flies in the face of economic logic because of the remarkable successes that have been the hallmark of this small but vital research facility. In its 12 years of operation, the farming sector has benefited enormously, making it possible for the northwest to dream about actually becoming a net exporter of grains in the future. The growth of soybeans, for example, a crop previously never imagined as a northwestern Ontario product, would never have gone forward without the research and advice of the station's staff. Yet the Minister of Agriculture has ignored our call for the minimal financial assistance needed to keep this facility open.

So we now turn to the Minister of Northern Development to provide us with the $200,000 needed—small potatoes, if you will—that will allow our agricultural sector in the northwest to continue to flourish and grow. Minister, this is very much about northern development and we expect you, as our advocate, to keep this facility open. You are well aware of the issue, as not only have I spoken to you about this, but the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce met with you about this vital manner during your visit to their annual meeting last month.

There is no argument about the enormous value of this facility. What we need now is for you to free up some dollars from the northern Ontario heritage fund to keep agricultural research in the northwest alive. We're at the 11th hour, but it is not too late. If you truly want to show your understanding for our needs in the northwest, you'll stop this closure now. It is simply the right thing to do.

FOODLAND ONTARIO AWARDS

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I'd like to take this opportunity to make mention of two grocery stores in my riding that have been recently honoured by the Ontario government with the annual distribution of Foodland Ontario awards. I'm proud to say that both Cayuga IGA and Caledonia Zehrs—these stores are in Haldimand county—garnered silver awards of merit recognizing excellence in promoting Ontario produce.

Across Ontario we obviously have some of the hardest-working farmers producing some of the highest-quality product in the world. However, there is competition in that world and it's important that we continue the efforts of all stakeholders—wholesalers, the grocers, as we mentioned here, Foodland Ontario and farmers themselves—to ensure that the consumer understands that when the Ontario name is on a product there is quality in each and every bite.

Through partnering with Foodland Ontario, retailers are able to become part of a successful marketing program that offers them a competitive edge. Based on research, there's a noted high degree of consumer trust in Ontario-grown produce. The Foodland Ontario symbol has tremendous recognition and consumers look for and ask for the Foodland Ontario logo by name.

Through their inspired attention to detail, and certainly a lot of hard work, these grocers, and of course their staff, like those at the Cayuga IGA and the Caledonia Zehrs, are showcasing the provinces' produce in a way that captures the consumer's eye.

CHILD CARE WORKER APPRECIATION DAY

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Today I had the opportunity to visit the Hester How Child Care Centre, where child care workers were recognized for their outstanding contributions as part of Child Care Worker Appreciation Day. The second annual Child Care Worker Appreciation Day is being marked today all across Ontario as many municipalities will acknowledge the contribution of child care workers within their communities.

Child care workers play a significant role in the early development of our most precious resource, our children. My leader, Dalton McGuinty, has made early child development a priority to ensure that the needs of our children and their caregivers are met.

This Best Start plan is the most ambitious early child development program that will be undertaken in the province, when a Liberal government will provide over 300,000 subsidized child care spaces in its first four-year term. Professional child care workers are a key component in our plan as many studies demonstrate that quality child care enhances our children's readiness to learn.

The success of our future tradespeople, doctors, teachers and business leaders depends on the quality care they will receive between the ages of zero and six years of age. The Liberal Party is committed to its Best Start plan for Ontario's children. On behalf of Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal caucus, I am very pleased to recognize the great work that thousands of child care workers in Ontario do today.

JEAN ACHMATOWICZ-MacLEOD

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I rise in the House today to pay tribute to a truly gracious and wonderful constituent of Durham riding, Jean Achmatowicz-MacLeod.

Jean was named to the Order of Canada. She was amongst 40 distinguished Canadians honoured recently at the investiture ceremonies in Halifax, October 26.

Jean Achmatowicz-MacLeod is a lifelong volunteer in local, provincial and national organizations. However, her main focus has been on the provision of health care quality. Indeed, she is one of Durham region's strongest advocates for equal access to quality health care. She is the former chair of the board of the Oshawa General Hospital and in that capacity she led the hospital through challenges of amalgamation. She was elected as a member of the Lakeridge Health Corporation board and also served on the board of Cancer Care Ontario.

She is a dedicated advocate for the rights of persons to live with mental illness. As a chair of the mental health implementation task force for central-east Ontario, she has worked hard and tirelessly on behalf of patients requiring institutional care. She has a talent for finding solutions to difficult issues and she is frequently in contact with Durham MPPs to express these concerns on behalf of the community.

I am pleased to inform the House of the investiture of Ms Jean Achmatowicz-MacLeod and to pay a tribute to her achievements. She is an outstanding advocate on health issues, a dedicated volunteer, leader and inspiration to others. This is truly recognition that is well deserved. I would like to say thank you to Jean for her distinguished service to our community.

HOSPITAL RESTRUCTURING

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I would like to invite the Minister of Health to tour the four hospitals of the Quinte Healthcare Corp. We can start in Trenton: a wonderful community hospital struggling financially. We could drive half an hour from there to Picton: wonderful hospital built by the citizens. From Picton we'll travel on to the Belleville site—that's about another half-hour to drive there—great hospital but underfunded. From Belleville we would then drive for an hour and a half to the Bancroft Hospital: a great vital community hospital.

Now here's the rub: we'll have been on the road two and a half hours but according to the minister we're still in the same spot where we started. The minister says all of those four buildings are in the same location, and they're funded as one large hospital. That ain't too bright. If we think about it, four separate hospitals need to be funded as four separate hospitals. It costs money to transfer bedding, it costs money to transfer food, it costs money to transfer information from one hospital site to another. The hospital in Belleville is an hour and a half away from the branch just down the road.

Please give a little respect and recognize that rural Ontario needs medical service as much as the large urban areas, and use a little common sense. We told you three years ago, two years ago and last year that these are four separate hospital sites and should be funded accordingly. Minister, do the right thing finally and fund Quinte Healthcare Corp for their real costs, not your pretend world that they're all in one city.

CHILD CARE WORKER APPRECIATION DAY

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): On behalf of the New Democratic Party, I am very pleased to acknowledge that today is the second annual Child Care Worker Appreciation Day. We want to say thanks to those incredible early childhood educators, primarily women, who provide tremendous early learning and care to our most precious resource—our children.

Over 38 Ontario municipalities have passed proclamations to recognize the valuable contribution being made by well-trained early childhood educators in our communities. Ontario child care workers shape the social, emotional, physical and cognitive development of our youngest citizens. They support Ontario families by providing safe, high-quality child care so that parents can participate in the Ontario economy. Child care workers provide an essential public service, and Ontario can't work without them.

If this government truly wanted to show its appreciation to child care workers, it would pay these workers the proxy pay equity they deserve. But this government has shown disdain for these workers by cancelling proxy pay equity in 1996. When the Divisional Court ruled against the government, this government then capped proxy pay equity back to December 1998. These workers are now in court trying to get what they are owed from the government. This capping makes a mockery of this government's alleged commitment to children. Today, on this day, this government should pay proxy pay equity to child care workers in Ontario.

CHRONIC OBSTRUCTIVE PULMONARY DISEASE

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): I rise today to remind everyone of a terrible disease that is reaching epidemic proportions. According to the Ontario Lung Association, this disease kills one person every hour in Canada. The disease is called chronic obstructive pulmonary disease, or COPD. It is an umbrella term for two major breathing diseases: chronic bronchitis and emphysema.

Currently 3.1% of the population in Ontario has been formally diagnosed with COPD—that is, 300,000 people who are having difficulty breathing, many of them suffering from irreversible lung damage and finding it difficult to perform simple activities without having to take a break and catch their breath.

By 2020, COPD will be the third leading cause of death worldwide.

Sadly, COPD is almost entirely preventable, with cigarette smoking accounting for up to 83% to 90% of all cases.

In the members' gallery today, I am pleased to recognize Mr Alan McFarlane from the Ontario Lung Association, and Patricia Robertson.

In the spirit of Halloween, I would like to encourage all members and their staff to attend an Ontario Lung Association event called Unmasking the Face of COPD this evening at 5 o'clock in the legislative dining room. Together we can learn more about preventing and treating this devastating disease.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): Many parts of the world have their great myths. Scotland has the Loch Ness monster; Nepal has the abominable snowman. Here in Ontario, the NDP is spreading another myth: that Ontario can just hand its hydro problems back to the government-owned monopoly and all will be cured.

Today, we have the worst of all possibilities. The so-called open market has a supply monopoly: Ontario Power Generation. OPG is 100% owned by this government, OPG controls three quarters of our power generation and OPG consistently fails to get enough supply on-line to keep prices low, thanks to failures like Pickering A. The result is not enough supply and skyrocketing prices.

The NDP's response is based on myth. NDP myth would throw out new suppliers we need to get prices down. NDP myth would close the border to electricity at a time when we don't have enough supply. That means a major crunch in the summer and winter when demand is highest. NDP myth would regulate electricity Ontario simply doesn't have because the NDP and the Conservatives have failed to invest in supply. NDP myth would replace high hydro rates with higher debt and taxes and, we think, higher rates even still.

Howard on hydro is another NDP myth, like public auto insurance. The failure to fix today's problems is the Tories' fault. The people who caused it were the New Democrats.

NEW DOCTORS IN STRATFORD

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): I rise today to welcome two new doctors to the city of Stratford, Dr Stirling Keizer and Dr Heather Keizer. Stirling is a family practitioner and Heather is a psychiatrist.

Coming from Halifax, the Keizers could have gone anywhere in the world, and in fact had an interesting offer from Kentucky. As an unpaid commercial, I just wanted to let you know that Dr Keizer is looking for patients. They chose Ontario and Stratford, and we're delighted to have them in our community. There are any number of advantages to locating in southwestern Ontario, and Stratford offers a warm welcome, good schools and a good medical profession in an atmosphere where it's possible to balance raising a young family with pursuing a rewarding career.

The doctors, staff and administration at Stratford General Hospital played a key role in the Keizers' decision to come to Stratford. I'd like to commend the Stratford hospital's administrator, Andrew Williams, for his skill and judgment in highlighting what our area has to offer.

I also want to commend my colleague the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care for everything he and his ministry are doing to ensure that doctor recruitment and retention remain a top priority of our health care system.

Again, please join me in welcoming the Keizers and their children to Stratford, and in wishing them the best success in their newly chosen home.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that today the Clerk received the eighth report of the standing committee on government agencies. Pursuant to standing order 106(e), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

VISITORS

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like all members of the House to welcome Mr Bob Kerwin and his son Eric. Bob is the father of Pierre, one of our pages. They're in the members' gallery.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I want to call all members' attention to the west gallery where Kevin Quach, who served as a page in the last group but didn't have time to have lunch with me then, has come back, not only to have lunch but to spy on the new group of pages.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): We welcome our friend back.

Mr Alvin Curling (Scarborough-Rouge River): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: It is to recognize one of the brightest schools we have in Ontario, Henry Kelsey school. There are numbers of them on both sides. They're here to observe the wonderful behaviour of their parliamentarians, with their principal, Mr Iron.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA COMMISSION DE L'ÉNERGIE DE L'ONTARIO

Mr Crozier moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 197, An Act to amend the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998 to require notice to consumers where there is a rate increase in energy prices / Projet de loi 197, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1998 sur la Commission de l'énergie de l'Ontario pour exiger qu'un préavis soit donné aux consommateurs lors de l'augmentation des prix de l'énergie.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): This bill, if passed, would require that when there are increases to the rate for the sale of gas to customers, the order shall provide that the increased rate does not apply until after the gas distributors and storage companies have provided consumers with 30 days' written notice of the increase. If, in approving or fixing a rate for the retailing of electricity under section 78 or in approving the rate for the delivery of electricity to rural or remote consumers under section 79, the rate for consumers increases, the order of the board shall provide that the increased rate does not apply until after the distributor has provided consumers with 30 days' written notice of the increase. This would give consumers, particularly those who are receiving variable rate increases, the opportunity to select their choices for fixed rates, for example.

KEEPING THE PROMISE FOR A STRONG ECONOMY ACT (BUDGET MEASURES), 2002 LOI DE 2002 SUR LE RESPECT DE L'ENGAGEMENT D'ASSURER UNE ÉCONOMIE SAINTE (MESURES BUDGÉTAIRES)

Mrs Ecker moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 198, An Act to implement Budget measures and other initiatives of the Government / Projet de loi 198, Loi mettant en oeuvre certaines mesures budgétaires et d'autres initiatives du gouvernement.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The minister for a short statement?

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): If passed, the Keeping the Promise for a Strong Economy Act (Budget Measures), 2002, would implement a number of initiatives announced in the 2002 budget. These include steps to improve investor confidence and reforms to Ontario's automobile insurance system. In our ongoing efforts to ensure existing government policies remain current and effective, the bill would also implement amendments to clarify provisions in key statutes and introduce a preliminary framework for tax-incentive zones and municipal opportunity bonds.

Once in effect, this bill will benefit a broad range of taxpayers at all income levels, all business sectors and all regions of the province.

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I seek unanimous consent to put the following motion:

That the Minister of Finance be directed by this House to give a ministerial statement with respect to the act which she just tabled to outline why the government is not proceeding with its tax cuts, to more clearly define what is in the bill, and to allow the opposition the opportunity to respond to what can only be considered a major piece of legislation.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): On a point of order, Speaker: That's passing strange, this point of order from the member opposite who last week heard about the first reading of a bill and didn't know anything about it, but apparently he knows everything about this bill, and it's first reading again.

The Speaker: Just a second. I will ask for unanimous consent. Is there unanimous consent? I'm afraid I heard some noes.

KEEPING WATER IN PUBLIC HANDS ACT, 2002 LOI DE 2002 VISANT À MAINTENIR L'EAU DANS LE DOMAINE PUBLIC

Mr Caplan moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 199, An Act to prevent the sale of municipally-owned water works / Projet de loi 199, Loi visant à empêcher la vente de stations de purification de l'eau dont les municipalités sont propriétaires.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): Retaining public ownership of water utilities is fundamental to protecting drinking water. The Keeping Water in Public Hands Act evolves from Justice O'Connor's recommendations from the Walkerton inquiry. He said, "In not recommending the sale of municipal water systems to the private sector, my conclusion is based on several considerations: the essentially local character of water services; the natural-monopoly characteristics of the water industry; the importance of maintaining accountability to local residents; and the historical role of municipalities in this field." That's found in part two of his report, on page 323.

The government has had two major opportunities to act on this warning from Justice O'Connor in the Walkerton report, and they haven't done that. This bill will do it. This bill, of course, will not prohibit municipalities from entering into partnerships relating to the construction and operation of their utilities.

INVESTOR PROTECTION ACT (BUSINESS CORPORATIONS AND PUBLIC ACCOUNTANCY), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA PROTECTION DES INVESTISSEURS (SOCIÉTÉS PAR ACTIONS ET COMPTABILITÉ PUBLIQUE)

Mr Hampton moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 200, An Act to amend the Business Corporations Act and the Public Accountancy Act to protect investors / Projet de loi 200, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les sociétés par actions et la Loi sur la comptabilité publique pour protéger les investisseurs.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): At the heart of the Arthur Andersen-Enron scandal was a conflict of interest. Andersen made more money offering consulting and related services to Enron than it made from properly auditing the company's books. We want to ensure that this kind of conflict of interest is no longer permitted in Ontario. It's not good enough just to hand off to the champion of deregulation, Mr Ron Daniels, and ask him to think about accountancy. We need to eliminate the conflict of interest in accountancy, and this bill will do that.

MOTORCYCLE AWARENESS WEEK ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA SEMAINE DE SENSIBILISATION À LA MOTOCYCLETTE

Mr Stewart moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 201, An Act to proclaim Motorcycle Awareness Week / Projet de loi 201, Loi proclamant la Semaine de sensibilisation à la motocyclette.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): This bill is all about safety and awareness. If the bill is proclaimed, it proclaims the week beginning on the first Monday in May of each year as Motorcycle Awareness Week.

MOTIONS

APPOINTMENT OF PRESIDING OFFICERS

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I seek unanimous consent to move a motion without notice with respect to the rotation of the Deputy Speakers.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I move that notwithstanding the order of the House dated October 29, 2001, Bert Johnson, member for the electoral district of Perth-Middlesex, be appointed Deputy Speaker and Chair of the Committee of the whole House; Mike Brown, member for the electoral district of Algoma-Manitoulin, be appointed First Deputy Chair of the Committee of the whole House; and David Christopherson, member for the electoral district of Hamilton West, be appointed Second Deputy Chair of the Committee of the whole House.

The Speaker: Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

ORAL QUESTIONS

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): My question is to the Minister of Energy and it concerns electricity prices. Minister, can you help the electricity consumers of Ontario understand the following: in late May—early June, billing period of May 29—June 4, well after the market opened, during that week electricity demand averaged 16,232 megawatts and the price for that week in the open market this past spring averaged about 3.35 cents per kilowatt hour. Now we get into a similar situation for the first week of October, this month. We see electricity demand averaging 16,434 megawatts and a price that averaged, during that week, 5.28 cents a kilowatt hour, an increase of approximately 60% in price at a time when demand is virtually the same as it was four months earlier.

Can you explain to the electricity consumers why the price has gone up by over 60% for a demand that is about the same?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): The member opposite talked about the first week of October and demand being in the neighbourhood of 16,000 megawatts. The peak load in the first week was certainly always in excess of 17,000, even as much as 20,000, 21,000. I would indicate that in the spring we had a very good runoff. There was a lot of water available for our hydroelectric stations right across the province of Ontario. That, coupled with a low amount of maintenance, certainly I would suspect contributed to the lower cost of electricity.

We had the hottest summer on record in 50 years, and that obviously meant we had less rainfall, which means our hydroelectric dams did not have the same amount of water that they would have had available in May. Depending on the given hour or a given five-minute interval, depending on which plant in the province of Ontario, be it that one operated by Ontario Power Generation or be it operated by an alternative generator—it depends whether it's a gas plant, like a Lennox, which would often be a price-setter if it was required, or if it was more baseload in nuclear or in fossil fuels.

Mr Conway: I want to be clear. I'm talking about the summer. We're not talking about July, August or September. I'm talking about comparing apples with apples. I'm talking about the shoulder seasons of the spring and fall, when demand is approximately the same, around 16,500, 17,000, 17,500 megawatts. In the spring, when we faced that kind of demand, price—and you were bragging about it—was down around 3.5 cents. In this part of the shoulder season, when demand is the same, well below the summer peak, around 17,000 or 18,000 megawatts, all of a sudden, demand, with the same mix of generation, is 60% higher at 5.2 and 5.3 cents.

Electricity consumers in Ontario want to know, since your company, Ontario Power Generation, is the dominant supplier—over 70% of this market is supplied by Ontario Power Generation: what possible explanation is there for, in these shoulder seasons, May, June and October of this year, same demand, same suppliers, price has increased in the fall over the spring by approximately 60%?

Hon Mr Baird: Again, the member opposite talks about 16,000 load. The peak load in the first week of October, let me say: October 1, 21,500; October 2, 20,000; October 3, 19,000; October 4, 19,000; October 5, 17,000. I did indicate to the member opposite two particular factors off the top of my head. One is with respect to how much water, which is the fuel that runs the turbines. In the spring, when you have a huge amount of water from the winter runoff, you have more water at our various hydroelectric dams, which do represent about a third of the capacity in the province of Ontario. When you go through a hot summer in July and August, you obviously have less water in September and October. The loss of some of that water certainly has an effect on price, because what we see is we have to use some of the price-setting plants in the province of Ontario, such as gas at Lennox, which is not one of the more efficient operations which we'd like to see brought on-line—that, coupled with the facts on imports. We also had to do some scheduled maintenance when we ran the system all-out in the months of July and August.

Mr Conway: I thought you'd get to maintenance, and I just really appreciate the opportunity to talk about maintenance. Remember, prices are up in the shoulder seasons, spring and fall. These fall prices, with the same demand, are up 60%—not 5%, not 10%: 60%. May and June it's averaging—and I'm not talking about peaks; I'm talking about averages during these shoulder seasons, May and June—about 16,000 or 17,000 megs, 3.5 cents; averages this fall, October, consumption around 16,000, 17,000, 17,500, the price has gone from an average of 3.5 to 5.2. It's up 60%.

The California regulator said the following: "It is impossible to determine whether or not a declared forced outage is in fact an actual outage. It is impossible to determine whether a declared outage occurs because the plant is actually down for maintenance or whether in fact it has occurred because the generator wants to manipulate the market to make profit."

Since the dominant player in this marketplace today is Ernie Eves's company, Ontario Power Generation, controlling over 70% of the supply, are you prepared to say to me today, given this 60% increase in the commodity price, October over May, that your company, Ontario Power Generation, is not in fact gouging Ontario consumers to a very substantial degree?

Hon Mr Baird: I'll say two things: (1) water is cheaper; (2) gas is more expensive, and often in September and October the Lennox plant has set the price. That is demonstratively more expensive than October.

The member opposite has been in this place and has distinguished himself in 27 years of serving the people of Ontario well. If the member opposite has a shred of evidence to the claims he is suggesting, I would challenge him to put that evidence before the House and to bring it to the attention of the Market Surveillance Panel, as would be the responsible thing to do. If he has no evidence and is just making these claims up, I would suggest it's not advisable.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question.

Mr Conway: New question: same minister, same subject. The California regulator said in 2001, after all the pain that they had been through, that one of the things he warned everybody else, including Californians, is to beware with these generators who tell you they're taking the plant down for maintenance because they might just as easily be doing it to manipulate the market, to drive up prices and increase their profit.

Your company controls 70% of this market, and I repeat, prices are up in the shoulder season, October over May, this year by something like 60%. My question is this: yesterday Toronto Hydro filed with the energy board a request to change the way in which they are going to bill their customers, and they said they had to do so for a variety of reasons, not the least of which is the following—quoting directly from their submission to the energy board yesterday—“In 2001, prior to market opening, the highest monthly power bill received by Toronto Hydro was for $154 million. To date, in the period since market opening, May 1, 2002, our highest monthly bill was for $276 million.”

So there you've got one of the largest utilities saying that it is being put in a very difficult and compromised position because their commodity price, most of which is controlled by your company, OPG, has nearly doubled. What do you say to the consumers of Toronto Hydro as to what relief is in store for them because your company, OPG, is driving their bill through the roof?

Hon Mr Baird: Toronto Hydro, as did three other local distribution companies in their request to the Ontario Energy Board, did request that they go on a fixed rate as opposed to the other 90 local distribution companies who did go to the variable rate. In May and June customers paid more than they were required to pay and in months after weren't paying the full market rate.

Toronto Hydro wants to change their position on this, as they're rightly entitled to do. They've made an application to join the other 90 local distribution companies across the province of Ontario, and the Ontario Energy Board will hear that concern.

Mr Conway: Hundreds of thousands of Toronto Hydro customers would want me to ask this: a few months from now, in January, February, March, April 2003, hundreds of thousands of Toronto Hydro customers are going to get a very nasty surprise. They are going to get hydro bills that in the first six months of 2003, I guarantee you, will be substantially higher, hundreds of dollars higher than they've been paying in the last few months. In addition to that, by my calculation, the average residential customer served by Toronto Hydro is going to get a retroactive bill of probably in the neighbourhood of $200, and it may very well have interest charges attached to it.

Minister of Energy, what are you prepared to say today will be offered by the Ernie Eves government to relieve the pain of these electricity customers in Toronto and millions of other customers around the province, including small businesses, who are being crucified on your hydro policy?

Hon Mr Baird: Customers of Toronto Hydro and three other local distribution companies do have a variance account. We have been working very hard directly with Toronto Hydro to see what opportunities could be available to ensure that customers could perhaps get the rebate under the market mechanism at the same time that they are required to settle their variance account. That would be helpful for consumers, and the members on this side of the House who represent the city of Toronto have certainly been very supportive of that approach.

Mr Conway: Your members, and I won't embarrass them by quoting them by name, are saying, “Please, give us relief, give us a cap, give us a freeze.” Listen, hundreds of thousands of electricity customers in Toronto have yet to feel the real pain. Toronto Hydro is saying very clearly in its submission that the real problem here is skyrocketing commodity prices that are controlled by the Ernie Eves company, Ontario Power Generation. In addition to that, and I repeat, Toronto Hydro is saying they've got a monthly bill now for bulk power purchases that's $120 million higher than their highest monthly bill ever before. They're also telling us they've got receivables of about $325 million more on the books in September than they've ever had before.

Consumers in Toronto—residential, business and industrial—will want to know, Minister, what specific plans of relief you have for these customers, given the pain they are about to experience after Christmas.

Hon Mr Baird: We're working with all the members of the Electricity Distributors Association. I had a meeting last evening with their chair and yesterday morning with one of their vice-presidents. We met last week. We certainly indicated our strong willingness, with the Independent Market Operator and the Ontario Energy Board, to find a more workable solution in terms of the payment periods that all LDCs experience. We've also indicated to those three or four LDCs that made the decision themselves to go to a fixed price that where commodity prices have not gone up, like the city of Toronto, we've made a commitment to treat them all the same. If there is any assistance we could provide or a policy change that would be advantageous, we'd be prepared to do so.

I noticed the member opposite's own leader said, “Rates may very well have to go up. We've been getting a bit of a free ride here in terms of the debt that the now-defunct Ontario Hydro has amassed.” The member opposite was quoted in the Ottawa Citizen, “Conway said Ontarians paid artificially low electricity prices for years while the provincially owned power utility piled up ... debt.” This is the one I like: “Let me be clear: we need a competitive marketplace.” Who said that? The official spokesman of the Leader of the Opposition.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of Energy. Your hydro deregulation disaster is about to hit hydro consumers in Toronto with an extra hydro bill. People who have been paying their already elevated hydro bills are about to be hit with an extra bill for $200 a month. The problem is, there are all kinds of people in Toronto who don't have an extra $200 in their pockets to pay for your hydro-electricity screw-up. Maybe you can tell the people of Toronto now what happens to those folks who don't have that extra $200 to pay for your hydro screw-up.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): The leader of the third party said in the first part of his question that they were going to have to pay, because of this, an extra $200 per month. Then he went on to clarify that he was suggesting it would be a one-time payment of $200. I don't know whether that actually reflects the average variance account for a residential consumer. I can say that we have been working with Toronto Hydro, and we treat any LDC the same—those other LDCs that are on a fixed-rate plan—in terms of what relief we could provide in terms of the rebate coming out at a proximate time that would ensure this didn't happen, that they weren't hit with the increases in electricity rates in three or four months all at once. We've been working very closely with officials at Toronto Hydro to try to find a solution, and thus far it has been a successful effort.

Mr Hampton: A successful effort when people are going to hit with an extra bill that says, "Despite the fact you've been paying for your hydro, we need you to kick in an extra $200. Oh, by the way, your bills from now on are going to be substantially higher again?" That's what you call successful?

It's not just confined to Toronto. This is a submission to the Independent Market Operator by the Electricity Distributors Association and the municipal utilities of Hamilton, Orangeville, Thunder Bay, London, Kingston and Whitby.

The submission says that thanks to the hydro deregulation rules you've put in place, many of these municipal utilities are in danger of going bankrupt. They don't have the financial wherewithal to cover all the costs. These utilities warn of a "critical and irreversible event." Let me give you the code for that: it means the lights go out. Deregulation threatens more than a dozen municipal utilities across this province, and they're very clear: they won't be able to stay in business.

Will you admit that wherever you go in this province, your deregulation fiasco is causing one nasty surprise after another, and will you admit it's time to kill this very destructive experiment?

Hon Mr Baird: It won't surprise the member opposite that I won't accept what he's had to say.

I can say we're dealing with two issues with respect to local distribution companies. One is the four local distribution companies that go on a fixed rate, where the cost of generation has not gone up. I've indicated that we're working with them to ensure that when the rebate is remitted to the consumer, this variance account might be settled at the same time so that they're not experiencing increases of a few months all stacked up together.

We're doing that proactively, because I certainly know a good number of members in my caucus are concerned about this issue and brought this issue to my attention long before the leader of the third party and his band.

The second issue comes with respect to local distribution companies. There are concerns with respect to the time frame in which the generators must be required to remit their payments, and the role the IMO plays. There is a working group between the IMO and the Ontario Energy Board. I've gotten directly involved in meeting with the Electricity Distributors Association to try to bring the parties together to come to a more reasonable solution, and I suspect we'll be able to find one.

Mr Hampton: I want to read from the first two paragraphs of this submission. It says, "Please find attached an urgent submission." Then, in the second paragraph, "This submission is made to address the immediate and urgent adverse financial impacts on local distribution utilities." We're talking about local utilities that have to go out and borrow millions of dollars at high interest to cover your hydro deregulation fiasco. Then that gets passed on to the consumers in the form of higher bills.

Minister, some of your MPPs have started to figure it out. They've started to figure out that this is both a financial disaster for Ontario and a political disaster for the Conservative government. When are the lights going to go on for you? When are you going to figure out that something has gone wrong and cancel deregulation? How long is it going to take?

Hon Mr Baird: We are working with the local distribution companies to find a solution that's balanced, that recognizes the credit lines of the Independent Electricity Market Operator, that recognizes the requirements of generators and local distribution companies.

The leader of the third party apparently was not able to sign up any new members to his hothead club. He has been prancing around Ontario on his emission-shooting bus to try to sign up members to a hothead club. I didn't know what a hothead was so I looked it up in the dictionary. The definition of a hothead is someone who is "reckless, impetuous and irresponsible," and I couldn't agree more that he should be the leader of that club.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question.

Mr Hampton: I could have saved you the time. Jim Wilson is the definition of a hothead. I could have told you that.

I want to ask you about your plan and the Liberals' plan. Both the Conservatives and the Liberals say that as Ontario encounters an electricity shortage, the private sector will build the generating stations. Well, today, Sither Energies, a New York-based company, just announced they are not going to build two proposed generating stations in Ontario. In fact, while you and the Liberals boast that the private companies, the profit companies, will build new plants, Sither is saying they're not going to build 1,700 megawatts of new power in Ontario.

We're short of power. The IMO is warning of energy blackouts and brownouts. You and the Liberals both have the same answer, except that your answer is running out of gas.

Will you admit, Minister, the private sector isn't answering your call and the Liberals' call to build the generating stations we need?

Hon Mr Baird: I will agree with the leader of the third party. He is right: the Ontario Liberals have been consistent supporters of moving to an open marketplace. I heard that message. I didn't heed the call to send them $350 when Sean Conway and Dalton McGuinty went trolling on Bay Street for bucks to help support their privatization plans.

The member opposite speaks of one enterprise in the province of Ontario. Apparently they have a concern that Pickering A is coming on-line too quickly and that that would perhaps give it overcapacity. It's not a concern that I have, with my many concerns.

Mr Hampton: Minister, this is no small matter, because the IMO is warning about brownouts and blackouts. And the reality is that Sithe Energies was part of your answer and the Liberals' answer, and now it has run out of gas.

So I think it's incumbent upon you: what is your alternative strategy? Do you have a conservation strategy whereby we can conserve the use of electricity? Do you have a green energy strategy whereby we can bring on wind power? Are you prepared to bring on more public sector supply of electricity? Since the private sector that you and the Liberals talk about has run out of gas, what's the alternative plan, Minister? People across Ontario deserve to know.

Hon Mr Baird: The member opposite raises two issues. He talks about supply coming on-line. I take the concerns that the Independent Market Operator raises very seriously about the need to bring more supply on-line. I know that TransAlta would bring their supply on-line, I believe in the early part of next year. We know that Coral Energy and the project at Brighton Beach will bring on additional supply.

The member opposite talks about a green strategy for bringing wind power on-line. Under the New Democratic Party, if someone approached the government and said, "I want to build a windmill to help generate electricity," they would have been told, "It's illegal." And the member opposite wouldn't have allowed that power on the grid.

But there are a number of projects around the province. Huron Wind is going to be opening up five turbines, with 1.8 megawatts each, this fall, and that will be good news.

The member opposite did cite the concerns of the Independent Electricity Market Operator. In their 18-month outlook, dated September 24, the definitive guide on supply, it says, "The energy production capability is generally expected to be well above energy demand levels in each month of the outlook period."

ENERGY CONTRACTS

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): My question is to the same minister on the same subject of electricity prices, and I'd like everybody's attention. Minister—

Interjections.

Mr Conway: I'm sorry. I apologize. I take that back. I apologize.

Minister, it's about what you and your company have been doing. Your company—our company—Hydro One, signed up about 200,000 people to electricity contracts before they sold the whole portfolio a few months ago to EPCOR, another company. Now, those 200,000 people who signed those fixed-rate contracts with your company, signed a contract that had buried in it the following language: "Rebate: In order to receive a fixed rate, I, the undersigned, hereby assign to the company"—Ernie Eves' company, Hydro One—"the benefit of any market wholesale rebate arising out of this agreement" and the IMO and OPG shall be so directed to cause your rebate to be given from me to you, Hydro One.

There are 200,000 people in Ontario, including my 86-year-old father, who signed contracts with your company. Now they find out that your company didn't tell them that buried in the fine print was a condition that said if there is a rebate, the rebate is assigned to Ernie Eves' company, Hydro One.

What are you going to say to those 200,000 people who were put in that predicament by your company, Hydro One?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): In the open marketplace of which the member opposite has been a consistent supporter—his words, not mine—people in Ontario have a choice. They can sign a fixed-rate contract for a set amount, which provides them with some security that that will be the price they will pay. This is not dissimilar to a mortgage, where some people, just for the security, would like to know what their mortgage rate will be rather than going at a variable rate. This is the case for many families right across the province. With some fixed-rate contracts, the rebate will flow directly to you as the consumer. With others, you assign that rebate to your retailer. If rates are 8.3 cents one month, in September, and you signed a flat-rate contract at 5.5 cents or six cents, that is the security you got, and that is a consumer issue for people in Ontario.

Mr Conway: Months ago, friends, hundreds of thousands of people, many of them old people, many of them on fixed incomes, were confronted on their front porch by representatives of Ontario Hydro who told them, "Sign up with us, your supplier, and we will protect you from the uncertainties of the marketplace."

Nobody said anything about a rebate; nobody said anything about assigning a rebate from the customer to Ernie Eves's company, Hydro One. Hundreds of thousands of people are going to find out next spring and summer that the Ontario government's company bamboozled them and took from them a rebate that might offer some protection from the skyrocketing prices that are being caused by a gouging monopolist also owned and controlled by Ernie Eves.

Why, Minister, should any consumer worried about the pain of your electricity policy, straight out of professional wrestling, feel it is going to offer them any relief and any protection?

Hon Mr Baird: Let me talk to the member opposite. There's a variable rate, and that means they go up and down, and there's a fixed rate, and those remain constant. Consumers in the province have the right to take that fixed rate if it provides them with some greater security. They are in a sense buying that security, an insurance policy, if you will. Many people in the province of Ontario lock in their mortgages for five years so that they won't have to go to bed at night worrying about interest rates going to 10%, 12%, 14% or even 20%, as they have in my lifetime. Some consumers have signed contracts where the rebate is payable to them, and others will sign rebates where it's assigned to others.

But Dalton McGuinty said on this issue, "We believe you've got to go toward deregulation. That's the way to bring this to heel. That's the way to introduce real competition." They say one thing when it comes to opening the market and another thing when the reality hits.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question. The member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale.

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): Mr Speaker, my question is actually to the Minister of Finance, and I think I may forgo it until she is back.

The Speaker: I think it's only the leaders' questions we can step down. I'll check. Stop the clock for a quick minute, please.

Yes, I'm afraid only the leaders' questions can be stepped down. There was some confusion. We'll go ahead with the member for Nipissing, then.

SMART GROWTH

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs. I was pleased to see our government launch the Ontario Smart Growth initiative back in 2001. As we all know—

Interjections.

Mr McDonald: Mr Speaker, I didn't yell across at them when they were asking their questions.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member is right. The member for Nipissing has the floor. Give him some attention, please.

Sorry, and I thank the member for his help.

Mr McDonald: Thank you, Mr Speaker. As we all know, Smart Growth is a new way of thinking about our growth. It asks us to look at the big picture, to look ahead some 15 or 30 years. It asks us to coordinate our decisions today on public investment, infrastructure, transportation and planning a secure, healthy future. Minister, could you please elaborate on how we are going to manage the anticipated growth in Ontario through this Smart Growth plan?

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I'd like to thank the member from Nipissing for that insightful question. He's right, this is an exciting time. We need to have a big picture of where we're going to go. The province of Ontario's population has grown by 2.5 million people in the last 15 to 20 years, and it's projected conservatively to grow the same amount in the next 15 to 20 years. We need to get a plan that gets out ahead of this growth so that we can welcome it. We need the growth for our standard of living. We also want to have the three priorities that we consulted on adhered to: a healthy pro-growth agenda that's good for the environment and good for our communities.

To get the details of this, we set up five panels. The central Ontario panel, which you're probably familiar with, has Chair Hazel McCallion, municipal representatives, environmentalists, and people from industry and business to give a consensus to what this growth plan should look like.

Mr McDonald: Thank you, Minister, for your response. Could you please share with my constituents what will happen if we do not adequately plan for future growth and why this initiative is so important?

Hon Mr Hodgson: To the member from Nipissing, that's a really good question. In some parts of Ontario, we haven't had growth distributed equally or evenly across the province. In northern Ontario, in communities like yours, we want to attract more growth, get more jobs in those communities. We need the infrastructure there to accommodate that growth and the climate to create those jobs.

In southern Ontario you're starting to see the manifestation of some of the growth we've experienced in the last 15 to 20 years. Gridlock is probably the most frustrating aspect of that. It's hard on the environment. Cars travelling at 80 kilometres an hour have certain air emissions. If they decrease their speed to 50 kilometres, those air emissions double. If it goes to 30 kilometres an hour, they triple. Gridlock is totally the worst thing for the environment. In terms of productivity and lost revenue for our economy, it's estimated to be $2 billion. So we need to have ways to manage the growth we've got and also welcome more growth to this province, and we need a consensus in order to be able to go ahead with that.

ENERGY CONTRACTS

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): My question is to the Minister of Energy. Much has been made by the Premier and the Minister of Energy about the relief that this rebate on high bills is going to provide. Nearly a million fixed-rate contracts have been signed by people in Ontario with marketers. About 200,000 of those contracts involved our company, Hydro One. Most of the fixed-rate contracts, unknown to the people who signed them, signed away the rebate months ago. So the rebate that is going to be paid is going to be a benefit to the marketer, not to the consumer.

But I want to come back to the Minister of Energy about his company, Hydro One. Minister, you understand that when Hydro One representatives showed up at the door, they showed up with none of the details. They didn't tell these old people on fixed incomes that there was going to be a rebate. They didn't even show them the contract. They said simply this: "We're from Ontario Hydro. We are here to protect you. Trust us. Sign here."

I would argue that your company, in most of these cases, broke your own retailers' code of conduct. What relief are you going to provide to the 200,000 people in Ontario who in good faith trusted your company, Hydro One, only to be bamboozled, gouged and ripped off by them?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): The member opposite stood in his place and said they didn't show them anything, they didn't even show them a contract, and then he tells me that they showed it to them to sign it. Obviously it's tremendously important for all consumers, whether it's on this issue or anything else they undertake as consumers, to read the clauses. We brought in Bill 58 this past June, which will allow consumers even greater options to review things and even requiring issues like reconfirmation to be there.

I suspect some in the province of Ontario would find it rather odd, though, that if, for example, in the month of September, a customer was entitled to a rebate because electricity was at 8.3 cents, a customer who was only paying 5.5 cents should get that same rebate.

Mr Conway: We've all talked to these people. We know what happened to them. "Sign this little form; details to follow." It is clear to most of us who've talked to these people that your company, Hydro One, manipulated and ripped off a lot of unsuspecting people. The more you talk about rebate, the more you're going to hear from these people in the spring and summer of next year.

But it gets worse. This is my question to the minister. It gets worse, because having signed up 200,000 people to these fixed-rate contracts, not mentioning the rebate, not telling people that they'd signed it over to Hydro One, you know what the Ernie Eves company then did? It sold the whole portfolio to another company and Hydro One, our company, cashed in on the value of the rebate.

So these consumers who were bamboozled and misled and kept in the dark were ripped off. Who benefited? Well, that company called Hydro One. Consumers were kicked in the teeth, ripped off, left to fend for themselves, and the Ernie Eves company, Hydro One—remember that crew? Graham Day, Eleanor Clitheroe, the multi-million-dollar people on the boats looking after themselves? Oh, they did well, and so did the company. Isn't it a sad situation that these plutocrats, these rip-off artists, including the government, made all the money, and hundreds of thousands of people, many of them old people on fixed incomes, were ripped off and so manipulated? Isn't that a disgrace?

Hon Mr Baird: The member opposite is saying that the details would follow later. Yet in the question he just stood in his place and said the details were in the fine print. Were the details there, or were the details not? Is the member opposite suggesting—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. The member had quiet for asking the question. The minister now gets a chance to answer.

Hon Mr Baird: Is the member opposite suggesting that someone who was paying 5.5 cents for electricity should get a rebate as if they were paying 8.3 cents for electricity? It sounds like that is exactly what he is suggesting.

The Speaker: Were you done? I apologize. I didn't mean to step on your line. The member asked the question. It is fair to let the minister answer. I apologize for getting up so quickly.

JUSTICE ISSUES

Mr R. Gary Stewart (Peterborough): My question is for the Attorney General. Minister, earlier today the Eves government introduced new legislation to increase protection for Ontario's investors. This is certainly an important step, as people in my riding of Peterborough have the right to know that their government is looking out for their financial security. Part of the proposed legislation demands tougher penalties to ensure compliance with Ontario's securities laws. Maximum court fines for general offences would increase from $1 million to $5 million and maximum prison terms would increase from two years to five years less a day.

Clearly, there is a need for these kinds of stricter penalties in the light of corporate scandals like Enron. Those who violate the law and jeopardize the investment of everyday Ontarians should face serious penalties for their actions.

But another important part of providing a serious deterrent is changes to the federal Criminal Code. Ontario announced that they are moving forward with toughening the penalties. Minister, what action will you take at the upcoming national justice ministers' meeting to press for similar action by Ottawa?

Hon David Young (Attorney General, minister responsible for native affairs): I thank the honourable member for that very important question. It's important to remember that in Ontario we have very high professional standards and a high level of accountability. That has been the case for years. Nevertheless, the Ernie Eves government this morning announced a number of further measures to confirm that we are not prepared to be complacent on this very important issue of investor confidence. We came forward this morning and talked about greater fines and greater penalties and broader reviews. We can do only so much, though, within the provincial sphere. As the members opposite know, there are certain matters that are in the federal domain—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Will the member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale come to order, please. Sorry, Attorney General.

Hon Mr Young: There are certain matters that are exclusively within the federal domain, and we must be respectful of that. That of course includes items that appear in the Criminal Code. So what I am going to do at the federal-provincial territorial conference next week, with my colleague Minister Runciman, is raise a number of measures that we believe should be introduced at the federal level that will help us fight to ensure that individuals across the province can have confidence in the businesses they choose to invest in.

Mr Stewart: Minister, it's certainly important that you press this issue with the federal justice minister and your provincial colleagues. I would also like to know what other items you are going to put at the top of your agenda for this meeting. Traditionally, the Ontario government has focused on initiatives to increase community safety, particularly in areas of crime and law enforcement. What outcomes are you hoping to achieve from this meeting, and in which areas will you be pressing the federal government to make clear commitments to enhance the safety and security of all Ontarians?

Hon Mr Young: All Ontarians have the right to feel safe in their homes and in their communities. Indeed, they all have the right to be safe in those homes and in those communities.

The Ernie Eves government has advocated to improve the safety of every Ontarian across this province. We have done so with numerous actions over the past number of years, and one of the things we have done in addition to that is advocate on behalf of the people of Ontario to have changes made at the federal level.

One issue I intend to raise again next week deals with DNA testing. Right now, the federal Liberal legislation only allows for testing in very limited situations. What this means is that there are people in prison right now from whom we cannot obtain DNA tests. What this means is that over the next short while these individuals will be released out into the streets because of loopholes, and we will not have their DNA testing evidence available. What that means is very serious: these individuals will be put back out into our communities, we will not be in a position to determine if they have committed additional crimes previously, and we will not be in a position to catch them in an expeditious manner when they commit crimes in the future. We need these changes made to the DNA legislation, and we need them made now.

RACIAL PROFILING

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of Public Safety and Security. Minister, you stated today that you support racial profiling at the border, that you support targeting law-abiding citizens as if they are criminals. You said you approve of fingerprinting and photographing certain citizens based upon their appearance, perceived religion or place of birth.

Minister, none of those things will do anything to fight crime but will certainly re-create in Ontario a very shameful period in our history when Japanese Canadians were attacked because of their race. What you're proposing is repugnant to New Democrats and repugnant to people across this province.

Minister, here and now, will you publicly renounce your support of racial profiling, whether at the borders or in our communities?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): Because it's unparliamentary, I can't describe that question in terms I'd like to describe it in, Mr Speaker. It is completely inaccurate.

I was asked this morning with respect to the warnings that have been issued by the federal government to Canadians travelling to the United States who are of different cultural backgrounds: did I think that was appropriate? I felt that the federal government was being wise in terms of advising these individuals that they would face these challenges if indeed they were seeking entry into the United States. I think it is wise that they apprise our citizenry of the barriers or the challenges they might face when they're travelling in the United States. I think that's quite appropriate.

Mr Hampton: Minister, you may claim to be misunderstood, so I'm going to ask you again very clearly. I'm going to ask you to stand up and I'm going to ask you to say very clearly that you disapprove of people being singled out, that you disapprove of people being fingerprinted based upon how they look or what their perceived religion is, that you disapprove of people being discriminated against because they might be from this visible minority or that visible minority. Will you say that? In your position as the minister of public security, will you say that?

Hon Mr Runciman: What I disapprove of is drive-by smears by this member in the Legislature. That's what this is, Mr Speaker. Let there be no mistake about it. When this issue was originally raised in this House, I made it quite clear that this government in no way supports racial profiling by police in this province, and for this member to get up here and try to smear my reputation is completely unworthy of this assembly or any member of this assembly.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. We're on to the next question.

ENERGY CONTRACTS

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): My question is to the Minister of Energy. It concerns this rebate. I have in my hand a sample document that Hydro One retailers took to the door. Now, if you can read it—it's in microscopic print—you will not find the word "rebate" anywhere on this. What you will find is the following language: "I understand that if this application is accepted by the company Hydro One, I have accepted and agreed to be bound by the general terms and conditions, even if I have not read them."

That's what your company did on the doorsteps of tens of thousands of people. This is the form. In microscopic print, there is no reference to a rebate. So the question arises: what are you going to say to the hundreds of thousands of people who are listening to Ernie Eves and others say not to worry, that there's a rebate coming, when they find out that even their own company, Hydro One, signed them up on a very, very misleading basis to a contract, the full details of which they did not advertise or reveal, and that Hydro One has taken on to itself any rebate that might be paid at a future date?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): The member opposite has made a number of allegations. He's saying now that if people in the province don't read contracts, somehow they can be let out in any other area. He's saying it was included in the contract, and then he said it wasn't included in the contract.

People in the province of Ontario had the option with respect to getting a fixed-rate price. If they were paying 8.3 cents, as they did in September, on the spot market, they're obviously going to be entitled to a rebate. If they were only paying 5.5 cents, it would seem a little bit strange that you would get a rebate on a price you didn't pay. There are various contracts which are offered for the consumer. With some retailers, you can pay a higher fixed rate and you would be eligible to receive the rebate. Obviously the fixed rate would be higher. It's all a question of who assumes the risk.

Mr Conway: This is really important, because at the end of the day consumers and investors are going to want to know, can we trust our government? Can we trust our provincial government to protect us from the electricity situation out there?

I raise this today because this kind of gouging was carried on by the Ontario government company, Hydro One, a retailer. We've all heard it. We've all heard senior citizens tell us these stories. We've heard it about other companies, but you have to know that our company did it. Hydro One, with malice aforethought, went out and signed up people like my dad, who's 86, who saw somebody at his door who said, "I'm from Ontario Hydro. I'm here to protect you." They never told my father or hundreds or thousands of older people like him that there was anything like a rebate.

How is this not a fundamental breach of trust, and how and why, Mr Minister of Energy, should any consumer, in Toronto or elsewhere, faced with these skyrocketing electricity bills, either believe you or trust you to protect them?

Hon Mr Baird: There are fixed-rate contracts. There are variable-rate contracts. The people of Ontario may also want to ask the member opposite from the official opposition, should they trust a party that changes its mind on every issue? Should they trust a party who says they're in favour of competition?

The terms of discourse in this issue I think could be a lot higher. The member opposite is someone who has a huge amount of knowledge on this issue—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member for Windsor-St Clair and the member for Kingston and the Islands, come to order, please. The minister has the floor.

Hon Mr Baird: The member opposite has a huge amount of knowledge on this issue, and some of the statements he's made in terms of these questions are not raising the level of debate in this province. He said they are included in the contract and he says they're not. He says they're not giving anything and then he said they're asked to sign something. He says they don't have to read it, yet it's been given to them. That may work with the media—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Sorry to interrupt again, Minister. I've done that twice when you were up. I apologize.

The member for Windsor-St Clair, it's your last warning now.

I apologize if you do have some more time. Again, I'm sorry. Right at the end, we do get up, and I hate to cut you off like that.

AUTOMOBILE INSURANCE

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): I finally get to ask my question. My question is to the Minister of Finance. Minister, this year drivers across Ontario have experienced significant increases in auto insurance premiums. We all know that after our government reforms in 1996, insurance rates dropped by an average of 12%. Drivers, including in my own riding of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale, are expressing confusion and concern over recent increases in their auto insurance. I would appreciate if the minister could explain why these rates are increasing.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): I share the member's concern about the pressures that consumers of auto insurance are experiencing. Insurance premiums are rising across Canada and Ontario and indeed all of North America due to factors such as rising health care costs, higher reinsurance premiums following the 9/11 tragedy of last year, and lower investment returns. There are pressures worldwide that are causing challenges here in Canada.

When Bill 59 took effect in 1996, we did find that the measures we put in place to make insurance products fairer to consumers actually helped to stabilize rates. We have been looking at changes to help auto insurance companies here in Ontario continue to provide competitive products to consumers, to continue to make sure that consumers are getting the treatment, the benefits, the care they need. As a result of recommendations from my parliamentary assistants—Ted Chudleigh, Rob Sampson and Wayne Wettlaufer—we have indeed proceeded with changes that we announced in the June budget.

Mr Gill: Minister, the reforms you have introduced certainly sound like they will benefit consumers. I'm sure all members of this House will appreciate the hard work that went into creating these reforms, especially through the consultation that Messrs Chudleigh, Sampson and Wettlaufer held with the auto insurance industry, health care providers and consumers. Can you explain in greater detail how you expect these reforms to benefit consumers of auto insurance and maybe even help them find reasonable rates?

Hon Mrs Ecker: What we are proposing to do would be to improve access to treatment for injured individuals, to expand the rights of seriously injured people to sue. This is especially important for health care costs in excess of no-fault benefits, especially important for children. There are consumer awareness measures to make sure that consumers can make an informed choice when they are purchasing insurance. There are a number of changes that we think are going to actually help provide better treatment for consumers, and we think it's a very important initiative.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): My question is for the Deputy Premier. Minister, college students from across Ontario have come to Queen's Park today hoping to raise awareness on the accessibility and affordability of a college education in Ontario.

Students know that employment success is guaranteed for those with a college diploma. The double cohort is an enormous stress on students, given your low predictions on how many students will be graduating.

As well, colleges have suffered a 40% decrease in funding from your government, while Premier Eves was finance minister, I might add. As a result, college tuition has increased by 140%, yet the loan maximums set by OSAP have not changed. Students are paying more than their fair share for their education.

Deputy Premier, studies have shown that thanks to your government, middle-income families can't send their kids to post-secondary education. Will you accept the college students' proposals to bring your OSAP policies and criteria into the new millennium?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I appreciate the question from the member opposite. I can certainly say on behalf of the Minister of Training, Colleges and Universities that she does consult regularly with students from the universities and the colleges. We are prepared to take a look at the recommendations that have been brought forward to date and review them.

I would also say to you that this issue of affordability is one that is a high priority for our government. Recently we have created new student aid programs. There are the Queen Elizabeth II Aiming for the Top scholarships. That's going to help about 12,000 Ontario students, with annual spending of $35 million. We're also going to be expanding the amount of money for OSAP. So I can tell you, we remain concerned that each and every student has access to post-secondary education.

Mrs Bountrogianni: Number one, the Queen Elizabeth scholarships are simply the renaming of an existing scholarship. Number two, we're not only asking you to increase OSAP; you have to do that. There are more students with the double cohort, more OSAP per student. There are some administrative changes you can make today that will make it easier, without costing a penny.

Families are struggling to help their children obtain a college education. Ashley is here from Humber College. She will have a $40,000 debt after a two-year photography course. She had to pay $2,000 in tuition, $16,000 for equipment and $6,000 per year for rent. She did not even qualify for OSAP because her parents are a middle-income family. They have three other children—two that they've put through school and two that they're putting through school now. There used to be an appeal process for situations like this; your government killed it. That's one administrative change you can make tomorrow—no cost.

Cindy is here from St Lawrence College. She was a single mom at 19; she is 41 now. She has a learning disability, a physical disability. A simple administrative change would help her. Give her her OSAP money before the second or third week of school. There are simple administrative changes you can make today, you can commit to today, to make these students' lives easier. Do it, Deputy Premier. Just do it.

Hon Mrs Witmer: As I said in response to the first question, we will certainly review the recommendations that have been brought forward today. The minister is going to take a look at them. She continues to meet on a regular basis with students, and I want to give my assurance that the OSAP funding is being increased in order to make sure that we can respond to the needs of all the double cohort students. The money is certainly going to be there. There is an increase in the pot of money.

This year, we have also provided more money for our colleges. This year, the operating grants have increased by $42.5 million. That is a 5.7% increase to our colleges—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm sorry to interrupt, Deputy Premier. The member for Kingston and the Islands, this is his last warning, too. Sorry, Deputy Premier.

Hon Mrs Witmer: I appreciate that, Mr Speaker. The reality is, they know that our government has increased the amount of funding for students so they don't really want to hear that answer.

I would simply say we have increased the funding for colleges this year. We are providing a 5.7% increase. Enrolment has only gone up 3.2%. Again, we have new programs to support these students and I can tell you the money will be there.

MARS DISCOVERY DISTRICT

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): My question is for my colleague the Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation—the energetic, the solid, the steady, the great David Turnbull. Ontarians know that securing a bright future for the next generation requires investment in research and innovation strategies. These would include centres such as the University of Guelph which are so important for research to the people in the agricultural industry in my riding.

The Medical and Related Sciences Discovery District—and I've heard about it; it's called MARS—is one of the exciting components of this government's commitment to fostering useful new technologies. Minister, can you take a moment and highlight some of the details of the MARS Discovery District?

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): I cannot help but thank the member for Perth-Middlesex for this insightful question. It is very important—it really and truly is.

Interjections.

Hon Mr Turnbull: I hear heckling from the opposite side of the floor.

This is a very exciting project. It bolsters the development of cutting-edge medical and related science research. It's in close proximity to the University of Toronto and our leading research hospitals. What we're doing here is bringing together researchers and life science companies under one roof.

The government has committed $20 million to the MARS project. This is going to lever approximately $300 million worth of R&D centre; it will be a 1.2 million-square-foot development.

It supports the government's innovation agenda, it complements the research clusters in Ottawa, Guelph, Kingston, London and Hamilton, and it is indeed vital to our province's future, because it will provide jobs and opportunity for decades to come.

VISITORS

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): I'd like to welcome to the Legislature the grandparents of Wade Carey, Norma and Graham Garner, and parents of Wade Carey, Joanne and Don Carey. They're in the members' gallery.

PETITIONS

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have a petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

I am in complete agreement, and I affix my signature.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glenarry-Prescott-Russell): I have a petition of 1,312 names which comes for my riding and also from Kanata and Nepean. I'm up to 2,600-plus names on this petition.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government deregulated electricity on May 1, 2002 in the province of Ontario, without it being in their election platform in either 1995 or 1999 and without the mandate of the people of Ontario; and

"Whereas the commodity of electricity has reached outrageous levels, having risen at times over 100% since May 1, 2002, causing Ontarians great financial hardship; and

"Whereas Ontario Power Generation (owned by the Ontario government) has applied to the Ontario Energy Board for a 20% reduction in the promised rebate to Ontarians if the commodity price of electricity rose above 3.8 cents per KWH; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government authorized exorbitant salaries and bonuses in the amount of $2.2 million per annum be paid to their former president of Hydro One, and in excess of $1.6 million per annum to the vice-president of Ontario Power Generation;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario and that the Conservative government and its leader, Ernie Eves, call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians can have a voice on this issue."

I add my signature to this.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): As angry as people are about the huge increases in their hydro bills, they're also very angry about Union Gas and the approval by the Ontario Energy Board to allow a $120 retroactive delivery charge. I continue to read petitions to the Legislative Assembly.

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million; and

"Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

"Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

"Therefore we demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas, and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive rate increases."

I hope that Union Gas will back off on this and I'm very happy to sign my name to this petition.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas application of the student-focused funding model for 2001-02 does not allow sufficient funding to the Hastings and Prince Edward school board for secretarial support in schools, principals and vice-principals, transportation or school operations;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To reassess the student-focused funding legislative grants for the 2002-03 school year to provide additional funding for those areas where funding is insufficient and to adjust future student-focused funding to address the situation of declining enrolments faced by the Hastings and Prince Edward District School Board and other boards in Ontario."

I'm very happy to sign my name to this petition and I will hand it to Matthew, who will take it to the table for me.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): My petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Conservative government increased fees paid by Ontario seniors and other vulnerable people living in long-term-care facilities ... instead of providing adequate government funding for long-term care; and

"Whereas the Conservative government has therefore shifted the cost of long-term care on to the backs of the frail elderly and their families; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas in 1996 Ontario abandoned its minimum requirement of 2.25 hours of nursing care per nursing home resident; and

"Whereas the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own study, government cutbacks have resulted in Ontario seniors receiving just 14 minutes a day of care from a registered nurse (less than half the time given to residents in Saskatchewan) and

"Whereas the report also found that Ontario residents receive the least nursing, bathing and general care of nine other comparable locations;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Join the Ontario New Democratic Party in demanding the Conservative government eliminate the fee increase for residents of long-term-care facilities, increase the number of nursing care hours for each resident to ... 3.5 hours per day, and provide stable, increased funding to ensure quality care is there for Ontario residents of long-term-care facilities."

I've signed that petition.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): I have a petition here concerning the ever-increasing electricity prices in Ontario. It's addressed to the Parliament of Ontario and reads as follows:

"We, the undersigned residents of Toronto, demand that the government immediately stop the process of privatizing our electricity transmission system, the network of steel towers, transformers, wooden poles which transmit power from generation plants to our homes, and further postpone the electricity deregulation process until the Ontario public is given proof that privatization will not result in price increases; and place a moratorium on any further retailing of electricity until the Ontario Energy Board comes up with a standard contract to be used by all retailers; and that a standard contract spell out in clear terms that residential users are waiving their rights to future rebates in exchange for fixed rates over a specified period of time.”

Since I'm in total agreement with this petition, I am delighted to sign it and pass it on to Maureen.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): Like my colleague from St Catharines, Mr Bradley, I want to read a petition related to the long-term-care increase, as it's happening all across the province, certainly in southern Ontario and northern Ontario.

“A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

“We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

“Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels.”

I am very pleased to sign my name to the petition. I hand it off to Pierre, our page.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): My petition reads:

“To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the Ernie Eves Conservative government has legislated the opening of the Ontario electricity market as of May 1, 2002, and the price per kilowatt hour for electricity in the province of Ontario has nearly quadrupled since May 1; and

“Whereas the Conservative government of Ontario has done very little to address key issues, such as energy supply, which forces the province to import power and causes the price of electricity to skyrocket; and

“Whereas Ernie Eves has done a poor job in educating the public as to the ramifications of an open electricity market in the province of Ontario and has done little to punish the unscrupulous sales practices of door-to-door energy retailers; and

“Whereas the government of Ontario has saddled the population of Ontario with additional debt reduction charges, which further increases the amount that the citizens of Ontario have to pay per kilowatt hour, yet the hydro debt continues to increase; and

“Whereas the Mike Harris-Ernie Eves governments appointed the board of directors for Hydro One, who approved exorbitant salaries and compensation packages for Hydro One executives;

“Be it resolved that the Ontario government move immediately to protect our province's electricity consumers by addressing the serious generation problem in Ontario, by punishing unscrupulous electricity retailers and by moving forward with a rebate to offset the increasing costs of electricity in Ontario.”

I affix my signature, as I'm in complete agreement, as I suspect the Speaker is as well.

SCHOOL CLOSURES

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): I have another petition here that is important. It concerns the school closures in Toronto.

“Whereas” the government “is cutting the heart out of many communities by closing hundreds of neighbourhood...schools...; and

“Whereas this massive number of school closings all at once will displace many children and put others on longer bus routes; and

“Whereas” the government “is pitting parent against parent and community against community in the fight to save local schools; and

“Whereas parents and students in the city of Toronto and indeed many other communities across Ontario are calling on the government to stop closing so many of their schools;

“Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

“We demand that” this government “stop closing local schools.”

As I'm in agreement, Mr Speaker, I'm delighted to give this to Maureen to give to you.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): Mr Speaker, with your permission I will read some more petitions related to the Union Gas retroactive delivery charge being approved by the Ontario Energy Board, and the government of Ontario doing nothing to stop that so far.

“To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the Ontario Energy Board has consented to allow Union Gas to retroactively charge $40 per month for a three-month period to recover additional system operation costs that occurred during the winter of 2000-01 totalling approximately $150 million; and

“Whereas Union Gas will recover accrued costs over the peak heating season, causing undue hardship; and

“Whereas this retroactive charge will affect all customers who receive Union Gas, including new homeowners and new customers to Union Gas;

“Therefore we demand that the Ernie Eves government issue a policy directive under section 27.1 of the Ontario Energy Board Act”—right there, Mr Speaker—“disallowing the retroactive rate hike granted to Union Gas, and we further demand that the Legislature examine the Ontario Energy Board, its processes and its resources, and make changes that will protect consumers from further retroactive increases.”

I have received thousands and thousands of petitions on this issue. I absolutely have, and they continue to come in. I am very pleased to add my name to this petition, and I hope that the government acts and that Union Gas backs off.

TIME ALLOCATION

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I move that pursuant to standing order 56 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 187, an Act to protect the rights of agricultural employees, when Bill 187 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill, without further debate or amendment, at such time the bill shall be ordered for third reading, which order may be called on that same day; and

That, when the order for third reading is called, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

That the votes on second and third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred; and

That, in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The minister has moved government motion 50 and, just for clarification, it's pursuant to standing order 46.

The member for Lambton-Kent-Middlesex has the floor.

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): It's a pleasure for me to rise today in the House—

The Speaker: Order. I'm afraid there's some misunderstanding. If the minister doesn't speak, the rotation goes to the other side. We'll get back to you in a minute. Sorry about that. I should have known that. So the rotation will go to this side and then back to the other side. I apologize.

The member for Elgin-Middlesex-London.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): Thank you very much, Speaker.

What we're witnessing today is I guess unfortunate. It's what we're seeing become rampant within this government, and that's another time allocation motion.

All of us were sent to this place, from 103 ridings across this province, to ensure that every piece of legislation receive its just due and receive the proper debate that should be allocated to it. What we're seeing here, though, is time allocation, which limits the allocation, which limits debate. In many ways, that is stifling the democratic tradition of this House.

If you look back at the track record that exists from the Davis era to the Peterson era to the Rae era to the Harris-Eves era, it is unprecedented, what we have witnessed in the number of time allocation motions.

The purpose of legislation and the purpose of this very building we stand in and rise in is to ensure healthy debate. It's to ensure that the government puts forward its case for support for a piece of legislation and that Her Majesty's loyal opposition and the third party have that opportunity for debate. But this government has a track record of shutting down debate. I think it's important for the people at home to know that the issues you want us to discuss in this Legislature aren't being adequately discussed.

When we stand up come next election time, I think it's incumbent that the Conservative members explain to the electorate of this province why they are so intent on putting forth time allocation motions.

This is an important piece of legislation that we have in front of us. I'm going to speak to it, but I would love to have had the full time allocated for us.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): Go right to the heart of the matter, then.

Mr Peters: If we want to go to the heart of the matter, Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services, we could talk a bit about your failure of funding allocations for persons with developmental disabilities in this province. How dare you come to the city of London and make an announcement and then allocate just a little over $1 million for persons with developmental disabilities in the southwest region? That's shameful. It's disgraceful.

Hon Mrs Elliott: It's $64 million.

Mr Peters: It's $64 million, but how much was allocated to the southwest? The southwest was short-changed last time and the southwest has been short-changed again. I would encourage the minister to speak to the heads of associations for community living and the desperate situation they're facing and the constant calls coming into their offices.

I'm going to provide the minister with a list of families I want her to speak to, to explain to them why, when they have spent years saving the system hundreds of millions of dollars and all of a sudden now, when they need a home for their child and a place for that child to live—in many cases now it's an adult—there's no place to go. There's no room at the inn. You're putting your head in the sand when it comes to persons with developmental disabilities.

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): Mr Speaker, on a point of order: the member opposite was referring at the beginning of his remarks to the difficulty he had in being able to make those remarks, given the time allocation. I would suggest that perhaps his time should be spent debating the bill rather than other issues.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): That's almost a point of order. The point of order is that we'd like you to bring your remarks within either the bill that is being time-allocated or the time allocation itself.

Mr Peters: I couldn't resist the opportunity when I was being heckled. The Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services is not addressing many issues that face families in this province. This is a time allocation motion and I think the minister has certainly let down many families in this province. I will stand up at any time to speak for families and put people first, because you don't put people first. This government doesn't put people first. You've abandoned people in this province and you should be ashamed of what you've done to those individuals.

I'm going to provide you with that list and I want you to speak to those families. Many of those families live in rural communities as well. I can think of individuals who live in a rural community, and the many challenges that are faced by the agricultural community and people living in rural communities in this province.

We're talking about Bill 187, the Agricultural Employees Protection Act, which affects rural communities. Issues facing rural communities have not been adequately addressed by this government. This government fails to recognize that there is a difference that exists in this province between urban and rural. Issues facing rural communities are much different than those facing urban communities. The costs associated with providing services in a rural community are much greater and the challenges facing rural communities are much greater. This government truly has failed to recognize that.

Time allocation is shutting down this debate. There are so many issues facing the agricultural community today. I know the minister doesn't want to talk about issues facing persons with disabilities, so we will talk about agriculture.

The minister, in her speeches, has talked about keeping the agricultural industry competitive. When she introduced this piece of legislation that we have in front of us today, she talked about keeping the industry competitive.

But in many ways this government has thrown many roadblocks in front of the agricultural industry in this province. We heard a question yesterday in this Legislature where the market revenue cheques have gone out, and I do compliment the minister for her recognition in dealing with the agricultural policy framework that was initiated by the federal government. That the minister recognized the unique needs of Ontario and the unique needs of the grains and oilseeds sector in this province. She ensured that the provincial 40% share was flowing through the market revenue program, and that's good. But, you know, what has happened is, a lot of farmers have received those cheques, those cheques started to come in the mail this week, and they thought, "Well, that's nice that we've received our market revenue cheque," but in the same mail the hydro bill arrived.

That market revenue cheque that's supposed to be there and help lessen the impact of the high American subsidies and the high subsidies that exist from the European Union—they said goodbye to that cheque because of their hydro bills that are spiralling out of control with this government. Many of them, as they're out harvesting their corn right now, their corn dryers are up and running—you know what has happened? Many of them who use gas are now going to have to pay a retroactive bill because this government has allowed the Ontario Energy Board to allow Union Gas to retroactively bill for a mistake they made in the winter of 2000-01. So on one hand you're putting cheques into the farmers' back pockets, but because of your compliance with and support of the Ontario Energy Board, support for what's happening and allowing the rates to skyrocket with hydro, the cheque goes in one pocket and a good chunk of it's coming out of the other to pay the bills. That's a real shame.

Nutrient management is another section where you've let down the agricultural community in this province. We've heard many a comment made that all the recommendations that Justice O'Connor would be dealing with in his reports, parts one and two, would be implemented by this government. We saw the clean water act introduced yesterday, which may implement 50% of them. But we saw recommendations that Justice O'Connor made—as far as providing financial incentives to the agricultural community in order for it to comply with the Nutrient Management Act, we saw this government turn it down.

I had an opportunity to speak to the Bruce Federation of Agriculture last Friday. As I drove from my constituency office in St Thomas and drove north through the Deputy Speaker's riding of Perth county, into Grey county, and a bit into Bruce county, Huron, Wellington, I saw farm after farm that, in order for it to comply, is going to need help from this government. Yet the government turned down that recommendation, and that's again a shame, that they don't recognize the need to help the farmers to comply with nutrient management.

Bill 187, which we have in front of us today, as we know, is in response to the Supreme Court ruling of December 2001. We know that it's in response to the repeal of the former Bill 91, which was introduced by the NDP government in 1994. The Liberal Party stood up and spoke against that piece of legislation in 1994. In 1995, after the election of the Harris government, we saw the introduction of Bill 7 and the repeal of that act. We supported the repeal of the agricultural component of that act, but unfortunately we couldn't support Bill 7 because it had so many hostages in it. This government is so well known for putting hostages in bills.

It leads us to the piece of legislation we have in front of us today, the response to the Supreme Court ruling we have with Bill 187. My concern with this bill is that this government is going to lead us back into court again. We've spent goodness knows how many dollars in defending the repeal of Bill 7 all the way to the Supreme Court. This legislation does mirror the Supreme Court ruling, but I'm very concerned that we are going to be back in court again and you are going to cause undue hardship, an additional hardship, on the taxpayers of this province with this piece of legislation in front of us.

I recognize that we do need to see the uniqueness of the agricultural industry, need to recognize that the agricultural industry has changed in this province. We're still waiting for the minister to define what the family farm is. We're still waiting for the minister to define an industrial agricultural operation or an intensive livestock operation or a factory farm. What is that? I think it's incumbent on the minister to explain to every one of us what those definitions mean. They haven't been adequately defined by this minister.

But farming and agriculture have changed in this province. This past Saturday I had an opportunity to be at Walker Farms, located in the eastern part of my riding. The Walkers have a family farm, but the Walkers milk 600 cows a day, with four employees. Agriculture has changed. And we cannot in any way allow anything to get in the way of that operation. There cannot be in any way any work stoppage in trying to milk those 600 cows. From that standpoint, the intent of this legislation is in the right direction.

But the face of agriculture has changed in other ways as well. We are seeing more and more farms that have gone beyond traditionally growing a product, producing a product and putting it on to the truck and shipping it off. That has changed. Some farms have gone from the field almost to the fork, to full production. Some of those changes that have occurred in the agricultural industry we need to have a look at. Those changes aren't addressed in this legislation in front of us here.

It's because those changes have occurred and haven't been addressed in this legislation that we are going to end up back in court again. I think if the government was intent on ensuring that it developed a piece of legislation that met the needs of agriculture in this province, it would have looked at all the issues and it would have talked to all the players, but they haven't done that. In responding to the Supreme Court ruling, this legislation, in my mind, is going to get us back into court again.

What's sad about this legislation—and we haven't heard the discussion on it yet—is the fact that we are dealing with a time allocation motion that is stifling debate among the 103 of us in this Legislature but we've yet to hear a commitment from the Minister of Agriculture to public hearings to allow other individuals from across this province an opportunity to have their say in this bill. We're getting our say with this bill in this Legislature, but there are a lot of individuals out there who aren't getting a say, be they in favour of the legislation or against the legislation. It's incumbent on us. We owe it to the public to allow for that opportunity for public hearings. We've yet to hear that commitment made from the government that we're going to have public hearings. Listen to that time allocation motion. It doesn't sound like we are going to have public hearings. It doesn't sound like there's going to be an opportunity for any amendments. This government is going to ram this bill through, plain and simple. That's what they're going to do. I think it's a shame that we're not giving everybody out there that opportunity for public hearings.

A number of issues are thrown into the mix as—I wouldn't call them red herrings, but I would call them issues that are maybe beyond the scope of agriculture in Ontario. One issue we've heard about and hear about regularly—my riding depends on them—is migrant workers. We know, for example, that there are close to 100,000 individuals associated with the agri-food business in this province. But one of the things a lot of people probably don't know is the vital role migrant workers play in agriculture in Ontario. Close to 20,000 individuals come to Ontario from all parts of the world to work in the agriculture industry. They may be here to help with the tobacco harvest or they may be here to help with the fruit harvest. A huge number of migrant workers come to this province. But migrant workers are covered under federal legislation.

We can slough it off and say, "Oh, migrant workers are a federal issue," but I think it's incumbent on the provincial Minister of Agriculture to make sure she's sitting down at the table with the federal government to ensure that those individuals coming into this province are fully protected, because they contribute to the Ontario economy. Individuals I've met over the years who have come to Ontario from Jamaica have been coming to this province for 15 and 20 years, and now we're starting to see the second generation come. They're an important part of the economy, because these individuals buy food and many goods and services while they're here in this province. Many of those goods are taken back to their country of origin to help their families out. But while they're here, we need to make sure that we're not sloughing them off as a federal issue, that there is a role for the province to play, to work with the federal government in ensuring that the rights of migrant workers are protected in Ontario. I urge the minister to enter into those discussions, to work with the federal government and the agricultural community to ensure that we're meeting the needs of those individuals who are coming to this province.

Another area that is not addressed in this legislation is the whole question of workplace health and safety. I commend the Farm Safety Association of Ontario for what they have done. With the limited resources that have been made available to them—I believe for the first time ever, the province a year ago finally granted them $90,000 for their work.

I think we need to hear more from the Minister of Agriculture about how she's going to support health and safety in the workplace in this province and educate those individuals, be they on the family farm or working in larger, industrial processing operations. But this legislation is silent on health and safety issues. The government's response is that this legislation is in response to the Supreme Court ruling. But why don't we make this the best piece of legislation we can, not make it a second piece of legislation that only goes so far? Why don't we use this opportunity, if we were granted the opportunity for full debate and public hearings, to strengthen this legislation to truly show the commitment to the agricultural industry in this province, the number two industry? It's an industry, unfortunately—and those of you watching at home right now, if you ate today, thank a farmer. Think about it.

We take food for granted in this country. We take food for granted in this province. We've enjoyed a wonderful, cheap food policy, but who hasn't had a hand in it all is the farmer. As you move the product up the chain, everybody seems to make more and more money out of it until the time it gets to the retail market, but the farmer has been left behind. We know the challenges that farmers are facing with food safety, with nutrient management and with pesticide use. More and more costs are being put on the backs of farmers and they don't have the opportunity to recoup those costs. So I think it's important that the average person in Ontario recognizes the important role agriculture plays in our economy and that we can't take food for granted.

After September 11 we heard a lot about security and protecting our borders and protecting our airports. But do you know what we didn't hear about? Not once did we hear from anybody on that side about protecting our food supply and recognizing that food should be part of a national security system. We depend on food. We need the farmers to earn a good living, but we as individuals need those farmers to remain competitive and remain in production. We need those farmers to be there. We need to recognize that we live in one of the most bountiful provinces in the world. There are countries that are envious of what we produce in this province. We need to do everything we can to protect the agricultural industry, and we can't continue to take the farmer for granted.

We've got a lot of work to do in educating the public. I know there are individuals out there who are trying to do a better job at educating children in the classroom as to where food comes from so that, hopefully, they then will have a better understanding of the food production system. I know in rural schools they're trying to work toward educating students in dealing with farm safety issues so that they'll have a better understanding of what it's like living on a farm.

I don't come from an agricultural background but I've had the opportunity, representing a rural riding, to see a farm and to see not only the challenges a farmer faces but the wide variety of risks that exist on a farm. We need to do more to help the farmer in dealing with health and safety issues and we need to do more in strengthening legislation. This legislation is a start but there is a great deal more to do.

We're losing, though, the opportunity for that good, healthy debate in this place, because again and again we see these time allocation motions introduced. It is a sad day for democracy in this province to see good debate being shut down. Why this government is so intent on time allocation motions, I don't know. We heard about an aggressive agenda for this government in the fall. We haven't seen that aggressive agenda.

With this bill we are going to end up back in court again; there's no doubt about it. I think that's where the Minister of Agriculture has let the taxpayers of Ontario down and let the agricultural community down. This should have been a piece of legislation that not only recognized the order of the Supreme Court but recognized the changes that have taken place in agriculture and recognized that there are other issues facing agriculture out there right now. This piece of legislation didn't do that and it should have done that.

But we're not going to have that opportunity for amendments. We're not going to have the opportunity for public hearings. It's non-existent. I think that's a real failure on the part of the government, because I think the goal of every one of us here is to protect the agricultural industry. I don't think there is anybody who doesn't recognize that this is an industry that is unique and that is facing unprecedented challenges right now, be they from the Americans or the European Union. It's facing challenges from climate. That's one thing we as politicians can't do anything about. But it's also facing the challenge of just the very survival as the face of agriculture changes. I think it's incumbent on every one of us, be we urban or rural politicians, to do everything we can to strengthen and support this industry. We do require that we protect the industry. It is a start.

Mr Beaubien: Vote for the bill.

Mr Peters: I heard some heckling just now about voting for the bill. We have said all along that we will be supporting this bill. We spoke against the NDP bill, we supported the repeal of the NDP bill and we will be supporting this bill. But we could be going further, and that's where this government has failed. They haven't recognized how this industry has changed, and it has changed. We need to ensure that as an industry evolves and changes, we do everything in our power to support that industry and keep that industry competitive. To date we haven't seen that in this piece of legislation that's in front of us.

There are so many issues facing agriculture today. I think it's incumbent on the minister to stand up and—

Interjection.

Mr Peters: My apologies, Mr Speaker. We're just gearing up some timing. I'm going to be relinquishing the floor to my colleague from Sarnia-Lambton.

I think it's important to recognize that she's an urban politician. Food affects us all. Agriculture affects us all. We need to support this industry. We need to recognize that this is an industry that's different. This is an industry that can't afford to have work stoppages put in front of it. We are dealing with a perishable commodity.

In closing, we will be supporting this bill. But I'm very sorry that we haven't heard a direct commitment, and maybe we will from a government member, that this bill is going to go out for public hearings so that we give everybody an opportunity to have some say and some input into this most important piece of legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: We will proceed clockwise.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I will be sharing my time with my colleagues, who are not here at the moment but will be arriving shortly.

We are debating this here bill today because the Supreme Court of Canada said that the government opposite did the wrong thing back in 1995. You took a piece of legislation which was working in the province, you threw it out and brought in your own piece of legislation, which is unconstitutional. We are here today and you are attempting to make constitutionally correct a piece of legislation which the courts have already rejected.

We are going around in a circle today because, I am absolutely convinced, as was the previous speaker, when this goes back to the Supreme Court of Canada, as it surely will, the Supreme Court will again reject what you are doing, because what you are doing is fettering the rights of citizens of this country to belong to an association, an association that could be a union, an association with teeth that can benefit them, that can speak for them, that can protect them, that can bargain for them.

This is nothing but a bill that says they can talk to each other. Well, everyone can talk to everyone. This is a bill that says they can talk to their employer, but their employer doesn't have to do anything. This is a bill that says they can write down a grievance, but the grievance does not need to be answered.

This bill, let us be very clear, is not about farmers; it is not about farming; it is a bill, as you have so carefully written, about agricultural workers. But it is a bill—it is misnamed an Agricultural Employees Protection Act—that does not protect the people who work on the farms and in the agri-business of this province.

There is no right of collective bargaining. There is no right to strike. There is no right to even form a union and have arbitration; that is, no right to strike but a right to sit down with an arbitrator who will be fair to both sides. There is no right to do that. We have to remember, that's all the NDP bill, back from 1994, did. It offered the right to collectively bargain with arbitration, without the right to strike. No one is suggesting, not even the members of the NDP, that this be included in the bill, because crops can spoil in the field, because we need to protect the food source. But we believe that all workers, most especially those on farms, deserve the right to collectively bargain and to have arbitration for fair wages and fair conditions of work.

This bill does not allow for a certified bargaining agent, so if you're not happy with the little association of eight or 10 guys who work on a farm, you can't go out and find someone else, because you don't have a certified bargaining agent.

If there is a grievance, if there is something that's going wrong, you are not heard before the Labour Relations Board like every other worker in Ontario. You instead go before the Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal, which absolutely has never had any jurisdiction, has no case law, has no people trained to deal with workers.

Last but not least, section 17 of the Labour Relations Act does not apply to these workers. I am totally convinced: go ahead and pass the bill. I know the members opposite will stand up one after another and pass this bill. But make no bones about it: this will end up back before the Supreme Court of Canada again, and the next time the Supreme Court will impose upon this Legislature what should be done in the first place, and that is the right of every person in this country to belong to an association, including a union, and the right of those people to bargain on their own behalf. I look forward to the Supreme Court doing what this Legislature should do.

I heard the members, yesterday and today, from the Liberal Party speak about this bill. They talk about the family farm and the farmers and they waffle a little bit, talking about how the government opposite isn't making a clear distinction between agri-business and the little ma-and-pa farm. Clearly, with the greatest of respect to the farmers of this province, the era of small, tiny little farms is fast coming to an end. Whether we like it or not, agri-business and large farms are the order of the day.

The era when you could bring in a couple of guys at harvest time to help you bring in the crops or pick the apples in the orchard, off the fields, for a few weeks in September has long since passed. The agri-business of today has hundreds and hundreds of workers. The places have hundreds and hundreds of workers who would do everything from picking mushrooms to the huge expanse down around Leamington—

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): The little ones are still out there, Mike.

Mr Prue: Pardon?

Mr Levac: The little ones are still out there.

Mr Prue: There are some little ones. I never said they're not there, but they are disappearing. They are slowly but surely coming down in numbers. It's a reality, whether we like it or not.

There's a whole romantic nostalgia about this, about the family farm and the independence of the farmer, which I think we should try to preserve, but we also have to understand the economic reality of it. The economic reality is that there are fewer numbers of those people every year. Their own children do not want to stay in that kind of business. Those who are successful get large or they fail, and that's the reality.

But this is not about the farmers, and I want to go back to that again; it's about those who work for the farmers, those who eke out their living for hire, those who go to the small farms, the large farms, the agri-businesses, and work for a salary. They do not work for anything except a salary. They are usually paid the minimum wage to come into the fields, to come under the tents on the farms, to the tobacco farms, and to work in places where you grow mushrooms.

All across the entire length and breadth of this country and this province people have the right to unionize, to organize. People have the right, through arbitration or through the right to strike, to collectively bargain. One can go into the mills, the mines, the factories, the stores, the sweatshops, the schools, the universities, the forests, the civil service, the fisheries or anywhere else people earn their living in this country and find that they have the right to organize, given by this Legislature and by the government of Canada.

The only group that does not have this right are those who make their living on the farms. This government is bound and determined that those people, the most vulnerable perhaps among all the people of this country, will never have the right to do anything except work in sub-servient conditions, will never have the right to protect themselves, their children or their families, and will be subject, I suppose, to all the problems of workplace health and safety.

We know from the statistics in this country that farming is one of the most dangerous jobs there is. In the eight years from 1990 to 1998, for which there are statistics across this country, clearly 1,049 people lost their lives. Thousands were maimed and injured. Yet it is being said they have no right to take that matter into their direct control and bargain for safety.

The Canadian experience on this surely should teach us all something. More than a century ago, Sir John A. Macdonald stood up and did something that shocked many people in Canada. He gave workers the right to organize and the right to strike. Had he not done so, they probably would have done it anyway, but he gave those people the right to collectively bargain and it was enshrined in Canadian law more than a century ago.

There were already unions in existence at that time, but he did something as a Conservative I wish there were a few more of today. He had a social conscience. He understood that people needed to be protected from the excesses of employers, that they needed to have a right to improve the working conditions and the pay they got from the work they did. He did a remarkable thing, and that was a century ago. Members opposite do not recognize, for farm workers anyway, that that same right should be extended today to the last remaining group who do not have any rights at all.

The Canadian experience—I would like the Liberals to listen to this little part—goes back to the civil service of Canada, which up until 1965 had no rights to collectively bargain, but Lester Pearson thought that workers in this country who worked for governments should have rights too, that they should have the right to determine what their pay is or at least to argue about it, that they should have the right to protect themselves in the workplace in terms of health and safety risks.

In 1965 and 1966, Lester Pearson did a pretty gutsy thing. He extended the right to collectively bargain to all civil servants in this country. That right was extended here in Ontario by both Conservative and Liberal governments, which allowed teachers and civil servants to collectively bargain.

Our experience in all this, although painful at times, has shown it works. From time to time there are work stoppages, but for the majority of times things are resolved amicably. You can ask anyone who works in those fields who was not previously protected. The working conditions have improved. There are fewer deaths; there are fewer people losing an arm or a leg; there are fewer people suffering from chemical hazards; and there are people today who work in unionized shops who make more money than they previously did. The corporations and the businesses did not simply die.

The right to collectively bargain and/or arbitration was given to federal civil servants and to our own employees of this Legislature in the province of Ontario a long time ago. They have the right to strike and they would exercise it from time to time. The concept is essential to all workers.

I would ask all the members, but especially the Liberal ones, to remember your roots and to remember that workers need to be protected. Not only do farmers need to be protected, but workers need to be protected as well, especially workers who work in factory farms, in places like the mushroom plant that was the only one unionized under the former legislation, where they worked 24 hours a day inside a factory with manure—how mushrooms are grown—and in the dark. That was the only group that attempted at all to organize.

What we have for every other worker in our society we should give to the most vulnerable, and those are the ones who work on the farms of this province. If we are going to deny it to the poorest among us, then there has to be a better reason than the one enunciated by either of the other two parties.

Others have talked about migrant farm workers. I think, alone among all the people here, I have had a unique perspective in dealing with those men, and in the days I dealt with them it was only men. Farm workers started to come to this country some 30 years ago. They started to come in large numbers as Canadians and Ontarians became less and less enchanted with the mind-numbing and back-breaking work of the fields. They started to come here to harvest tobacco and to work on the farms and to pick the fruit. They came at first mostly from Jamaica, later from other places in the Caribbean, a few from South America, and more recently a lot from Mexico.

If you've ever met any of these people, as I did when I worked in the immigration department for some 20 years, you would know they have several things in common: they are all poor. They were coming here to make the minimum wage so they could send something home to their families, because no matter how bad the conditions were here, at least they were getting some money to send home, where in the places they came from the poverty was absolutely endemic. It was better to have a job than no job at all, and they would come here. They would put up with abuses that would startle you, that would startle the members of this House. Not only did they get paid the minimum wage, but also they were sometimes treated abysmally by their employer and had absolutely, totally no redress except to run away.

As an employee of the immigration department, it was my job on occasion to try to catch them because they had run away from their workplace and therefore were in violation of the work permit and the immigration rules, but also later to try to deport them for the heinous crime of running away from someplace many of you would know was absolute and total servitude. It wasn't servitude for life, but it was servitude for the life of the contract, the work permit, they had.

They lived in horrendous conditions. They were bunked sometimes 15 to 20 people in a small room. They had to pay for this. When they were a few minutes late for work in the morning, they were docked. They were worked sometimes 12 to 15 hours a day without break, without water in the fields, in the heat. They had to put up with that because if they complained, the employer would say they would call the immigration department, send them home, and they would never get another job there again, which was absolutely true.

They couldn't do a single thing about it. If they said anything, the employer would not listen. Everything fell on deaf ears. They had no representation. Not much has changed at all in those 25 years since I stopped doing this. The conditions may be a little bit better, but not much.

I would ask the members opposite and the members from the Liberal party who intend to vote for this bill to go out and see some of these migrant farm workers, these poor people who come because they have nothing else, because this is the only chance they have to get some money for their families.

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): This is a first step.

Mr Prue: This is not a first step. This is continuing servitude for those very people who have no right to organize and no right to complain. I will tell you, go out and see the conditions and you will know why many of them ran away in the old days and why many of them do not live out the contract even to this day. It is because the conditions are that horrible that their only option is to leave. And when they are found working in a factory or someplace in a city, usually for the same low wages, they will at least tell you that the conditions are better. They do not have to put up with what they have to put up with today.

In California, all those years ago, the United Farm Workers of America went out and organized the migrant farm workers of that state and that country. I don't know whether you all remember the horrendous conditions in which they worked, but those horrendous conditions are some of the same horrendous conditions that the workers work in here. You have problems of workers being sprayed with poisonous chemicals while they are in the fields. You have people losing their lives. You have people losing limbs. You have children who do not have schools to go to. You have people living in unsanitary conditions who might suffer from tuberculosis. All of those things exist. But they are not going to be given the right to do anything or say anything that will allow that to go to grievance, to the Ontario Labour Relations Board or anywhere else.

The Supreme Court was absolutely right when they said that the workers in agriculture are not terribly different than the workers in the mills, the mines, the factories, the sweatshops or anywhere else that people are allowed to have freedom of association. If this government is intent, with Liberal support, to pass this bill today or tomorrow or whenever it happens, if you are intent on doing so, then I can only hope, with the greatest of hope possible, to stand here and not only vote against it but to ask that it immediately be sent back to the Supreme Court. I am confident that the Supreme Court in its wisdom will come to exactly the same conclusion they did before, that you are attempting to fetter the rights of people in this country who indeed have the same rights as everyone else—the right to security, the right to collectively bargain, the right to look after themselves and their families—and that this bill is nothing but a sham being put forward by this government in an attempt to circumvent what the highest court in this land has said.

I think I have said enough. I'm going to leave the rest to my colleagues, but I would like to say I will consider it a privilege and an honour to vote against this bill when it finally comes through.

Mr Beaubien: It's a pleasure to rise in the House today to speak on the time allocation on Bill 187, An Act to protect the rights of agricultural employees.

There has been some discussion by the members from Elgin-Middlesex-London and Beaches-East York, but first of all, for the record, I would like to put what the purpose of the bill is all about. "The purpose of this act is to protect the rights of agricultural employees while having regard to the unique characteristics of agriculture, including, but not limited to, its seasonal nature, its sensitivity to time and climate, the perishability of agricultural products and the need to protect animal and plant life."

Having said that, it also protects the rights of the employee. It says under subsection 1(2):

"1. The right to form or join an employees' association.

"2. The right to participate in the lawful activities of an association.

"3. The right to assemble.

"4. The right to make representations to their employers, through an employees' association, respecting the terms and conditions of their employment.

"5. The right to protection against interference, coercion and discrimination in the exercise of their rights."

I think the purpose of the bill is fairly clear. I've heard some of the comments from across the floor stating that again it's an attack by this government on the employees' rights. Representing a rural area, I realize—and I agree with the comments made by the member from Elgin-Middlesex when he said that there are many challenges faced by the farming community, whether it's through the global markets with the Americans and the South Americans. However, I think we have to look at climate changes, the dryness of the weather we've experienced this summer, sometimes the insects they may encounter. We also have to realize that planting time is a very sensitive time for farmers. The weather conditions must be perfect. It's difficult enough for the farming community to make sure that the crops get in at the proper time without having any labour disruption. What this bill does is make sure that our food supply, not only for rural Ontario but for urbanites, will be guaranteed. As I said, there are many challenges, through climate changes, the wet weather and things like this.

Let's look at harvesting time also. Many farmers have harvested their crop already; some are still doing it. If there were to be a disruption today—I'm sure the member from Beaches-East York never mentioned the cost of food in Ontario. I think he did mention the fact that there was a plentiful supply of food, but our food in Ontario is very cheap. I think we're very fortunate to have a plentiful, very affordable source of food. Basically, this bill helps to make sure that we will continue to have a reliable, affordable source of food.

The member from Elgin-Middlesex-London pointed out that this government likes to put roadblocks in front of the agricultural community. I strongly disagree with that. The purpose of this bill is to remove roadblocks in the agricultural community. By having a reliable source of labour that will plant and harvest the crops in a timely manner, when the weather allows it, it allows us to provide an affordable, reliable source of food to the residents of Ontario—not just the rural community but the urbanites.

The member from Elgin-Middlesex-London also mentioned that we are the most bountiful province when it comes to growing agricultural products, and I would certainly agree with that. You mentioned the challenges farmers face and the risks the farming community takes. There is no doubt that no one can disagree with that. There are challenges faced by the farming community on a daily basis. Especially today, when we look at the intensity of the capital investment they must put into their farm, into their equipment, it is a challenge, and there's no doubt some are struggling. Some have struggled in the past and probably some will continue to struggle in the future. However, I think as a government we have a responsibility to make sure that instead of putting roadblocks in front of the agricultural community, we remove roadblocks.

The member from Beaches-East York touched on a very legitimate point when he talked about the small farms disappearing. I agree with him. I think that is a challenge that the farming community has faced, is facing and will continue to face. I know it's very difficult today to define what a family farm is. I think a number of years ago you could probably describe the family farm as a mom-and-pop type of operation, with 50 to 200 acres, a couple of cows, a few pigs, a few chickens and maybe 15 acres of corn. But today I know in my own riding of Lambton-Kent-Middlesex there are family farms that are very, very successful. Some of them are incorporated, some are not, but they farm anywhere from 1,000 to 4,000 acres. It is a business. There's no doubt that the member from Beaches-East York is quite right in saying that the small farmers are becoming a thing of the past and there is a trend toward the larger farms today in order to economically survive the challenges they are facing on the farm.

I look at constituents like Jack and Chris Greydanus in my riding. They're a couple of young people who came into the area, I would say 10 to 12 years ago, and decided to get into the chicken business. I look at what this young couple has done in the past 10, 12 years. Not only have they grown their business but they've grown it in a very efficient and businesslike manner. I think this young couple realized the merits that the agricultural lifestyle could provide to them, but they also realized that there was a tremendous financial investment they had to make. Consequently, they realized that in order to survive and be competitive in the future, they had to run it like a business, and that's exactly what they are doing today. I certainly have nothing but the greatest of admiration for what they have done on their farm. I think that now their son is also involved in the farming industry. They must have made one good impression on the family for the son to continue the chicken operation custom in the Greydanus family.

We can talk about the rights of employees, but the issue of freedom of association is guaranteed under the Charter of Rights, and this bill will not impact on this at all. This bill would extend legislative protections to agricultural workers to ensure that their rights to form and join associations can be exercised in a meaningful way. There's nothing wrong, I think, with belonging to a union or an association. However, when we look at the challenges the farming community is facing, it is imperative that we remove the roadblocks to make sure their planting and harvesting is done in a timely manner, to make sure we have a plentiful and affordable supply of food.

Before we introduced this proposed legislation, we also talked to the people it would affect the most: namely, members of the agriculture community and representatives of organized labour. We've certainly heard different opinions from different people in different areas, but I think overall most of the people we had consultations with were quite supportive of the bill. They realized that there has to be some balance between employees' rights and the employers' rights to grow crops in a timely manner. I would like to stress here that it is also important that all agricultural employees be treated in a very consistent manner.

I agreed with the member for Beaches-East York when he said that some employees, especially itinerant workers, have been treated in an abysmal manner in the past. I'm sure that has occurred in the past, it probably occurs today and it probably will continue to occur in the future. However, we do have legislation in place to protect these individuals. I am sure he's not suggesting that by making sure we have legislation in place that would allow employees to go on strike during harvesting and planting, employees would not be treated unfairly. I think if we look in the workplace today, if we make a comparison, even though there are some locations or some industries that are unionized, I would suggest that we probably could take some examples whereby some employees are not treated fairly. I don't think it's a matter of associations or unions. Sometimes we do have some employers who are not fair to their employees, whether you're unionized or not.

With this, Mr Speaker, I speak very strongly in favour of this bill and I would certainly suggest that all members of the House support this bill for the common good of all Ontarians.

Ms Di Cocco: It's a pleasure to rise and to speak to Bill 187, the Agricultural Employees Protection Act.

This bill attempts to meet the Supreme Court of Canada ruling that the exclusion of agricultural workers from the Labour Relations Act is unconstitutional. Basically what this bill does is, it tries to satisfy that ruling, because in 1995 the provincial Conservatives repealed the Agricultural Labour Relations Act, and it was removed. The Supreme Court of Canada found that this was unconstitutional.

I was reading some sections of the act, and it deals with the right of employees' associations to make representation to employers. "Section 6 of the bill provides that an employees' association shall not act in a manner that is arbitrary, discriminatory or in bad faith in representing its members. "Section 7 of the bill authorizes the Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal to make an order, in specified circumstances, allowing access to property for purposes of attempting to persuade employees to join an employees' association." There is also section 8, which prohibits interference by employers with employees' associations.

The reason it's important that the Liberals are going to support this bill is because this is at least a first step in rectifying the ruling that was overturned by the Supreme Court of Canada. I believe it's incumbent upon us to speak to bills that we believe are not eroding, in my view, the rights of farm employees. If it were eroding the right to associate, then we would be voting against this bill. It doesn't do that. It is actually a bill that is, as I said, a first step.

What we need to do is to take a look at something else, though, and that is that there are large employers that have indoor operations for growing, harvesting, processing and packaging, and they work on a year-round basis. I believe we have to take a look at those sections of the agricultural community as large employers and take it one step further and say, "Do you know what? There is this right to organize." We must handle this in a way that these employees—it's like any other large operation.

I believe that in this day and age we have to look at legislation and be able to put together legislation with all of the parties at the table, not just one side or another side. We have to have the labour representatives—

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: The member is making a very important speech here. I was just wondering if there is quorum present to hear it.

The Deputy Speaker: Could you check and see if there is quorum present, please.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Ms Di Cocco: I want to say that the Ontario Liberals support this bill because it's a step in the right direction and it allows workers to form associations in keeping with our fundamental values. We certainly hope the government has had all their legal beagles deal with the issue, whether—and we suggest we're also trying to support the decision of the Supreme Court of Canada.

But when we form a government, we're going to go further. I believe that legislation must protect the family farms that constitute the vast majority of farms in the province, while recognizing—and I said this a few minutes ago—the right to organize for workers who are employed by large, industry-sized operations. It's important that we take the next step.

Before we called for a quorum I was talking about the need to do things a little bit differently and not just make arbitrary decisions about how legislation should come down from the top. It's time we sat down with all the various, if you want to call them even contrasting, opinions and actually came to a good agreement on how to satisfy the needs of the various groups that are there.

I would say that this bill is a first step. The government has had a reputation that really has eroded workers' rights in this province. They had to bring this bill forward because the Supreme Court of Canada said, "Do you know what? What you did in 1995 was unconstitutional." How do you vote against a bill that at least begins the process and says, "You're allowed to associate now"?

The government claims this bill is constitutional and meets all the requirements of the December 2001 Supreme Court decision. We know the government has consulted with farmers across the province and they had input into this bill, which is another reason we support it.

The food industry is very different from any other industry. One of the things that is important is that work stoppages in agricultural operations on a farm would be devastating to how we would be able to keep our food supply, because of course food has a very short time that it can stay in the field or on the shelf. It is our intent, although we believe in the right to organize for workers who are employed by large employers, not to allow work stoppages on any farm of any size. Why? Because in agricultural operations with a significant year-round, full-time employment base, where organization and collective bargaining should be allowed, disputes will be sent to mediation and, if required, binding arbitration.

Our definitions of "family farm" and "large industrial farms" are going to be based on the size of employment base and other factors, such as whether there is in addition processing, packaging etc on the site. By way of example, it is clear that a family farm with three or four regular employees and additional seasonal labour employed as required will be covered only by the right to associate. We believe there definitely has to be a different section when it comes to very small family farms. It would be very onerous to a small family farm. On the other hand, when you have large indoor operations that process year-round and work on a year-round basis, the workers should have all those rights to organize.

One of the components that makes our economy strong is the fact that you are able to have the workers, the employees, and the employers work together. You have to treat your employees with dignity. They have a right to a good wage to support their families. It also provides a sense of security to the employees, and benefits so they can deal with hardships when there are illnesses or work stoppages etc.

I believe it is the right of workers in this province to earn a decent living. We constantly look at the profits of large companies based on how they can cut the wages of their workers. I know first hand that a good business that pays its employees well is going to do well, because you need both to be successful. You need highly skilled, good people to whom you pay a decent wage, who like to get up in the morning and go to work, and who will make your business successful. I know that first hand.

Organized labour has done a great job in attaining a decent wage for workers in this province. It has done a great job in being able to obtain a sense of security, to have benefits and to bargain successfully, which requires a great deal of skill, with large employers in this province.

I believe they have also done a great deal in advancing safety in the workplace. Sometimes it's not in the interest of employers. Sometimes it's too easy for some employers to cut corners, because they see they can make more money by cutting corners. Sometimes we have to have a check and balance in that regard, and that check and balance has come, I believe, in great part from organized labour. It is organized labour that said, "You know what? We're not going to put up with these conditions any more."

People who work at very precarious job sites should be provided with the knowledge and all the safety measures that are required. One of the things I am really proud of in my community of Sarnia-Lambton is that there has been ongoing co-operation between employers and organized workers in the community. We have been able to create what has been deemed the safest workplace in the country. Everyone knows how important it is that every single person who goes on a job site—it doesn't matter what job site—is conscious of and understands all of the safety responsibilities that both employers and employees have to deal with.

As we move forward with this legislation, as I said—I'll repeat myself one more time—the Liberals will be supporting this bill because this bill attempts to meet the Supreme Court of Canada ruling. We believe it is at least a first step. We will go further when we form the government. Large-scale agricultural operations must organize because they work year-round. They have the same type of environment as a large manufacturing company would have.

It's unfortunate we have to constantly go back and forth because, as I said, the provincial Conservatives repealed the Agricultural Labour Relations Act. In 2001 the Supreme Court of Canada said it was unconstitutional, and therefore we now have this bill before us.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I'm pleased yet again to have an opportunity to speak to this bill and to make it very clear at the outset that we do not support this bill. We think it is the wrong thing to do. We think what the government is doing is, in the end, not only wrong from a moral perspective but from a legal perspective. I predict that they're going to end up before the Supreme Court again and that the Supreme Court is going to say, "You got it wrong."

For the benefit of those people here in the assembly who may not understand this bill in detail, let me tell you exactly what we're doing here today.

Back in 1993 or 1994—I forget the exact date—the NDP government under Bob Rae gave agricultural workers in Ontario the right to join a union. That means they have the right to bargain, they have the right to get a collective agreement once they have bargained, and they have the right to strike should they not be able to get a collective agreement.

In our legislation, we said that during the harvest season there would be a moratorium on strikes and there would be a binding arbitration process so that if there was a dispute in negotiations and it happened to be at the time we were trying to get the crops out of the fields, there would be a mechanism to allow negotiations to proceed at the same time the crops were coming in from the fields. That was what we did as New Democrats. We said that agricultural workers, like other workers in Ontario, have a right to organize, and we recognized that by passing a bill in this Legislature.

One of the first things the Conservative government did under Mike Harris after being elected in 1995 was to repeal that act and take away from workers the long-fought-for right to organize in the agricultural industry. They said that the bill we passed when we were in government was terrible, that we would be striking the family farms and that all the kids who worked for family farms would go to dad and say, "I want to join a union because, Dad, you're being unfair."

It turned out that in the time the legislation was there, not one family farm was organized, as we predicted. In fact, what was being organized were the larger agri-corp farms that are basically large businesses that employ a lot of people, not only to pick the crops out of the fields but to do some of the processing. The government came in and said, "That's it. It's gone." They got rid of the legislation.

Subsequent to that, the union, along with an individual who was affected by the repeal of the legislation, appealed and went before the Supreme Court, which said, "Province of Ontario, you are contravening the Constitution of Canada and the Charter of Rights by taking away a right that has been given to these workers." As people in Ontario, once you are given a right, the argument is that you can't treat people as different classes of people. What you are doing is basically that. It's a long, legal argument that I'm not going to get into because I haven't got time. Needless to say, the Supreme Court said, "You are wrong. You can't take this right away. You have to go back and do it over again."

The government, to be friendly to the family farm, as they like to be seen, said, "We're going to give workers the right to join an association. By giving them the right to join an association"—as the government puts it—"it will satisfy the appeal that went to the Supreme Court and all will be well in the world of Ontario."

I tell you it won't be because, at the end of the day, I predict we're going to end up back before the courts. Workers still don't have the right they've been told they should have by the Supreme Court, and that is the right to join a union.

Let's take a look at what you're trying to do by way of the association. The government says, and the Liberals say, this is going to be good legislation because it strikes a balance and allows people to negotiate by way of an association. What does it really do? It says in the act that you have the right to join an association. Once you've joined that association, you have a right to make representation to your employer and the employer must read your proposal, and that's about it.

Let me see how this is going to work. I'm an agricultural worker. I want to join a union. I can't; I have to join an association. I join the association, and 20 or 200 of us get together and say, "We want to stop working for $6.85 an hour, and we want some health and safety rights. Who's going to go and bargain with the employer?"

"Not me. I don't want him to know who I am, because I'm not protected under the Ontario Labour Relations Act." Reprisals are possible under this act, the way it's being set up.

But somebody bold enough says, "I'll go and negotiate with the employer." He takes the list of demands to the employer and says, "Mr Employer, Ernie Eves says I've got the right to join an association. I'm here on behalf of the people I represent to say I've got some grievances, and I want these issues dealt with."

The guy says, "Give me the piece of paper," and crumples it up. "Thank you. Nice talking to you. Get back to the field." And the requirement of the legislation has been fulfilled. That's basically what this legislation does.

I say to the government, shame on you for not accepting that workers in Ontario should have the right to unionize. I say to the Liberal Party, shame on you too, because the last time I checked, a democracy is about making sure people have rights and making sure people have an opportunity to have a fair hearing before whatever process or tribunal they are given. I say to both the Liberals and the Conservative Party, shame on you. This is an affront to workers—not only agricultural workers, but all workers in the province.

I thought it interesting that the Liberals argued, "You've got to treat agriculture a little bit different because it's important, and at the end of the day we've got to make sure, because food is such an important part of what we do, that we don't mess that up." Well, we allow doctors to strike. The last time I looked, they're pretty important in our society. If the doctor is on strike and doesn't operate at the time you need an operation, you might die. But we say it's OK; the doctors can join a union called the Ontario Medical Association or form any union they want, and it's a pretty powerful one.

Nurses have the right to join a union and to strike. Imagine, if all the nurses in Ontario were to withhold their services at the same time, what danger that would impose on the people of Ontario. So we think it's OK for unions to organize nurses, but we're not going to allow agricultural workers who are paid $6.85 an hour to join a union?

Let's look at a few others in the industrial sector; let's look at the private sector. People who operate nuclear plants have the right to organize. The last time I checked, if we've got nuclear workers who don't know what they're doing, they'll light up your lights at Pickering pretty quick. But it's OK for those people to organize, because their jobs aren't important. It doesn't matter if they do them well or not; they'll just blow up half the province if the nuclear reactor goes up. We give them the right to organize, but agricultural workers can't organize? Give your Tory-Liberal heads a shake. All workers in Ontario should have the right, in a democracy, to join a union, and that should be the individual choice of the worker, not ours as legislators.

So to the argument that the Liberals and Tories make that if we give those workers the right to organize, they're going to go out and organize the family farm, if you take a look at the small business sector in the province, most of which is independently owned or family-owned and -operated, how many family-owned businesses in the province have been organized under UFCW, the Steelworkers, CAW, CUPE or anybody else? I bet you could count them on your hand if they exist. Why? Because families don't go out and organize dad and mom. They work it out at the kitchen table.

Do you think it will be any different on the family farm? Do you think dad and mom, who have three kids who work on the farm, are going to be put in the position of them saying, "Hey, Ma, I'm taking you to the labour relations board. I'm joining a union"? That's not the way it works. There's no danger of the family farm being organized.

So again to the Liberals and Tories, give your heads a shake. The reality is that workers organize for a very simple reason. People sign a union card when there are grievances that are not dealt with by their employer and they feel they are not getting a fair shake, and normally that happens in the larger sector. I'm not saying that small individual businesses never get organized; I wouldn't pretend that. But by and large, independent, family-owned businesses don't get signed up by unions. The last time I checked, sons and daughters want to talk to mom and dad at the Christmas table. They don't want to be in the position of creating conflict. I would say that if mom and dad get organized, then maybe they should get organized. Maybe they weren't treating the kids very well, and if they can't work it out, maybe they should have a team to negotiate for them. What's wrong with that?

So I say to the government across the way, and I say to the Liberal Party that is going to support this legislation, that we will stand proudly and vote against this legislation, because we think that not only is it morally wrong, we also think it is wrong from a legal perspective. In the longer term we will be proven right yet again, because somebody will take you, not the Ontario Labour Relations Board, because they can't go there, back to court, and eventually to the Supreme Court, and a decision will come down that says you don't have the right to take away a right you gave to somebody when it comes to the right to organize.

I say a very simple thing: we either believe in democracy or we don't. If you put yourself out to believe in democracy, it must mean that people should have access to democratic institutions. One of those institutions is unions, and what's wrong with that? As a social democrat and as a New Democrat, I say give the workers the right to join a union. Let them make that determination, and allow them the same ability that anybody else has.

The last point I want to make, because I know my friend Mr Martin wants to speak, is that if we think there isn't a need for unions on some of these larger industrial farms, let's again give our heads a shake. This year alone we have killed—I don't have the briefing note with me, but I think the number is between 20 and 30 workers in the agricultural sector in Ontario in the last 12 months.

People on the other side and in the Liberal Party say that that's not a very serious issue. I say it is a very serious issue. We need to make sure we give workers in those areas, who are in danger from the conditions they work in, the right to organize so they can form health and safety committees, so their unions can train them as health and safety reps to make the farm as safe as possible.

Is this about organizing the family farm? No. The family farm isn't going to get organized under our legislation. It wasn't organized under our legislation. Some of the larger ones need to be organized. But we shouldn't differentiate between a large farm and a small farm. At the end of the day, they're all workers, they all have that right. Let people choose for themselves. That's what democracy is all about. As a New Democrat, I'm on the side of democracy.

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): I'm pleased to rise today to speak in support of the time allocation motion on Bill 187, the Agricultural Employees Protection Act.

We have heard from members across the aisle concerning time allocation and the fact that we use time allocation more than was considered to be appropriate in the past. As everyone will know, of course, the time that we debate time allocation is a great opportunity to put on the record one's viewpoints on this piece of legislation. Obviously it's another day of debate on the piece of legislation.

But the opposition will keep pointing out how it is shutting down their opportunity to speak to the bill. I think it's rather interesting that in almost every case, if we check Hansard, we will find the Speaker being asked to rule on points of order as to whether the opposition is speaking to the bill at all. It seems that most of the time they decide to carry on and on about things that have absolutely nothing to do with the bill. I think that's partly because they agree with the bill. They have decided they are not going to let bills pass, that in their opinion the democratic process is served by having nothing happen in this Legislature.

I want to say I'm happy to be a member of a government that believes we should be here doing the people's business, and not obstructing the people's business, as some might suggest. Just to highlight that point, I want to point out that presently there are three bills before this Legislature—one was debated yesterday—the red light bill, the Emergency Readiness Act and the bill that obligates people to pull to the left when emergency vehicles are in the vicinity, approaching or coming from behind.

My understanding is that every member in this Legislature supports those three bills. I may be wrong, and some of the members who are here may wish to take me to task for that. My understanding is that there is unanimous support for those three bills. Yet we have the opposition saying, "We will not pass those bills. We will continue to debate those bills until the government decides it's time to move on to other important legislation." We have to introduce a closure motion to facilitate the passing of a bill that everyone in this Legislature believes is appropriate.

there was unanimous approval of the bill and all that was in it had been said and it was appropriate then to pass the bill. If that were the way of today, if that were the co-operative spirit from across the aisle, indeed we could spend more time debating bills that are of great importance to the opposition and less time debating bills just for the sake of taking the time of this Legislature. I think much more could be done in moving these things along if we came to a compromise and agreement in supporting those things that are good for the people of Ontario, as opposed to what is good politically to obstruct the process of government.

Having said that, I just want to speak quickly to the actual piece of legislation, the Agricultural Employees Protection Act. We will all be aware that the former government put forward a piece of legislation that was commonly known in my agricultural community as the unionization-of-the-family-farm bill. In 1995, when I went to the people of Oxford to ask for their votes to come and represent them here in the Legislature, one of the promises I made was that as a government we would get rid of that piece of legislation; in fact, that we would not have unionization of the family farm. We know that bill was challenged in the Supreme Court. In fact, the Supreme Court ruled that all people of this province under the Charter of Rights and Freedoms have a right to freedom of association, including farm workers. This, I think, is a very important issue. That's why the Minister of Agriculture and Food brought forward this bill that accommodates the freedom of association of farm workers.

I think one of the things we need to recognize is the process of unionization and collective bargaining. The final premise of collective bargaining, in my view, is based on the fact that the employer has a right to ask the employee not to come to work if they can't come to an agreement, and the employee has a right to withhold their services if through negotiations together they cannot come to an agreement as to what each party believes is the appropriate level of compensation for their services. In most sectors where collective bargaining takes place, we will find that the employer's decision is based on the competitive marketplace. Obviously, if my employees are not working and producing the product I'm going to sell in the marketplace, my competitors are going to be selling it. So there's a tension there on behalf of the employer. Conversely, if the employee decides not to go to work, obviously they're not going to be making a living wage or they're not going to be getting paid. So there's a tension in the system there. Collectively that comes together, and at some point they come to a compromise so both parties can, again, receive remuneration for their services and get back to production.

That doesn't work in agriculture. As the crop is ready to harvest, there's no opportunity for the employer to say, "Oh, guess what? We can negotiate for two or three weeks," because by the time that happens, it's too late to harvest the crop; it's too late to process the meat that's going to market. It is all very time-sensitive and very critical to be going at that time. So we need to find a better way of making sure that neither party can benefit from or hold hostage the other side in the negotiations.

The opposition would have us believe, "Don't worry, because it will only happen in large operations." But as the member from Elgin-Middlesex-London mentioned, he was unable to define "large" and "small" and "family farm" and "factory farm." With tongue in cheek, I would just say that I've heard it mentioned a time or two that the way to judge the farm that's too large is when one farmer says, "Whoever has one more unit than I have is in fact a large operator," but no one would suggest that they were a large operation. So I think that would point out that there is no way to identify which would be appropriate and which would be inappropriate as far as family or intensive livestock.

I think we've all come to the conclusion that the face of agriculture is changing in Ontario. In fact, we are seeing agriculture done differently today than it was in my forefathers' day. I think it's very important that we address that issue and make sure that the agricultural product can be planted, harvested, taken to market, processed and on the store shelves for us in a timely and appropriate manner.

I know when it comes to poultry, it's very critical that the poultry is exactly the right size to make Chicken McNuggets, to make it appropriate for them to be sold in that manner. If they were raised for that, and if negotiations happened to fall in that period of time, they would not be marketable for that purpose and the intent of that food would be lost. I think it's very important that we find a way to balance labour negotiations and discussions, and the appropriate level of compensation, in a manner that does not affect the flow of food in our society.

I think it's also very important that we address the issue of freedom of association. This bill, I am happy to say, is a balanced piece of legislation that balances the right of the worker with the right of the employer. I have a number of larger agricultural operations in my riding that, without legislation, have done a very good job of putting together associations that speak on behalf of all employees within that workplace, together with the employer, and have come to agreements on what their level of compensation and their working conditions should be. I think it does work, but it's very important to recognize that this legislation does provide for an orderly process to deal with that. Again, I think it's important to recognize that this does allow freedom of association for agricultural workers.

This bill didn't just come out of the air. In fact, the court ruling was some time back. It has taken a while because the minister has had the opportunity or has taken the opportunity to have intensive consultations with all the players: the workers in the agriculture and agri-food industry and the processors in the industry. I think it's very important to recognize the size of our agriculture industry and the importance of it to our economy. Not that we should take away anyone's rights because of the size of the industry they work in, but I think it's very important to understand that the agri-food industry is a large industry.

There are 67,000 farms in Ontario, and more than 200 commodities are produced. So it's not a simple solution that will deal with everyone. We've heard the members opposite talk about mushrooms. We've heard others talk about intensive livestock. We've heard about the harvesting of field crops, the tender fruit industry, the grape industry. All of them are time-sensitive and all of them are very important in this very large industry in the province.

Also, in processing, there 1,200 food and beverage processors located in Ontario. Almost half of all the food in the Dominion of Canada is processed right here in Ontario. In 2001, Ontario accounted for $800 million in new investment in the food and beverage sector. Ontario has led all other provinces in Canadian agri-food exports by shipping almost $7.8 billion in products in 2001.

Agriculture is more than just food. Cloth and textiles begin in the barnyard as wool and in the field as hemp—an experimental crop, incidentally, that's been produced in Oxford county for the last number of years. They are also used in making paper and a variety of industrial products.

Mr Speaker, maybe you had the pleasure of getting a basket from the Ontario corn producers a number of months ago—it was like a grocery basket but there were a number of other items in the basket—to remind us of the importance of corn in our society. As I was going through the basket, there were a number of things that were somewhat surprising to me. One that comes to mind as I stand here this afternoon is that there was a calculator in the basket. In fact, I have it sitting in my constituency office in Woodstock and it has, of course, the name of the Ontario corn producers on it. When I asked Mr Start, a representative of the area in my riding, why this calculator was in the basket, he said, "Because it's made from a by-product of corn." I think that's how extensive the use of our agri-food industry is. It's very important to recognize the importance of agriculture in the system.

I think it's also very important to recognize that the agriculture community generally is happy with, in the consultation that comes out, the process they presently have in place in negotiating with their people to have fair compensation. There was no great outcry from the agricultural workers or employers as to changes needing to be made, all recognizing that they are all entitled to their constitutional rights.

We also heard that it's very important that all of agriculture be treated fairly and equitably, not to have a certain group in the agricultural community that would be treated differently from another group. Again, as the opposition would suggest, to treat larger operators differently from smaller operators, in the opinion of the people we've talked to in the agricultural industry, is wrong. We have to be fair to everyone.

We also heard that the agricultural industry should not be vulnerable to the risk of potentially devastating labour disputes. As I mentioned earlier in my presentation, it's very important that as the truckload of sweet corn arrives at the processing plant, the workers don't say, "Thank you, but no thank you. Not this week." That load of corn cannot wait until next week for processing.

When this bill was drafted, we remembered what we heard. The proposed legislation before us today does respect the individual and constitutional rights of agricultural employees while having a regard to the unique characteristics of agriculture. The proposed legislation would enable agricultural employees to—I think this is very important—exercise their right "to form or join an employees' association ... participate in the lawful activities of that association ... to assemble ... make representation to the employers, through their employees' association"—all the things a trade union can do. The proposed legislation would ensure that they could do all this, free from interference, coercion or discrimination.

We should also emphasize that the proposed legislation contains no restrictions on the composition of an employees' association other than that the association be comprised of agricultural employees. Employees' associations could be comprised of agricultural employees from any number of farms, could be organized on any basis that the employees want and could be a branch of another organization, including a branch of a local union. A union or other organization could assist employees in forming an employees' association whether the association was formed as a branch, a local of the union or other organization or as a separate association. Again, recognizing the fallacy of the comments from across the aisle, they can be part of a trade union. They just cannot have the collective bargaining process that trade unions have.

It's also worth noting that while the proposed legislation is not about workplace health safety and is directed at agricultural employees' rights of association, it would enhance the ability of employees and employers to communicate about terms and conditions of employment, including any concerns about workplace health and safety. I think it's very important that that's part of the discussions but not the thrust of the bill. The members opposite would suggest that they would hold up passing of this bill because there's not enough in it. This is a bill to deal with the Supreme Court ruling on the right to freedom of assembly on behalf of our agricultural workers, and this bill deals with that. It will also have some benefits of health and safety, but that's not what the bill was written for.

This bill also allows for some recourse for employees and workers who believe they are not being listened to and that the employer is not dealing appropriately with them and is contravening their rights. Of course, they would be able to appeal the employer's actions to the agriculture, food and rural affairs tribunal, which would hear the application and then make a decision on whether to the employer is infringing on the employees' rights.

The proposed legislation would also protect a farm's most valuable assets—land, livestock and crops—by recognizing an employer's right to control access to the property. In the business community we often see that when a business has a work stoppage, they will shut down the computers and shut down the operation so they can make sure nothing happens during the work stoppage that would be detrimental in the long term for both the employees and the employer. You can't just shut down a barn full of livestock. It must be maintained. It must be fed and watered, and it must be looked after. This legislation allows the employer or the owner of the operation to make sure that process can continue, even though the people who have a disagreement decide not to come to work. This legislation is quite clear that they cannot stop the normal process of farming.

As I mentioned earlier, the Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal will hear such things in the application and take into consideration human health and safety, normal agricultural practices, animal health and safety, plant health, planting and harvesting, bio-security needs, privacy and property rights. These are essential considerations to ensure that normal agricultural operations are not unduly interfered with. Again, a two- or three-day delay in the process of farming can have a year's devastating impact on that agricultural operation.

The proposed legislation would protect the rights of Ontario's agricultural employees and would also recognize the unique characteristics of Ontario's agricultural operations. The proposed legislation is carefully and appropriately balanced. I think the important part of this piece of legislation is the balance, recognizing the rights and the charter rights of people who work in the agriculture and agri-food industry and the rights and freedoms that the people operating the agriculture and food industry have, and finding a balance between the two to make sure they can coexist, as they presently do.

I want to tell you that, on average, the labour-management relationship in agriculture, which up until now has not had this type of charter protection for employees, is working as well as any other industry where they have all the other attributes that the New Democrats suppose we should put in place to unionize the family farm. The system is working well now. We want to make sure that by this legislation everyone has the charter rights and freedoms the Supreme Court mentioned put in place and a way to administer it to make sure that if they believe it's not being adhered to, someone is there to hear their complaint and make a judgment on the merits of their appeal.

As I mentioned, I think it's very important that this legislation be passed and moved along to make sure that employees' rights are enshrined in legislation, as we are doing here, and that we have a balanced piece of labour legislation for agricultural workers. I would encourage all members to vote in favour of this piece of legislation to make sure we can accommodate our Supreme Court obligations as they were set forth. Thank you for allowing me the opportunity to speak to this motion this afternoon. We look for speedy passage of this bill.

Mr Martin: I'm glad to be following the member from Oxford, who just spoke, because what I have to say will be in complete juxtaposition to what he just presented. What he has presented is an insult to every working man and woman across this country. To suggest for a second that this legislation somehow brings a whole large group of very important workers in this province into the organized labour movement or gives them the right to bargain collectively or act as a labour association or organization is not telling it as it is.

Before I get into my defence of our position where this bill is concerned, I want to say that here we are again, on a Wednesday afternoon. As I always say when I get up here on Wednesday afternoon, it seems we have a time allocation motion. Every Wednesday this government decides that the piece of legislation that's before this place to be debated through the democratic process—first reading, second reading, third reading, committee—which over the years we've built up as tradition, the way we put in place legislation and laws that govern the way we operate together, the way we order our public life, is now just simply rammed through in this place. It's brought before the House. The government deems in its wisdom that it is the right thing to be doing on behalf of the people of the province. They're not interested whatsoever in the opinion or the view of the opposition or the public out there. They're just driving an agenda that is very self-serving to themselves and their benefactors for the most part, creating efficiencies for them and their small group of supporters to the detriment and the negative impact of almost everybody else who calls Ontario home.

The only thing different this afternoon for me is that my colleague for Nickel Belt is off on committee doing other work. Normally it's the two of us, and it seems we have the same conversation every Wednesday afternoon, particularly in this session of the Legislature, because there hasn't been a bill brought before this House yet that this government hasn't deemed after a day or two that it's time to time-allocate, time to drive it through. They're impatient, they're tired of the process, they're tired of democracy; they simply want to have their way, get their legislation through, impose on the people of this province their will and let's get on with it.

We find ourselves here again. It's Wednesday afternoon, so it has to be a time allocation motion. It's a time allocation motion; therefore it has to be Wednesday afternoon. However, having said that, I want to speak very clearly and directly to the legislation that's in front of us.

To suggest that what has been tabled is an honest and thoughtful effort to try to provide some relief or an opportunity for people working in the agricultural sector to organize, as every other worker across this province has the right to do, is to insult the intelligence of all of us, but, more importantly, the intelligence of men and women working across this province and those who work in the organized labour sector of Ontario. It's a joke. It's a sad joke that's being played by this government.

In their haste to get rid of anything that smacked of progressive labour legislation that we as a government introduced between 1990 and 1995, they moved post-haste in the early years of their mandate to get rid of all the legislation that we brought in that was considered to be state-of-the-art, front-of-the-line, progressive labour legislation to bring Ontario into the modern world of labour relations, particularly where many European jurisdictions are concerned. They moved to get rid of it, but in this instance to dismiss the act that we brought in that gave agricultural workers the right to organize and collectively bargain, that put in place a provision for them, if there was a disagreement, for arbitration that didn't see them going out on strike, which was a recognition that there are some sensitivities in this economic sector of our province that we needed to consider, and we were willing to do that.

This government was brought to court by UFCW, the United Food and Commercial Workers of the province. They lost their case, as they've done just this week with the clean water act they've introduced, to bring in the bare minimum that would, by their analysis, pass muster with the courts. We have this bill in front of us here. We recognize that earlier this week—because it's the trend of this government not to want to protect the citizens of this province. Whether it's in labour relations or in their dealings with the environment and protecting the water that we drink, you do the very minimum.

The clean water act that the government brought in earlier this week was not in any way a floor from which to grow; it was a ceiling, rather, beyond which they will not go in order to protect the water of this province. I dare say we'll end up in trouble in the not-too-distant future on that front, just as we'll end up before the courts again with this legislation, spending just tons of public money to defend the ideological position of this government where the labour movement and organized labour are concerned, I suggest only to lose yet once again.

I am saying here this afternoon that when we become government after the next election under the able leadership of Howard Hampton as the new Premier, we will be taking this out of the judicial jurisdiction that it will most definitely, I believe, be in by that time and give workers in the agricultural sector the right to organize, as every other man and woman working in this province has the right to do, so that they can together collectively bargain for wages and as well deal with the very difficult and challenging issues of health and safety in the agricultural sector, so that every man and woman who works in the agricultural sector in this province is protected to the best of our ability, and if they're not protected, that they have rights to recourse if they should get hurt to be able to look after themselves and their families.

Any credible organization out there today that monitors or plays as safeguard on the rights of men and women in the world will tell you that one of the very basic and fundamental rights of any worker, man or woman, in this world today is the right to organize as a union, as a labour organization, to bargain collectively for their wages and to protect themselves where health and safety are concerned, and to move from there to look at benefit packages, at things like vacation, time off and number of hours of work, and also to negotiate a pension for a healthy retirement for those workers after they've spent 30, 40 or 50 years giving of their blood, sweat and tears to their employer so that they then can have some hope that there will be some comfort for them.

Just by way of some background to this bill, because I think people out there may be somewhat confused where this legislation is concerned, it is not an appropriate response to the legal action that was taken and the findings of the court. It is not a beginning of anything, in my view, toward representing and giving workers in the agricultural sector a right to collectively bargain on their behalf or to act as a union in this province. It is not. It is an insult and a joke. Agricultural workers, who had always been excluded from the provisions of the Labour Relations Act, were granted collective bargaining rights by the Agricultural Labour Relations Act, 1994, when the New Democratic Party was government in this province. It was an initiative of that government. While the right to strike was not included because of sensitivities I mentioned a few minutes ago, contracts could be settled by final-offer arbitration.

The Conservatives overturned this act in 1995 and stripped some 200 United Food and Commercial Workers members working for Highline Mushrooms near Leamington of their collective bargaining rights. At the close of 2001, the Supreme Court of Canada ruled that the Ontario government's ban on unionization among agricultural workers violates the Canadian Constitution and the Charter of Rights and Freedoms. This government has no respect for the law, for the Canadian Constitution, for the Charter of Rights and Freedoms or for the opinion of many international organizations such as the United Nations, in this respect.

Chris Stockwell, the then Minister of Labour, said, "The government is disappointed in the decision" that the court came down with, and "We'll review all of our options before repealing this law." The ministry has been engaging, as they say, in consultation since then. We ask, consultation with whom, for whom and about whom?

This bill attempts to meet the bare minimum set out by the Supreme Court decision, and we can make the case that it doesn't meet that bare minimum, that it comes significantly and seriously under the wire.

What does the bill say, in fact? The bill says that workers have the right to form associations. They have the right to meet informally to talk about God knows what, but certainly not to focus on and act collectively to increase their income or to protect their health and safety or all those other very valuable things that labour unions do. They have the right to make representations to their employer through their associations. They have the right to use a delegate to make those representations and have an employer listen to or read the representations. They have the right not to be treated in an arbitrary or discriminatory way by their bosses because of their association or the representations they make.

They have the right of access to fellow workers for recruitment purposes after a written application is filed with the tribunal—that's the Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal, not the labour relations board. I might add—and a hearing determines that such access is necessary to effectively communicate with workers and does not interfere with experimental agricultural practices, normal agricultural practices, planting, growing or harvesting, privacy or property rights.

They have the right to non-interference from management, including no reprisals for associating such as firing or discipline; no conditions in contracts that would hinder association work; no threat of dismissal; no coercion to refrain from forming or joining an employees' association; the right to appeal to the tribunal, but only if the matter is not trivial, frivolous or vexatious or based on an incident that occurred more than six months ago.

Who makes those decisions? Who decides whether the case brought before the tribunal is trivial, frivolous or vexatious? As I said a few minutes ago, it's the agriculture, food and rural affairs tribunal put together by this government.

However, having said that, agricultural workers do not have other rights that other workers have. They cannot collectively bargain nor do they have the right to strike. No employees' association may interfere with a worker's right to join a different employees' association, so you could have three or four of these things in one workplace, and there can be no certified bargaining agent.

The agriculture, food and rural affairs tribunal, which is not the Labour Relations Board, will be the body that workers appeal to when the act is contravened. Section 17 of the Labour Relations Act does not apply to employees or employers in agriculture.

What is the Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal, this body that's going to oversee this new regime? It's the product of a red tape bill that I spoke about here the other night, an organization that was put together by this government, born in the cabbage patch somewhere with no representation or input from a standing committee of the Legislature or anybody from the opposition in terms of its mandate or what it would look at or what the terms of reference might be of that association or who in fact funds it. This tribunal is a product of that organization that amalgamated all agricultural tribunals, including the former drainage tribunal, into the new Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs Appeal Tribunal. Under this act, the tribunal can now appoint people to deal with employer-employee disputes.

If any of you have watched—I participate every week at the appointments that are made and vetted by the standing committee on agencies, boards and commissions. You'll know that the people who are being appointed these days to all of those organizations are, for the most part, members of the Conservative Party, supporters of the Conservative Party, defeated candidates who ran for the Conservative Party in this province. To expect that they would act in a judicial and fair fashion on behalf of the folks coming before them by way of an association of farm workers organized—I don't think so.

Increasingly migrant workers do farm work. They come from Mexico and Caribbean countries. The United Food and Commercial Workers are concerned that these workers might be specifically excluded from this act, but we have to take a look at that further, and that's why we would have been asking, if we weren't debating a time allocation motion here this afternoon, that we take this bill to committee so we could make amendments and make sure it includes everybody who's working in the farm industry in the province.

We don't think the government's going to get away with this. We think that, just as in the previous court case before the Supreme Court, they're going to lose. The Supreme Court decision, in our view, was extremely clear in its verdict, and this will not cut the mustard. Farm workers are not second-class citizens and this law, in our view, will be struck down by the courts in the very near future. What bothers us is that we will be back to where we were last week before this bill was introduced, with millions of dollars in legal fees wasted in an effort to allow this government to drive its ideological agenda to not support workers in their attempt to unionize.

It was quite telling a few minutes ago, as we listened to the member from Oxford talk about how he made a promise, before he was elected, to the farmers in his area that he would never allow their workers to be unionized. That should tell it all to you right there in a nutshell. Any small attempt to coat this bill in language that would make it look like it was a union or an organized labour group should be dispelled by simply going to Hansard or listening to the member from Oxford when he said very clearly in this House that he promised he would repeal the act put in by our government in 1994 that allowed agricultural workers to form unions, and that he would never allow unions to happen in the agricultural sector in this province. That's exactly what he's doing.

This is in no way, shape or form an organized labour effort that we have before us, and you can't pretend that it is. It's not even a beginning. It is way below that. As I said previously, it's an insult and a joke. Particularly is it an insult, and rather sad and tragic actually, more so than a joke, when you consider that there have been 1,049 fatalities in Canadian agriculture between 1990 and 1998.

We on this side of the House, in this small corner of this side, the New Democratic Party caucus, are very clear where we stand where this bill is concerned. We stand in the camp of organized labour. We stand shoulder to shoulder with organized labour to say to this government that this just won't cut it, that this isn't good enough, that this is an insult and that it could be tragic in the long run. We won't support it. We couldn't support it, in all good conscience. We stand shoulder to shoulder with those organizations out there that demand that every man and woman working in the world today has the right to belong to a union, and we will be voting that way—

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. Further debate?

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): From what I heard this afternoon in this debate, we clearly have a balanced piece of legislation in Bill 187, the Agricultural Employees Protection Act, in particular in the comments I heard from my friend and neighbour, the member for Oxford, and the comments from my friend the member for Lambton-Kent-Middlesex. I feel we have an appropriately and carefully balanced piece of legislation at the end of the day—if you'll pardon that expression. A great deal of thought has gone into this, there has been consultation and we are drawing to a close with a significant amount of debate on this bill.

I feel this bill protects the rights of Ontario's agricultural employees, and on the other side of that balance I made reference to, it also recognizes the unique characteristics of our farms and other agricultural operations. The legislation clearly recognizes Ontario's agricultural production, a key contributor to the quality of life that we all enjoy in this province, whether we live in the city or on the back roads.

This legislation must not be vulnerable to any risk of potential labour disruption. We've heard time and time again during this debate about the significance of planting and harvesting, shipping of animals to market—extremely time-sensitive operations. All too often, the reality is that the timing of these operations is not determined by the farmer but by Mother Nature, whether it be lambing time or time to spray for weeds or insects. Since agricultural production operations depend on biological processes, quite frankly, they can be vulnerable to sudden pressures and crises at any time. A situation like that illustrates what happens when ivory tower thinking collides with the hard facts of reality.

I'm going to quote from an editorial in the Simcoe Reformer. I will point out, to their credit, that when this newspaper publishes editorials, the author of the editorial is listed at the bottom. In this case, it's a journalist by the name of Monte Sonnenberg. He goes on to say:

"Few farmers can absorb significant disruptions and survive to grow another year. However, the labour movement, abetted by the courts, is pushing for the right to bankrupt farmers whenever the moment moves it. Meanwhile, the government is trying to avoid an outcome with extreme potential for injustice and violence.

"In its quiet moments, even the labour movement has to admit that the issue of unionized farm workers is a potential minefield for all concerned. Many farmers—perhaps the majority even—are barely making it from year to year. Yet some want to tighten the screws on them even further."

We heard, through consultation, that Ontario's agricultural employers value the working relationship they have with their employees, the men and women who they do work side by side with in farming; they value the relationship that they already have. They believe it's a good one and they believe it's one that should not be tampered with or jeopardized.

We heard, as we went forward and through these consultations—and we should bear in mind—that it's important to treat all agricultural employees in a consistent manner. When we drafted this bill, we remembered what we had heard. The proposed legislation before us today does respect the individual and constitutional rights of agricultural employees, while having regard to the unique characteristics of farming.

I do wish to make mention here, and I quote again: "These people need to understand that farmers have little control over their markets. They are price takers, not price makers. Yet they are forced to pay what the price makers insist on receiving for their inputs. Profitability is thus an uncertain prospect." Again, I'm referring to an editorial in my local daily paper. "Given the importance of a healthy agricultural sector to our collective well-being and the ongoing fragility of the same, farmers simply do not need someone else ramming their hand into their pockets."

I made mention of the consultation process. We have some feedback from the meetings that were held; Mark Wales, for example. Mark is an OFA representative on the Labour Issues Coordinating Committee. I have attended meetings of that committee. Mark Wales addressed a recent OFA board of directors meeting: "The government listened to the concerns of agriculture and this is legislation we can live with."

This proposed legislation would enable agricultural employees to do a number of things: first, to exercise their rights to form and join an association; second, to participate in lawful activities of that association; third, the right to assemble; and fourth, to make representations to an employer through an employees' association. The proposed legislation very clearly would ensure that they could do all of this free from interference, free from coercion and free from discrimination.

I would emphasize that the proposed legislation contains no restrictions on the composition of such an association other than that the association be comprised of agricultural employees. The employees' association could be comprised of agricultural employees from any number of farms. It could be organized on any basis that the employees want. It could be a branch of another organization, including a branch of a local of a union. A union or other organization could assist these employees in forming their employees' association, whether that association was formed as a branch or a local of a union or of another organization, or it could be a completely separate organization altogether.

To be clear, while an agricultural employee may join an association that is a union, the proposed legislation does not extend collective bargaining to agricultural workers. This is very important, and I do wish to convey words from Ken Forth, with the Ontario Fruit and Vegetable Growers Association. Mr Forth is chair of the labour section of that association.

"The legislation is doing exactly what the Supreme Court requested in terms of meeting the rights to associate. It also recognizes farming as a unique industry. It's a living biological production system, and you can't have strikes in this business." Forth went on to say that the new legislation will protect the lawful right of workers to assemble and make representation to employers free of discrimination and coercion, as I previously explained.

Another person heavily involved in these issues, a long-time fruit and vegetable grower from Cedar Springs, Hector Delanghe, said the legislation will clear up a lot of uncertainty about farm labour issues that have existed over the last seven years. Mr Delanghe has been actively involved in dealing with many of these issues. Hector Delanghe is quoted in the Ontario Farmer and has said that it would improve the lot of workers to put pressure on a few bad-egg employers to mend their ways and provide better working conditions for their employees. "Farm workers will be able to associate and generate more interest in working conditions and farm safety issues," said Delanghe.

I feel it is worth noting that while this proposed legislation is not about workplace health and safety, although farm accidents have certainly been discussed by a number of speakers during this debate over the last several days, the legislation is directed at agricultural employees' rights of association. It would enhance the ability of employees and employers to communicate about health and safety issues, about terms and conditions of employment, clearly and quite frankly including any concerns about workplace health and safety.

We have heard this in the debate as well: farm injuries and farm fatalities are a concern. They are certainly a concern of our government; they are certainly a concern in my riding of Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant. I have a personal concern. In the 1980s I was actively involved with our local farm safety association. I served for several years as the president of the Norfolk farm safety association.

I have some data. Of the 109 total farm fatalities since 1996, 17 were under the age of 16 years. This represents 16% of all the deaths. Twenty-three were over the age of 65, representing 21% of those deaths. The Canadian agricultural industry surveillance program shows a strong, statistically significant decline in the number of work-related farm deaths in Ontario—this is good news—between the years of 1990 and 1998, from about 40% to 20%. The rate of agricultural employee lost-time injuries also declined, by 25%, from 1996 to 2001.

The Ontario Farm Safety Association is the lead agency for farm safety education. The Ontario Ministry of Agriculture and Food has been co-operating with the Farm Safety Association for a number of years; for example, to fund safety projects that target farm families and, given the statistics I've just presented to you, projects that target the very young and older workers. The Ministry of Agriculture continues to support the Farm Safety Association, the Ontario Agricultural Human Resources Council, and the WSIB—the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board—in these efforts; for example, through delivering what's referred to as the farm safety audit program, designed to improve working conditions.

Very clearly, the mandate of the Farm Safety Association is to reduce the number of injuries, accidents and fatalities on our farms in Ontario, specifically in the agricultural-horticultural landscape operations covered under the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board, whereby employers, owner-operators and members finance the Farm Safety Association through a portion of their assessments paid to the WSIB. Roughly two thirds of Ontario's farmers are not covered by workplace safety and insurance; therefore, OMAF provides assistance to them in the form of a $90,000 annual funding to extend health and safety programs to all farmers, regardless of their linkage to the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board.

The Farm Safety Association produces a glossy publication titled Farmsafe. It keeps us all up to date on issues and provides those reports on injuries and accident trends. Both the Farm Safety Association and the Ontario Agricultural Human Resource Council are working with the Workplace Safety and Insurance Board to deliver a comprehensive agricultural safety audit program. This audit is designed to improve working conditions. Over 4,000 farm managers have requested this audit program over the past two years. There's also the young and new worker orientation program to cover legal obligations, duties, identifying hazards in the workplace and mapping out very clearly what one is to do if an injury occurs. So we see the figures. The injury and fatality rate is in decline. As I've indicated, the legislation doesn't directly address safety on the farm, but it does open the door to talking about it, to discussing terms of conditions of employment.

I feel we have a good piece of legislation here, especially given the size of Ontario's agricultural industry, the large number of employees involved. We know the NDP position. I do regret that the Liberals did not support this at first reading, and I also regret that the Liberals moved to adjourn the debate yesterday. I don't know what the reason for that was. It think it's very important for us to have had this discussion and debate. It's important to air the issues connected with this bill. It remains to be seen which Liberals and how many vote in support of it today.

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I'm pleased to join the debate. I start off with my concern about the process here, that we're now dealing with, once again, a time allocation motion. I think many of us came from a background of municipal politics, either at a school board or a council where we're used to public input. If the public wants to have an opportunity for input into a decision by council, they have that opportunity. Here at the Legislature there's virtually no opportunity for the public to have input.

In this particular case, what we're faced with is that the government's introduced what we call a time allocation motion. It means the bill can't even go to a committee. No member of the public who has an interest in the bill has an opportunity for input. I find that unfortunate.

I remember that the government, on a tax bill, decided on a fundamental change in tax policy: corporate taxes 25% below the US. There was never an opportunity for the public, or dare I say even the Legislature, to have this to a committee.

The second point I'd make is that the member for Haldimand-Norfolk raised the issue of the Liberal Party and how it stands on this bill. We've been very clear on it. He may not have listened or he may not have been here to hear the debate. We're voting in favour of the bill.

The public should recognize that the bill was introduced here in the Legislature and we abstained on what's called first reading. The reason for that—and the public should understand this—is that we think our farm community is extremely important. We think a piece of legislation introduced that has a profound impact on them deserves some study—a reasoned debate on it. We hadn't even seen the bill. The member for Haldimand-Norfolk may simply stand up and say, "Yea; I'll vote for anything." He'd never seen the bill. He couldn't have seen the bill. But it was introduced here and he was all set to vote on it.

I would just say to the public that the Liberal Party said, "Listen, we want a chance to see the bill. We want to know what's in the bill." So we abstained, and I have no difficulty with that. The Conservative members say, "You shouldn't even care what's in it. You should just simply vote." I say, no wonder the public is cynical about the process we follow around here.

The member said it was for first reading. There was a vote on it and we were expected to vote—"Are you in favour or against this particular bill?"—without ever having seen it. Mr Chudleigh may be prepared to stand up and vote on a thing like that, but frankly if in the end you are going to have to defend a decision, I suggest maybe you'd like to read it. The public can make its own mind up on it.

To our rural community, to our farm community, I just say I'm very happy with the decision we made to abstain. We've now had an opportunity to debate the bill and we're prepared to support it—not without reservation, I might add. In fact, my leader has been quite clear. He said, "Listen, there's an aspect of this bill that we don't like. For what's called a large factory farm operation we think there should be an opportunity for organization of the workforce." My leader, Dalton McGuinty, said, "Listen, there will be an election coming up. If we win, get elected, that's what we will do." I've listened carefully to the debate in the Legislature, and the major concern is particularly that.

I would also add that farm safety is a concern, and the injuries in our farm community are a concern, but that has to be dealt with in a way that affects our entire farm community so that small farms and large farms are dealt with. Again this bill does not address that—nor can it, if I might say.

The member for Haldimand-Norfolk says, "I don't know where the Liberals stand." I just say to him, you've got to come here and listen to the debate because we've been very clear on it. If you don't understand it, you haven't been here to listen to the debate. You say, "The Liberals abstained on first reading." I say again to our farm community, recognize that not a Liberal member had seen that bill. Our House leader may have seen it for one minute. So you may not like the fact we abstained, but I have no difficulty in explaining that to our farm community. We'll be very happy to support the bill and make the changes we need later.

HIGHWAY TRAFFIC AMENDMENT ACT (EMERGENCY VEHICLE SAFETY), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LE CODE DE LA ROUTE (SÉCURITÉ DES VÉHICULES DE SECOURS)

Resuming the debate adjourned on October 24, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 191, An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle / Projet de loi 191, Loi modifiant le Code de la route afin de garantir la sécurité des véhicules de secours arrêtés sur une voie publique et celle des personnes qui se trouvent à l'extérieur de tels véhicules.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): I'm looking for leadoff speakers, and I'm starting with the government, to my right. I'll look to my left, the Liberal caucus.

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): Mr Speaker, I'll be sharing my time with the member from Elgin-Middlesex-London.

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): The outstanding member from Elgin.

Mr Levac: The outstanding member from Elgin-Middlesex-London. He's extremely outstanding. I want to put on the record, Mr Speaker, that there was a large guffaw on a previous bill that was voted on that I'm going to make reference to only for a short moment. I know the member who is going to be speaking will comment on it. When time allocation gets used as often as it has been in this sitting, it's very standard practice not to vote in favour of doing that because it stifles debate. That's what was voted on just before dinner. I think it's important to point out that the member beside me is an extremely active and large advocate for our farmers in Ontario. I've heard from members across my riding and across the province how proud they are to know of the hard work Mr Peters does on behalf of farmers in this province. I don't need to be speaking on him.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: My colleague is putting some very important comments on the record here on a piece of legislation, a piece of work that we're doing here tonight, and I don't think we have a quorum to hear him. That would be really unfortunate.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you like me to check and see?

Mr Martin: Yes.

The Deputy Speaker: Would you check and see if there is a quorum present.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Brant.

Mr Levac: Thank you again, Mr Speaker, for that opportunity to put the clarification on the books. With that, I will move to my discussion of Bill 191. By introduction, Bill 191 is called An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle.

I want to thank the Minister for Public Safety and Security for continuing the fine tradition I've been able to continue with his predecessors, and that is, introducing legislation that is very concise and pronounced in terms of the issues we're speaking about. I can offer him my assurance that I have spoken to caucus, and we intend to support the bill because of its level-headedness and the abilities of what we're trying to do here with this. There are a few options that I will be presenting him, and he knows that I take that job seriously. Recommendations that I will be making to the minister I hope will be taken seriously and given due diligence in terms of improving this particular piece of legislation.

I do believe that going to public inquiry and looking at public consultation is an important aspect. I hope that we can get it to a committee and hear from the experts and from people who have expertise in this area. There are actually people out there who have expertise in the construction of highways, the use of vehicles on the highways, driving on the highways; in particular, police officers in pursuit and those that do follow-up on stopovers on highways. We do need to hear from them.

I will make the assumption that the minister was advised on this issue, and some of the things that he has in the bill have been referred to by professionals. But I want to point something out: it may be seen as simple, as trivial, but I can guarantee you that the people of the province of Ontario, when they hear this, are going to say it must make sense.

If we listen to what the bill says—I want to read it one more time and then I'm going to ask the minister to consider even the title of the bill. He says, "An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway," and then he proceeds to say, "and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle." Might I respectfully suggest that we reverse those priorities, that we put the people first? That's who we're protecting. I know that's the minister's intent. I don't want to call into question the minister's desire in the introduction of this bill. But I think in terms of turning the title around, you get to say that you're interested in making sure that the person who's outside of the stopped vehicle is the first person we want to lay safety to, and then we'll talk about the safety of the vehicle, which, by the way, does not imply that we don't need to keep that safe, because quite frankly we've heard in the province of Ontario of the people who were inside the vehicle. So we're not talking about the safety of the vehicle; that's second. The most important part is making sure that we keep those people safe on the highway.

So I want to move on to support of this bill. Recommendations will be made. We look forward to public hearings to obtain very sound and professional advice that will be available, that is available, and has already been offered. I've already spoken to some people who have brought up a few small points about this bill that I hope we will be able to get changed, modified and improved.

We do support legislation that protects our police officers, be they OPP, municipal, RCMP, special constables, correctional officers in transport or probation and parole officers. We make sure that we make it very clear on this side of the House, as I know it is on that side of the House, that we value and support our police officers in the line of duty. We know that it is an extremely dangerous job, day in and day out, because you don't know what's going to happen from day to day. And because we don't know what's going on from day to day, we anticipate that we will be able to try to provide legislation that supports them by the best possible means we can. That means changing a culture, and I think we have to understand that that's what this means.

We need to change a culture of thinking about what's going on on our highways. That has happened over the years with Mothers Against Drunk Driving. It was no more than 10 or 15 years ago that, when people who were tried in court for drunk driving, the jury would sit back and say, "Jeez, that was me Saturday night. I can't find this guy guilty because I was doing that myself on the weekend." Now we've changed the culture of expectation. We've changed the culture of what we expect to have happen in our communities across the province, and what's going on in drinking and driving. So that's what we're actually going to try to do with this type of legislation: change a culture. We want to try to change the driving habits that people have.

I want to bring the attention of the minister to what he knows exist in this House right now that the government could actually take and move along; that is, private members' bills that presently exist, that are in the House, that have been introduced and are accessible. One I would like to mention: the member for Sudbury, Rick Bartolucci, has a bill on studded tires. I know they were banned in the past because they did some damage to highways. Well, that was 15 years ago, I believe, and from then to now, I hope the minister realizes, studded tires have made a resurgence because of innovations in technology and the design of the studs. We know for a fact that they are endorsed by many organizations that realize that for the safety of our citizens, particularly in the north and in snowy areas and icy areas, on particular highways but also in municipalities, studded tires can provide more control on the roads.

So I would invite the minister to do some research and take a look at that and consider that that may be an option that is considered a valuable tool in the exercising of this particular bill. The reintroduction of studded tires is an opportunity that I think we should not throw away easily. So I would commend the member from Sudbury for his work on that and ask the minister to give that some consideration to improve the status for that opportunity.

It doesn't mean that it has to be in this particular bill, but as a companion bill that helps you with your purpose. Your purpose is to protect those officers and those emergency service people from being hit by any other car or vehicle. In bad weather studded tires do have a role to play in getting control of those vehicles so that they don't go into skids. That's an opportunity, and I hope that serious consideration is given to this.

The private member's bill I had also mentioned—there are some helmet bills, there are some safety issues that are being proposed on highways that need to be considered. All of those could be considered companion bills to the minister's. But I'd like to tell him one more time for reinforcement that the idea that you're presenting a bill today that's not cluttered with an awful lot of information provides us an opportunity to support, then turn around and ask for some improvements and some serious debate and conversation about that. When that takes place, I believe we would be better served. We want to make sure that we are advocating, on behalf of all, safety for all citizens, inclusive of what the minister is getting at in Bill 191.

I would mention Pat Hoy, the member from Chatham-Kent Essex, who has done a crusade, basically, on safety on the 400 series in his riding and around it. There are improvements, and I would suggest that the minister talk to the Minister of Transportation and make sure that he understands there's an opportunity for two ministries to work hand in hand to provide that safety that's necessary for our public safety/security people who offer those emergency responses, one being improvements on the highway shoulders to provide shoulder room so that when they pull these vehicles over, it's less likely to cause a problem in the next lane.

Rick Bartolucci, Highway 69; Pat Hoy, 400-series highways: that brings me to a point I'd like to raise for my own municipality, and that's Highway 24. Highway 24 is an exceptionally dangerous highway in my riding. It has actually taken quite a few lives, and unfortunately it's safety issues. Right now, in my conversations with Ministry of Transportation staff, there are an awful lot of segments of that highway that need rejigging, reworking, in particular focusing on safety issues. I would say to you very clearly that if our emergency workers are pulled over on Highway 24, I would be very much in fear of what would happen on that highway. That stretch of highway is absolutely dangerous.

I would submit to you that, working with the Ministry of Transportation, working with the Minister of Public Safety and Security, you could provide companions, again, to help me take care of Highway 24 and all of the citizens that are working very diligently and very hard on making sure that Highway 24 is safe and secure.

There are two issues that have come up. I'd like to give credit to the chamber of commerce, who have picked this up and asked for input on how to improve it, because it's an economic issue as well. I would suggest, and I've suggested this as a by-product of looking at Highway 24, that consideration be given to a 400-series highway connecting Highways 401 and 403 south and north, between Brant and further down in Haldimand-Norfolk and up to Cambridge, Galt, Kitchener, Waterloo, Guelph. That is an economic boom waiting to happen in terms of a proper transportation corridor to connect another segment. That in itself can be designed in a way that would keep it very safe for our police officers who have to do their duty on the highway.

Those are three areas that I've mentioned that are an important aspect of the subsidiary of this bill. The bill itself needs to be passed, but we have to consider what else affects it. Those things, in clear contrast to what I'm trying to say, affect the safety and security of our police officers by improving the highway system so that when they do pull over—and it's not just an illegal thing that's happening. Our police officers, our emergency response people, pull over to help people who are in distress. They pull over for other reasons: for abandoned vehicles, to inspect and check. Because of that, they are putting themselves in jeopardy, specifically just themselves, in order to protect people on the highway.

Making those highways better and user-friendly, shall I say, for those who have to pull over—when you think about it, everybody who has driven on the highway system in Ontario can think of spots in their ridings they know should be improved. I understand that would be a very large burden on the province to do that but I think there are opportunities here to identify those.

I'm quite aware that staff in the Ministry of Transportation do projections—five, 10, 20 years down the line—of things that are happening and things they want to improve and fix up. So we definitely need to work toward the safety issue that is involved in Bill 191.

I will compliment the member because he has offered us another opportunity to say to the families who have lost loved ones how much we grieve for those officers. I've made the conscious effort that I will not review the individuals, in respect for their families, because in this House each of us has paid tribute to those officers. We've sent them our statements; we've sent them our comments of grief and sorrow and prayers. So I don't want to revisit the individual cases, but rest assured we are quite aware of the numbers of people who have been affected by what brought the creation of this bill. So in respect for those families, I will not name names. I think the minister knows that we could go through that, but I've chosen not to do that, in respect for those families, in respect for their memories.

It's important to point out that it must not be done in vain. It must not be done in a way that doesn't take into consideration the future of what we're trying to accomplish this evening.

Let's look at some of the background behind this. In the past five years we know that four OPP officers have been killed while giving out routine tickets, and some in traffic accidents in the past, some involved in chases and apparent chases, some involved in helping somebody else and while they were helping somebody else were tragically killed. In some cases we ended up with people who are injured seriously and can't resume their job as they know it.

In the United States, over 200 officers have been killed in the very same way that we're talking about in Bill 191: pulling people over. We've all watched those video shows that show the video cameras in the police cruisers taking pictures of cars wiping out cars that the officer pulled over. They've shown people getting hit on the highway. The videotape is a very stark reminder of the dangers that police officers go through on a regular basis. We know that it affects you, for sure.

I'd like to point out what the bill does and doesn't do. The bill makes it clear that any car approaching an emergency vehicle on the side of the road with its lights flashing must slow down, proceed with caution and must move into another lane. I'm assuming that means into the middle lane, depending on the circumstance behind the particular highway we're talking about. It's inconsistent, though, because we know that there are two-lane highways, there are four-lane highways and there are six-lane highways. So there needs to be some shoring up in that particular wording.

We also know that the member for London-Fanshawe, Mr Mazzilli, introduced this as a concept. As a former officer, he was quite aware of what was going on—and a diligent member of provincial Parliament, making that particular private member's bill out and turning it into legislation.

Here's a commercial that I would put in during this particular debate: I've offered a few pieces of legislation that I actually want the government to steal; I'm asking them to proceed with it and to move on to it, and those would be my private member's bills on anaphylactic response for schools across the province and on school safety zones around our schools. We're talking about safety of individuals; now we're talking about safety of children. I would invite any of the ministers over there or any of the caucus members to grab a couple of those ideas and take a look. I would welcome you to introduce that as a bill. My roster is too far down the road. I'm back in 2004, and I can't get these bills out faster. It's talking about safety.

So I think it was a commercial, but at the same time it relates to the concept that the minister is applying across the board here, and that is to look out for the safety, in this case, of our police officers, our emergency response teams, and in my case, the safety and security of students. I would ask him to consider doing that.

Anyone who contravenes this law is guilty of an offence and liable for conviction of one of three things: on the first offence, a fine of between $40 and $2,000; and for subsequent offences—God knows that it does take some time for people to change their habits—of a fine between $1,000 and $4,000 and/or imprisonment for no more than six months. The court can also suspend the driver's licence of a person convicted of the offence. I'm hoping a court would think very seriously of automatically suspending somebody's licence for doing something like that. I don't think they should have that right for a long time. Hopefully they would lose their licence for quite some time.

The area that I'd like to talk to you about is what the bill really doesn't do. It doesn't explain what speeds cars must slow down to. It just says that they have to slow down. This is a judgment call. But if the minister is implying that police officers have that leeway to judge whether or not the cars slowed down enough, that opportunity exists already with police officers. Police officers make that judgment on a regular basis with all the laws that already exist. I'm suggesting that you need to at least have a standard that the police officer can judge it on. If the police officer has that knowledge that they must slow down to 10 or 15 kilometres less than what they're travelling or what the natural flow is, the police officer can really make a judgment because he or she is expert. They can say, "Man, they didn't slow down one kilometre, so I'm going to nail them." Or if they see somebody is trying to slow down to 10 or 15 kilometres less than what the natural flow is, then the police officer should have that as a natural thing to discuss. But just to simply say that we would provide them with an opportunity to make that judgment call—I think we need to have it even more specific, and I'll very clearly explain to you later on why I'm suggesting that.

The Ontario Provincial Police Association, the OPPA, is suggesting we reduce the speed between 10 and 15 kilometres. The people who are front-line officers—that's what the OPPA is, and they're the experts on the highways already—are suggesting it should be 10 or 15 kilometres for sure, because they feel comfortable slowing them down to that limit. So the suggestion would be, let's take a look at shoring up that section by giving it a speed constraint.

Police officers are supposed to catch those drivers who disobey this law. So the question would be, while they're doing this, do they have enough police officers on the road to take care of that emergency that stopped them there in the first place and then to follow the person who's not going slow enough? So it begs the question: how do we catch those people? I wouldn't assume for one minute that maybe the government would want to do photo radar. That might be an option that could be considered by this government: maybe we should put radar on them and say, "You were going, so you can have the ticket, and I can still attend to my emergency here." If they're going 15 kilometres over the speed limit they're supposed to go when an accident takes place or when you see those flashing lights, you could probably say to yourself that it makes sense that photo radar is an opportunity that could be used in that case. Because if they do, it's a very specific place, it's a very specific reason why they would use it, and it also says very clearly, "Do you know what? We do it."

Can you support it? It's a good idea. I think it's an opportunity that we should be discussing, because it does slow them down.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Why did you vote against it?

Mr Levac: I didn't vote against photo radar; I proposed it. I'm sitting back saying, "Where is it?" We've got a private member's bill that wants to put it in. So if we've got you guys here, we can put it in right now.

The bill is supported by the Ontario Provincial Police Association. The OPPA basically says, "Yes, we like it." But there are some things we need to take a look at and I'm looking forward to getting it to committee so we can have those experts come in and say, "You know what? We should tweak this thing and make these opportunities there."

By the way, for the people listening, the OPP are the ones who actually oversee the 400 series. They are the ones who are on that highway, day in and day out, and know of the things we've been talking about.

This is a potential lifesaver, and I say this cautiously. This one could save somebody doing their duty. I think it's an important aspect of the bill that we can't underscore enough.

I'd like to give you examples. Minister, I did a little homework and found a few jurisdictions that use the type of legislation you're talking about. I'll run over the states that you have an opportunity to take a look at, to find out one of the differences in your bill that is absent, that needs to be looked at. They are Indiana, Ohio, Kansas, Wyoming, Michigan, Minnesota, Oklahoma, North Dakota, Montana, Maine, Illinois, Wisconsin, North Carolina, Louisiana, Kentucky and Florida.

One of the things that appeared to me to be the constant, that was there all the time, was the differentiation between flashing lights. The minister mentions red flashing lights only in this bill, and there are many different types of flashing lights that are emergency response. The one that is painfully absent even from the United States that I would recommend the minister give serious consideration to is green lights.

Interjection: Volunteer firefighters.

Mr Levac: The volunteer firefighters. It wasn't mentioned in any of the states and it wasn't mentioned in this bill. So I'm giving the minister an opportunity to improve his bill again.

Mr Caplan: In committee.

Mr Levac: In committee. Include green lights, white lights, blue lights, amber lights, and the other emergency vehicles that are not covered by red, by law. Some people can't have red lights but they have other flashing lights that protect them as well. Is this specifically designed for police officers only? I don't think the minister is strictly saying that. I believe he's looking at the safety and security of all people who are providing emergency services and who have to stop on the highway. If that's the case, I'm suggesting to him that we really need to seriously consider the other lights, the other situations we find on those emergency vehicles. Green lights are an important aspect of that. I would suggest to him that those lights translate into who is affected. The authorized emergency vehicles in Indiana, for example, are fire, ambulance, police, recovery or highway maintenance vehicles. We need to say that we are concerned for all of our people who work on the highways. We want to make sure.

I introduced a bill a while ago that basically said, "We're going to double the fines and try to slow the speed down in construction zones." We also have to take into consideration that some of the dolts who are driving on the highway don't even slow down in a construction zone. There are people working right beside the highway, some in the middle of the highway, some on the other side, and in some cases they have to shut the highway down altogether. But the ones they don't, you've got construction workers who are working on the highway and, believe it or not, they have been dinged by cars going too fast. So I'm going to suggest that we take considerable time before we say, holus-bolus, that the bill's got to go. We need to talk about this. We need to make sure that we at least give the minister an opportunity to consider putting these little nuances I'm describing in the bill, because we want to make sure we get this right. We could be negating some people in there.

I couldn't believe the differences in the penalties: a 90-day suspension; a year in an injury to a person; a suspension of 100 days to two years upon a death; a two-year suspension in addition to any other penalty. That's a statement that I want us to remember, "in addition to any other penalty that's imposed," because it ended up in almost every single one of the states that did it. I don't want any of those catchphrases that say, "This is the penalty we're going to impose." I want it on top of any other penalty that's imposed. That should be in the bill; it's not in the bill.

There are fines that range from $60 to $6,000. I believe, on this side of the debate, the minister has the penalties right. If we want to talk about increasing those, we can always do that, and I'd appreciate that opportunity.

I did find there is one in Canada: the Highway Traffic Act in Saskatchewan. Page 22, section 37.1(1) reads:

"Passing emergency vehicles:

"37.1(1) No person shall drive a vehicle on a highway at a speed greater than 60 kilometres per hour when passing an emergency vehicle that is stopped on the highway with its emergency lights in operation.

"(2) Subsection (1) does not apply where a vehicle is being driven on a highway that is divided into two roadways by a median and the vehicle is travelling on the opposite roadway from the emergency vehicle."

I want to bring to your attention that it did make it a commitment; they must have done some studying. I called the people in Saskatchewan and they basically told me, "Our research indicated that the more you drop the speed, the safer people are." So they dropped it to 60 kilometres an hour. That's it. You've got to go down to 60. As you know, speeds increase by the way the traffic is moving, so the OPP have that flexibility to allow it to go.

I believe right now the average speed on the 400 series is somewhere in the neighbourhood of 120 clicks, so if you slow it down by 10 kilometres, you're slowing it down to legally still speeding on the highway. Dropping it to 60 and bringing it down, you're sending a clear message that you're interested in saving lives.

That refers me to my other bill, the school safety zones I'm asking for. In the school safety zones, research showed me that for each 10 kilometres by which we drop the speed—there is a 98% chance of death if you're driving 70 kilometres an hour and you get hit. As you drop that speed down by tens, it diminishes. So when I drop the safe school zones down to 30 kilometres an hour, the chance of death when hit by a vehicle was 32%, which means you drop it from 98% all the way down to 32%. So we are talking about the old adage, proven by that research and proven by the OPP, that speed kills.

I would encourage this government to consider very seriously that this speed needs to be dropped, and we need to take that number and then give the OPP some flexibility in how it wants to apply that rule.

There's no doubt in my mind that this bill is intended for the very reason that the minister intends it in the first place. I appreciate so much the fact that this bill was created just by itself as a stand-alone piece of legislation, that it wasn't attached to several other things that could be unpalatable to accept. The legislation is a clear example of the minister's commitment. I respect him for that and I appreciate the fact that he's given us a piece of legislation that indeed is supportable. But I reiterate that there are some things to do in this bill to make it even better.

I clarified those recommendations, I hope, and I want to offer a couple of new ones that the minister should take seriously.

Number one, let's include all the flashing lights. Let's include in particular the green in support and respect of our volunteers. The green lights do not appear in this legislation. The green lights are for our volunteers. That should be included, absolutely, because the green lights are there and are important, as are amber and white and blue. I will tell the honourable member that in my research, the states that have this type of legislation have included in a very different way all the different systems being used in emergency stops. The idea is not simply the red. The idea is to include all of them because when there's one set of lights, it usually attracts another set of lights. It makes sense: tow trucks, emergency vehicles, the fire department.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): Make it "any flashing."

Mr Levac: Any flashing. I like that as an amendment and I support you on that. I think one you forgot to mention, if I'm not mistaken—I reviewed it. You didn't say green.

Mr Kormos: Yes, I did say green.

Mr Levac: Did you say green?

Interjection.

Mr Levac: Absolutely. I'm glad for it. I withdraw that and give you back the credit you deserve. I appreciate that so much. So green was included in what the NDP member commented on the first time this bill appeared. I am supportive of that and I do think it's the right thing to do.

To improve the highway structure is the other—

Interjection.

Mr Levac: I think I got a nod of approval from the member over there, who said, "That's right," because if you don't deal with that, you're not taking care of the symptom. That is to say, we need to improve the highway structure, the shoulders.

Here's one I'm suggesting. I don't know if it was mentioned. Unfortunately, I was attending a funeral when the bill was first introduced and I didn't get a chance, but I reviewed this. I don't think they mentioned this. The Ministry of Transportation is instructed to include education in our driver education courses and the tests, to include that in the test before they get their licence so they have to prove they know that rule.

Mr Kormos: And a promotional campaign.

Mr Levac: Absolutely. You're ahead of me. And that we use now a promotion, which is mentioned in some of the states. They have a promotion.

Here's another one, which I know we use quite well here in this province but need to do more of and need to do it better, that is, our message boards on the highway structures, those message boards that appear before us: "Drinking and driving is bad." "Highway 23 is closed." "Take this turnoff." Those message boards are quite effective. I saw the research on that and it does improve driving habits. It tells us, "Don't use that phone." As a matter of fact, if you see it, some people actually turn the phone off when they see those message boards. So let's use the message boards to tell people about the safety vehicles on the side of the road.

I want to come back to this one, which was here in this province but we subsequently decided was not good for our highways so we took it off the road: studded tires. The new technology of studded tires being used in Europe now is much better than the old metal studs and they don't destroy the roads. The old excuse that was used to get rid of them was, "They're hurting the roads." I'm suggesting we need to re-evaluate the studded tires and go back to the drawing board. The science behind it has indicated that when used properly, the studded tires actually do give more control on the roads. Quite clearly, you need to add that to this bill, because that's another component that helps keep those police officers and emergency response personnel safer, if you don't skid when you slow down in front of those vehicles stopped on the side of the road.

Now, some people might be sitting here kind of bored with this discussion. They're sitting back and saying, "Oh, come on, let's cut this off." But I've offered seven different ways in which we can improve this particular bill, and I know the member from Niagara Centre offered some opportunities as well to improve the bill. When we get that to committee—I'm assuming that's what we're going to do—those recommendations, along with those from our professionals—

Mr Kormos: I bet you the CAA would want to comment.

Mr Levac: Absolutely. There's the CAA, there's the OPPA, there's the OPP, there's the truckers association, there's the people who produce the studded tires who could provide us with the science. If we can pull those people together, we can have a piece of legislation that is not only going to be of great value for our police services officers but for the safety of all the people who drive on the highways of Ontario. As we produce this, as we go forward with these recommendations, I'm sure the minister intends full well to hear those arguments. I'm sure he has done some consulting already.

Mr Kormos: Maybe he needs time to reflect on them.

Mr Levac: The member for Niagara Centre says he needs time to reflect on these ideas. Some of them are so good and so easy that I think you can adopt them immediately.

Mr Caplan: But others?

Mr Levac: But others need some time and they need some committee work and they need public consultation from the experts. Once that happens, there's no question in my mind that we'll have legislation about which each and every one of us can stand up and say, "Do you know what? This is the right thing to do and we're going to support it."

I want to ask one more thing. The member wasn't here when I said this and I want to come back to this. This sounds petty, it sounds simple, but I want us to send a message. Listen to the title of the bill: "An Act to amend the Highway Traffic Act to ensure the safety of emergency vehicles stopped on a highway and people who are outside a stopped emergency vehicle." My request is, let's flip them around. Let's put the people first and then worry about the vehicles after. Isn't that interesting? Did you really read that? It says we're interested in the safety of the vehicle. Isn't that interesting? Isn't it sad? Maybe it's my warped sense of priority, but I want the people saved first, then the vehicles. But as I pointed out, I'm assuming the minister meant the people inside of the vehicle, that we want to keep them safe. If that's the case, then I'm all for it.

I've made so many points that I don't want to confuse anybody. I think it's understood that we have some ideas we're going to apply, we have some things we want to do. I am going to move adjournment of the House, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Mr Levac has moved adjournment of the House. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All those in favour say "aye."

All those opposed say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

The division bells rang from 1927 to 1957.

The Deputy Speaker: All those in favour will please rise and remain standing until counted by the Clerk.

All those opposed will please rise and remain standing until counted by the Clerk.

Clerk Assistant: The ayes are 8; the nays are 22.

The Deputy Speaker: I declare the motion lost.

The Chair recognizes the member for Brant.

Mr Levac: The bill I was referring to as a private member's bill was Bill 137, An Act to amend the Private Investigators and Security Guards Act to require a minimum level of training for licensees and to require that uniforms and vehicles of security guards be readily distinguishable from those of the police. That bill basically says we need to move toward having our security guards licensed and making sure they can't have any kinds of lights on top of their vehicles that mimic those of the police. This particular section in Bill 191 would allow them to make sure there's a distinction between the two.

Finally, it's now time to relinquish my time to the member from Elgin-Middlesex-London.

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): I appreciate the comments my colleague has made this evening advocating support for the legislation in front of us. I'm very pleased to stand up and speak in support of this legislation here this evening.

It's very interesting to hear the kibitzing taking place across the floor and the comments that have been made about how you don't support agriculture, but I think it's very important to send a message out not only to the agricultural community but to everybody in this province that the time allocation motion we dealt with this evening is effectively shutting down and stifling debate and not encouraging good debate within this Legislature.

This is important legislation in front of us. It's important that we do what we can to provide support for our emergency personnel, be they police, fire or paramedics.

Comments that have been made in the Legislature this evening bear listening to and require us to give consideration to some aspects of this legislation that may require amendments. We know right now that a number of emergency personnel vehicles on the roads do not necessarily have a red light. You will see at times, even with police vehicles, if you're driving down a highway and approaching a vehicle that you would be coming at, some of the police vehicles are using a yellow light now. I think that needs to be taken into consideration with this legislation. We need to recognize, as has been pointed out this evening, that the volunteer firefighters in this province now have a recognizable light on their front dash: a flashing green light. I think we need to incorporate that into the legislation.

As well, consideration maybe should be given to those individuals who operate tow trucks in this province. Three constituents from my own riding three years ago were killed on Highway 401 in the course of doing their duties as tow truck operators.

If we're truly committed to protecting those individuals out patrolling the roads of this province, we need to make this is an all-encompassing piece of legislation. I trust we will be having public hearings on this bill to allow all those individuals who have comment to make about this bill that opportunity to come before a standing committee of this Legislature and make their comments known. I think every one of us wants to do everything we can to ensure the safety and security of those individuals who keep the road safe.

I want to make comment on some things that, when this legislation passes, we need to do. I think a lot of common sense courtesy has been lost by drivers in this province. One only needs to look, as an example, at a funeral procession. I attended a funeral on Thanksgiving Monday for a good friend of mine, Craig Stevens, 37 years old, passed away as a result of an epileptic seizure. Craig's funeral procession was probably three kilometres long. As we left St Thomas and drove to a small rural cemetery, I was amazed by the lack of courtesy of oncoming drivers. Recognizing that a funeral procession is taking place, you should have that courtesy to pull off to the side of the road. We've lost that sense of understanding what a funeral procession is all about.

I sense with this legislation as well that we need to undertake an aggressive education campaign, an education campaign that of course we have to start in the high schools with the driver training program, for those individuals out there providing driver education. We need to ensure that any changes such as those being proposed this evening are incorporated into driver training manuals.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): That you are trying to oppose.

Mr Peters: Who said we were opposing this?

Mrs Marland: Why did you just try to close off the debate?

Mr Peters: I didn't try and close off debate. I came here this evening to speak to this bill.

Mrs Marland: Why did you move adjournment of the House?

Mr Peters: I did not. Mr Speaker, I take exception to that comment. I did not stand up and move adjournment to this debate, so don't say that.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. We can't have this talking back and forth. I will ask the member speaking to address his comments through the Chair. I would ask those other members to get themselves under control.

Mr Peters: I think it's incumbent that when this legislation is passed and receives royal assent, we do everything in our power to ensure that we start to educate the public.

Also, much like when a municipality will pass a resolution on a specific issue and then in turn send that resolution to another municipality and another municipality for endorsement, I think what we need to do when this legislation passes in Ontario is to make the other provinces and states, those that do not have similar legislation enacted—my colleague named a number of US states that have similar legislation in place. I think it would be a very good thing for us to do in Ontario to make the other provinces in Canada and the other American states aware of the legislation we've passed and encourage them to pass similar legislation. What that in turn will do is not only protect police, fire and ambulance and potentially tow truck operators all across this province but start to raise awareness across Canada, across North America, so when an individual crosses the border from Michigan into Canada, they know that those same rules applicable in the state they come from are going to be applicable in Ontario.

I don't think we do enough of that. Legislation that has the unanimous agreement of all of us in this Legislature, legislation that is good for this province, is going to be good for other provinces. So why not follow the example that municipalities pass when they endorse a resolution? Why don't we do a similar thing provincially, of encouraging other Legislatures across North America to adopt similar legislation? That way we develop that consistency across the country.

We hear a lot of comments about advertising and how advertising dollars are spent. My beef has always been partisan advertising, advertising that definitely is of a partisan nature. But I think there is advertising that the government can initiate that isn't of a partisan nature and is not going to be of concern to us in the Legislature. As an example, I've always supported the tourism advertising we undertake in this province, because we all win. It's a non-political issue. This is another piece of legislation that I think would be worthy of advertising, because it's done in a non-partisan way, to protect individuals. That's what we truly need to do.

There are other issues that I think we need to consider. One of my beefs has always been, as a southern Ontario resident—I see my colleague from Nipissing here today. I've always been envious of northern Ontario's use of passing lanes. Why passing lanes have not been used in southern Ontario as they've been used in northern Ontario is beyond me. I see that the passing lane will work toward reducing accidents on the road, give the driver more confidence of knowing they don't have to take a chance to go out and pass. But we don't do that in southern Ontario.

Gosh, the most dreadful ride is the ride from St Thomas to Fort Erie. Highway 3 is a slow ride. It's a scenic ride—you see some of the finest country in southwestern Ontario—but it's a slow ride. Why we haven't initiated passing lanes, I don't know. Look at the highways in northern Ontario, where they not only have passing lanes, but I can remember the days when they used to have the nice paved shoulder. They've done away with this, where you used to be able to drive along and out of courtesy you would pull over to the side on a paved shoulder and you had a clear path to pass—good, paved shoulders.

We need to ensure that we have adequate shoulders in southern Ontario, of good width, to allow not only the vehicle that's being pursued but that security vehicle, be it police, fire or paramedic, the opportunity to adequately pull off the road. But some of that may require some resources, and those are resources that need to come from the provincial government.

I look within my own riding, and I'll use Highway 3 as an example. Highway 3 east of St Thomas is still under the control of the provincial government. Highway 3 west of St Thomas has been downloaded to the municipalities. The municipalities have had a number of highways downloaded to them, and the costs to maintain those roads have become quite high.

As we're talking about highways and security and safety, I want to make a point about something that has really troubled me about this government. It deals with the 400 series of highways, and I'll speak specifically of Highway 401. My riding of Elgin-Middlesex-London has 82 kilometres of Highway 401 passing through it. When I leave Oxford county and cross into Middlesex county, it's a three-lane highway, and that three-lane highway exists until just west of Highway 4. But at Highway 4, we go back to a two-lane highway, no longer with a cement median but ditches. Highway 4 just south of Lambeth, from the municipality of Tempo to the Chatham-Kent line, is a two-lane highway.

I think we need to give consideration to widening the 401 in those areas in particular. In the area between the Oxford-Middlesex line and Tempo, we've got good, wide shoulders, but when you get beyond Tempo at Highway 4, the shoulders are much narrower. So I think consideration needs to be given from the Ministry of Transportation's standpoint to extending and widening the 401.

Another issue I would love to see our Minister of Transportation address is the whole question of when Highway 401 is shut down because of emergencies. When Highway 401 is shut down, we need to keep the lifeline of this province. We live in a just-in-time-delivery province right now. When Highway 401 is shut down, those vehicles must leave the 401, exit the 401, and move on to a county road. I commend the county of Elgin for what they've done in developing emergency detour routes so that we ensure a way for vehicular traffic in this province to get around a shutdown on the 401. But the county of Elgin has never been compensated for their work at keeping this province moving. The county, at their own expense, has erected signs identifying an emergency detour route. The county bears all the costs associated with that emergency detour route. The county of Elgin has undertaken this to ensure that we keep traffic moving in this province, but they have not been compensated for their initiatives by this province. I see that as a real failure of the Ministry of Transportation to recognize the important role the county of Elgin plays in keeping traffic moving within Ontario today.

We need to recognize the important role our emergency personnel play. I think the Minister of Public Safety and Security recognizes that. The minister wouldn't be here this evening if he didn't recognize it. The minister would not have introduced this legislation if he didn't recognize that we have to do everything we can to ensure the safety of our emergency personnel in this province.

I'm proud of the emergency personnel I have within my own riding. I look at the police services that are there, from the OPP to the Aylmer Police Service, the London Police Service, the St Thomas Police Service. I have 11 municipalities in my riding. I have full-time fire services that exist in St Thomas and London. I have volunteer services that exist in the other municipalities. We have ambulance or paramedic personnel stationed in St Thomas, in Dutton, in London. They're stationed in areas just outside of my riding, in places like Tilsonburg and Ingersoll, that all play a role at looking after my constituents. Those are individuals that we need to not only pay tribute to, but it's incumbent on every one of us in this Legislature to do everything in our power to look after their safety on a day-to-day basis.

I want to pay tribute, as well, within my riding, just outside of Aylmer at the Aylmer Technical Training School, which was part of the Commonwealth Air Command that was part of the Second World War that helped train individuals to fly planes as ground personnel, a whole variety of areas. Then back in the 1960s, at the urging of one of my predecessors, Mr Ron McNeil, who served this Legislature and served the constituents of Elgin for well in excess of 30 years—Ron McNeil successfully advocated for the Ontario Police College to be established in Aylmer. The Ontario Police College has played such an important role at training police personnel all across this province.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): He's talking about Peter North.

Mr Peters: It's way before his time. You're the ones that are trying to get him back.

The police college has played such an important role, and I am pleased that the minister—

Interjection.

Mr Peters: Maybe last time I might have been afraid, but not this time.

I'm pleased that the minister recognizes the important role that the police college plays, even including in his announcements this week that the police college is going to play a very important role in trying to help the police services in this province. It's important that, at the police college level, we train our police officers in the best procedures and proper procedures, and I know that's going to happen. I know that staff at the police college are going to work to train those new recruits at proper methods of pulling over a vehicle that they're pursuing.

But we need to ensure that we take that education beyond the police college, and that we take that education and we put it into the driver training programs, we put it into the classroom, we put it out on the streets so that the public understands. I truly would encourage the minister to take this legislation to public hearings so that we make sure that there are no holes left in this legislation. Like anything that we do in this Legislature, let's make it the best. If there are other amendments, and I know some of my colleagues have other amendments, and colleagues on all sides of the House have amendments for the Highway Traffic Act that they would like to see incorporated instead of an omnibus bill that covers a whole variety of ministries, why not look at some sort of an all-encompassing bill that looks at the Highway Traffic Act?

Speaker, I thank you for the time, and I'm pleased to stand up and support this legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Mr Kormos: I acknowledge, I was a little late getting here. I was down at the Ontario professional firefighters' convention in Niagara Falls earlier today, and then I stopped by St Mary's school in Welland, where they were having a book fair for the youngsters and their families. So I stopped by, I read some kids a story and encouraged them to become interested in reading, and so many of them are. But I walked into this chamber tonight and was struck by the acrimony, the heated exchanges that, quite frankly, embarrassed me a little bit, shocked me. I was frightened by the volatility of some of the members.

Look, the opposition doesn't call the government's bills; it's up to the government House leader to determine the order of business and to prioritize. We in the opposition, in both caucuses, have demonstrated a great deal of interest in this bill and a great deal of support for it. In fact, when I spoke last week and when Mr Levac spoke today, both of us made it clear that we'd dearly love to see this bill go to committee promptly, and get some consideration around amendments. Yes, I would like to hear from the CAA and tow truck drivers, and from the police in response as to whether or not those tow truck drivers with their amber lights should be included. I'd like to hear from volunteer firefighters with their green lights in their vehicles, again, who are in similar positions of risk. But you have to understand, our job is to utilize the scarce debate time allowed us by this government to express the concerns that we have, as we do about this bill, and our support.

Earlier the member, in the interests of creating a short hiatus here so there could be some reflection on the issue around committee hearings, called for an adjournment—

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): What a weak excuse that is.

Mr Kormos: Please—people became incredibly heated and irate. I'm asking folks to calm down. We've got to work together, friends.

2020

Mrs Marland: Tonight we are debating Bill 191, and we have witnessed the worst example of politicizing and manoeuvring that I have seen on a life-and-death bill. When this bill is passed, it will save the lives of police officers all over this province in all police forces. This Liberal opposition who moved adjournment of the House tonight would have lost us today's debate. How two-faced can politicians be in this chamber—

The Deputy Speaker: I'm sorry—

Mrs Marland: I withdraw it, Mr Speaker.

Everybody knows what it means when you stand up and speak in support of a bill, as the Liberal and NDP caucuses are doing on this bill, and yet vote for adjournment of the debate. The following members: the member for Brant, Mr Levac; the member for Elgin-Middlesex-London, Mr Peters; the member for Don Valley East, Mr Caplan; Scarborough-Rouge River, Mr Curling; Glengarry-Prescott-Russell, Jean-Marc Lalonde; Sault Ste Marie, Mr Martin; Timmins-James Bay, Mr Bisson; and Niagara Centre, Mr Kormos—they all voted to adjourn this House and not get on with this bill so we can start saving lives immediately for our police forces around this province.

The interesting thing is that the member for Brant, Mr Levac, and the member for Niagara Centre, Mr Kormos, are the critics for policing, and yet they do not want to immediately process this bill to its final and third reading and proclamation to save the lives of those people who are protecting us every single day.

This bill requires motorists to move over when police vehicles are engaged.

Mr Caplan: I certainly want to congratulate the members from Brant and Elgin-Middlesex-London for their comments.

Neither of them mentioned that the Minister of Public Safety and Security didn't even bother to get up to speak to this bill. I am shocked that no government member would even want to talk about this bill.

The member who just got up from Mississauga South said, "You've got to get it out and get it done." The government could have sent this off to committee after first reading if they had wanted to. The government could facilitate the business of this House in so many easy ways, yet they choose not to speak to a bill, not to send it off to committee.

We're very interested in talking about this bill. We support not only our police but we support safety on the roads for all drivers, for all pedestrians, for the people who are there. It would be the only responsible thing for any member of this Legislature to do. But there are very legitimate questions, very legitimate points of view, that need to be heard. We want to hear them at the committee level, and I think my colleagues have indicated that very clearly.

There's a question, of course, of how this bill would even operate, of what speed cars would have to slow down to. When Mr Runciman introduced the bill, he said that it would be a judgment call. Well, that's a very nice thing, but I think there needs to be some clarity around this kind of a point of how an officer would even catch a driver who didn't slow down to whatever that judgment would be. Are they supposed to write up the ticket or adjudicate the accident at the side of the road, get in their cruiser, speed away and catch whoever it is? There are certain practicalities.

We want to understand these things; we want to talk about them. That's a very legitimate and responsible attitude to take. I'm disappointed that no government member would even want to enter into this debate and talk about this matter.

Mr Martin: I want to say that I was sitting here very calmly listening to this debate, hoping to hear some good information that would help me make decisions about what I would support from our caucus in terms of amendments to this bill and how we might improve it so that at the end of the day we all felt that we'd done the best that we possibly could to put in place a piece of legislation, a framework within which police could feel safe doing their job on the road. I listened to the member for Brant, who talked about an issue that this government played politics with around the safety of police officers in this province, which was photo radar.

Photo radar: do you remember that? We brought in photo radar, supported by the police in this province so that we could reduce the carnage on highways, slow the traffic down so that police officers weren't put in danger. What did you do when you first came in here in 1995? You threw out photo radar. Where was your concern then about police officers and killing them on the highways and the carnage on the highways in this province?

The statistics that were coming out the year after and two years after photo radar was put in were absolutely phenomenal, the reduction that was out there for accidents on the highways and carnage. The police were 100% behind photo radar. They thought it was the best thing since sliced bread. They were 100% behind photo radar. They came to committee because when we were government we actually went to committee and listened to people and we received amendments and we allowed some of those amendments to pass through. It didn't matter where they came from. If they were—

Mr Kormos: Five days of debate plus committee.

Mr Martin: Five days of debate, yes, absolutely. When we heard amendments, it didn't matter whether they were from the public out there or the opposition or the government. If it was a good idea, we accepted it and we passed it and made it part of the legislative framework of this province.

What about the fact that you've reduced the number of police officers out there to protect each other as they try to protect our communities across this province? Literally thousands—we had the chiefs of police in here yesterday and they told our caucus very clearly what they needed. They need more police officers out there on the streets.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I just wanted to point out that passion isn't any more passionate because it's loud and right isn't any righter because it's loud. There is nothing in our rules that allows any kind of bickering back and forth. Grab hold of yourself; bring yourself under control.

We have had four comments and questions. Now we'll go back to the member for Brant for two minutes of windup.

Mr Levac: As is the tradition of this place, I want to acknowledge and thank the members for Elgin-Middlesex-London, Niagara Centre, Mississauga South, Don Valley East and Sault Ste Marie for their comments and concerns regarding this presentation that I've made.

I want to make it perfectly clear that the concerns raised by the member for Mississauga South have indicated to this place that the bill is now lost and the bill is gone. Quite frankly, I think there was more disruption and concern and consternation about having to bring people out of bed than there was in terms of speeches from members on that side about this.

I had people saying things to me while I was speaking. I had people saying to me, no more than five minutes into my presentation, "Cut, cut; don't say any more. Let it fall. Just go to sleep. We don't want to hear anything more." So I'm disappointed just as much in this particular tactic as I am to see those people who wouldn't allow me to make a presentation on this situation. I had four members approach me, looking at me straight in my eyes, walking right across the House and saying, "Don't talk any more. Forget it. Don't make any comments; don't make any points." So if you want to be upset about it, then be upset with your own members who walked around saying, "Don't talk about what the efficiency of this bill is all about."

I'm trying to provide opportunities to the government in terms of correcting the bill and making it better. I heard a member on the other side simply say, "You guys don't approve of anything we do." What do you know: there is no perfect legislation. There are ideas that need to be cultivated and improved upon. If we can't do that in this place, we're lost. If we think that everybody on that side is absolutely perfect and correct and we think everybody on this side is perfect and correct, we've got it all wrong. We need to enter into this debate with an open mind and simply say, "Let's get to it. Let's offer those amendments, let's offer those suggestions and let's do good legislation for the people of Ontario."

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the minister from Leeds-Grenville on a point of order.

Hon Mr Runciman: This government believes this legislation is an urgent priority and we're prepared to see it referred to committee right away.

The Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

The Chair recognizes the member for Mississauga South on a point of order.

Mrs Marland: Mr Speaker, I would agree to unanimous consent for this to go immediately to committee, which is what the opposition is now asking, after having tried to adjourn the debate, the House. I'm requesting unanimous consent—

The Deputy Speaker: But you have to stop in order that I can put that to the House.

Mrs Marland is asking unanimous consent to move the bill immediately to committee. Is that unanimous consent agreed? It is agreed.

It's my understanding—

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: When you get a minute, I'd like to proceed with the business of the House. I'm advised that in order for it to go directly to committee, as has been agreed, it must be approved for second reading.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On a point of order, Mr Speaker—

The Deputy Speaker: If you'll just have your seat for a minute, I'll recognize you on a point of order after I have researched this a little further.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: If you'll just listen, I think this might clear it up for you. I'm going to standing order 72(a): "At any time before the commencement of second reading debate on a public bill, during 'Motions,' the government House leader may move the following motion, no debate or amendment being permitted, 'That the order for second reading of' the bill 'be discharged and the bill be referred to the standing committee on....'"

Since second reading debate has started, my ruling is that in order for this to proceed to committee, it must pass second reading. I'm going to just ask, if I can—

I'm informed that you need to be informed, that you have to be informed that in order for the unanimous consent that was just requested and just was given, that before you would consent to that you should be aware of the consequences of it, and that is that I then have to go directly to putting the question on second reading of the bill. Because I didn't make all of you aware of that, and I was ignorant of this fact myself, I'm going to ask you once more for the consent on the member for Mississauga South, Mrs Marland—she asked for unanimous consent that it go directly to committee. Now, after you have been informed what the consequences of that are, I am asking, is there unanimous consent for that motion? Agreed? It is not agreed.

Hon Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: As I understand it, the House did give consent to go to committee. I appreciate the fact that some members may not have been fully cognizant of what that meant, but it would seem to me implicit that since you gave consent to send it to committee, you would be implicitly giving consent to pass it on second reading.

The Deputy Speaker: If I hadn't already made a ruling, I think that would have been a very proper item to bring up, but we are going to proceed the way I have.

I'm going to recognize the member for Timmins-James Bay on a point of order.

Mr Bisson: I'm at debate.

The Deputy Speaker: I'll recognize the member for Mississauga South on a point of order.

Mrs Marland: Mr Speaker, I move that we proceed with the second reading vote to move this bill, to complete this bill through second reading. Then it can go to committee.

The Deputy Speaker: I want to be sure that I understand. The member for Mississauga South is requesting unanimous consent that this House consider the question on second reading of the bill. Is it agreed? It is not agreed.

Hon Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd just like to say that we didn't get consent to send it to second reading, to committee, because the opposition voted against that.

The Deputy Speaker: That is neither a point of order nor a point of privilege.

Further debate? The Chair recognizes the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: I'm most pleased to participate in this, our leadoff to this particular debate. It is an interesting evening that we've had here. I think the most interesting part was watching the government House leader run into the House at the fastest jog I've seen him run into this place in a long time. I've just got to say that was rather interesting.

I just want to say to the members in the House, especially the government members, that here they are trying to put on this act that they're really mad, that the opposition is holding up debate on this legislation and that somehow or other we're going to prevent passage of this bill. They're making it out to be just an awful thing. But they forget to mention that they're the government that changed the rules in this House. This government changed the rules of this House to the point where this House has become dysfunctional. You guys have to take responsibility for what you have done.

We are at the point now where basically the government controls the entire agenda of the House. They are able to pass a bill in this House in a period of five days. If the government decides, they come in, they do first, second and third reading, the fourth day they do a time allocation motion and on the fifth day they pass this second and third reading. Done. The government accuses the opposition—

Mr Martin: And they don't have the consent to even speed that up.

Mr Bisson: Yes, this is where I'm going. The government's saying, "Oh, the opposition is holding this up. Oh, poor us. The OPPA and everybody else is going to get a Hansard about all this stuff." I'm saying to the government and I'm saying through Hansard to the OPPA, my, my, what are you guys all upset about? You're the ones who changed the rules of this House. You can do anything you want here in basically a one-week period.

You come in Monday, do second reading; come in Tuesday, do the second day of second reading; come in Wednesday, do the third day of second reading; time allocation on Thursday—bam, you're out of here on Monday.

So don't come to me and say we're holding up legislation on the bill. It's your incompetence in ordering the bills in the House to get this. If you wanted this bill, you would have called it on Monday, you would have called it on Tuesday, you would have called it on Wednesday, you would have had your time allocation on Thursday; you'd have been out of here by Monday of next week. So don't come to us in the opposition and say, "Oh, the opposition. We're sending out Hansards." Send Hansards to yourself.

The reality is that you guys control the agenda, and if you guys can't get your agenda straight and can't figure out how to run the House, don't come in here and start blaming the opposition for your mismanagement. In fact, we came in the House tonight and we were rather helpful, I thought. My good friend from Don Valley East knows I came into the House tonight—

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. There were two points tonight where we came into the House—on the first point, we said to the government, "We're prepared to do a quick evening tonight." I said, "We'll each do 20-minute speeches and we'll be done this evening."

Mr Kormos: To expedite the passage.

Mr Bisson: To expedite the passage. The whip said, "Oh, we can't do that. I want you to give me two other bills." I'm going, "Well, come on. Whoa. Give me a break, Doug." You guys can do anything you want in four days, and you want me to give you two bills for what would be a saving of one day? Come on. On top of that, we suggested that we send this bill directly to committee, and the government didn't like it. So don't come to us and tell us that we're holding up the bill. We can't hold anything up here any more.

Imagine if we had rules in this House as it used to be when I first came here. I remember, when I was first elected, a bill would come into the House—

Mr Kormos: That was after the Peterson rule changes.

Mr Bisson: Yeah, yeah. But I just say, when I first came here in 1990 a bill would come into the House, a member could get up and stand as long as he or she chose to speak at debate. There was a case when Mr Kormos spoke for 17 hours on auto insurance—seventeen and a half; make sure he gets the full 30 minutes. Basically, members had the ability as the opposition to really hold up a bill if they wanted to. At the end of the day, what that did, in my view, is that it made the negotiations at the House leaders' meeting a little bit more meaningful. The government wanted to get their agenda passed. They basically had to sit down with the opposition and try to order the business in a way that was acceptable to the opposition, so rather than holding up the bill for a long period of time, maybe there was a bit of to-ing and fro-ing.

We're having a hard time trying to get government members to come in to even participate in this debate. Tonight we haven't had one government member get up and speak on this bill, except for a two-minute comment by the member from Mississauga East or West or whatever part of Mississauga she comes from. Here we are tonight—Mr Speaker, we don't even have a quorum here. I would ask you to check quorum so we can at least get members to come into the House and listen to debate on this every important bill. Mr Speaker, is there quorum?

The Deputy Speaker: Will you check and see if there is quorum, please?

Clerk Assistant: Quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: I'm so glad we were able to get some government members who care so much about this bill in here to at least listen to the debate. I implore them to get up and actually speak to the bill.

I was surprised tonight. I walked into the House and fully expected the minister of safety and whatever he does, Mr Runciman, to get up and tell us the reasons why this bill was important, but he didn't even get up. He didn't get up to speak on the bill and it automatically went to the opposition. The government is saying to us that, oh my God, we're not taking this bill seriously. I'd say to the government, you're the ones who are not taking it seriously. You don't want to debate it.

To go back to the first point I made, before I get on to talking about the bill: the government comes in here and cries a big river. They say, "Oh, my Lord, the opposition is holding up debate on the bill." You're the guys who changed the rules in the House. You can have everything you want in four days. Don't come crying to us. Monday, Tuesday, Wednesday, time allocation on Thursday—boom, it's out of here. So don't come to us and say, "Oh, opposition, you're holding it up." I say you have some incompetence on your side. You don't know how to do the agenda of the House.

Do you know what's the worst part? And I know my good friend from Niagara Centre will understand this. We do two sessional days per day. When I first got elected here we had, in one day, one sessional day, and we were able to organize the bills of the House and we had rules that said you can have debate as long as you want on a bill. We got our bills through the House because we sat down and negotiated with the opposition party and the then third party, the Tories and the Liberals, how we would get legislation thorough the House.

So let's get this straight. They don't get one sessional day per day, they get two sessional days per day, and they're saying they can't pass their bills? My Lord, what are the Tories coming to? What incompetence.

Mr Kormos: They couldn't organize a drunk-up in a brewery.

Mr Bisson: Well, tonight they could organize a drunk-up in a brewery probably, but on a normal night they wouldn't be able to do it. I just thought it was rather a lame excuse for the government to come in here and say we're holding up the bill. We couldn't hold anything up here if we tried. All we can do is hold it for three days. Quite frankly, a number of pieces of legislation take a certain amount of debate. How many times have we seen bills come into this House where the government says to us, "Pass this in one day on unanimous consent."

Interjection.

The Deputy Speaker: Member for Nipissing, come to order.

Mr Bisson: "It's an easy bill. There's nothing to it. It's a no-brainer." And then we raise some issues—

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Niagara Centre on a point of order.

Mr Kormos: Mr McDonald doesn't get it. You're the heckler. You're supposed to be making Mr Bisson look stupid.

Hon Mrs Johns: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I think that's unparliamentary.

The Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order.

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: Order. I'd encourage you to reflect upon your behaviour. I'll give you that opportunity. If you'd rather, I'll reflect on it. If my meaning isn't absolutely clear, let me know.

The Chair recognizes the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. As I was saying, the government comes in here and says, "You can pass this bill lickety-split." And how many times have we seen the government come in here and say, "We've got this bill. It's a one-page bill; there's not a lot to it. We want to pass this in one day because it doesn't require any debate and it doesn't require any kind of committee time—"

Interjections.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Oxford and the member for Simcoe North, you aren't reflecting enough. I'll not warn you again.

The Chair recognizes the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: I was just saying that the government comes in here and says we're trying to hold up debate on this bill. There are a number of occasions where the government has come in here and said we only need one day of debate on a bill because it's so simple. I remember a number of bills the government brought in. For example, there was one particular bill where they dealt with assessment issues. They brought it into this House and said, "We want to deal with this in one day because it's so simple. There's nothing to it and we don't need any committee time." They passed that bill—actually, we held it up for three days. We had a fourth day where we did time allocation and the bill was voted on on the fifth day. Since then, we've had to bring in about four or five bills to fix the problem they had with the first bill.

There are all kinds of examples where the government has hurried into the House and said, "We've got this bill.

We don't need a lot of debate and we don't need any committee time. Just trust us." After the bill is actually passed and has had an opportunity to be scrutinized by the House and the public, we find out it doesn't do what is purported in the title.

For example, there was the bill that Justice Day commented on, the Victims' Bill of Rights. Do you remember that one? The government brought in the bill; it was a very short bill. They introduced it and called it the Victims' Bill of Rights. The government came in and said, "Oh, the opposition is trying to hold up rights that individuals in the province could get if you'd only pass this bill in quick order and give the people in Ontario new rights as victims." We said, "No, there are problems with this bill. There are things you need to put in it to give it some teeth. You've got to make sure this bill is written in such a way to give the people of Ontario the rights you purport to give them in the Victims' Bill of Rights." The government said, "No, no, you're wrong. You just have to pass this. Trust us." We held up the bill as long as we could. It ended up that the government got their way because they're able to pass everything by time allocation. The bill was passed and eventually it was proclaimed.

Then one day in Ontario, a person tried to claim their rights under the Victims' Bill of Rights and weren't able to get their rights as a victim. They went before the court and Justice Day said, "There are no new rights given in the Victims' Bill of Rights. There is nothing in this bill that gives you any new other rights than what you had prior to the bill being passed."

There are all kinds of examples where the government says, "Pass this bill. It's so important. It's going to do something," but in fact it does exactly nothing that the government purports it's going to do.

I say to the government, take the time to draft your legislation properly. One of the things we need to do around here from time to time is take the time to draft a bill properly and send it off to committee. For example, when they did franchise legislation, there was an opportunity where a bill was referred to committee at first reading. That was a wonderful process, and I give the government full credit for that. Our critic, Mr Tony Martin, who's done a whole bunch of work on the issue of giving franchisees some rights around the contracts they get into with the franchisors, did a lot of work with the other committee members from all three parties in this Legislature to build what was a good bill.

We say that's a good way of doing things. At the beginning, you could say, "Here are our ideas as a government." For example, if we took this red light bill you're doing here, you could say, "We'll send that out to committee at first reading. There will be a chance for the police, for motorists, the CAA and other people to come before us to tell us what they think about this bill, to tell us if they think there are things that are missing or things we may have done wrong in the drafting of the bill." Then, once you bring it back for second reading, you've had a chance to amend the bill and you can have a good debate at second reading. It wouldn't have to be for very long; because of the rules of this House, you'd only go three days. You'd be able to say, "The government purports to give a particular initiative some weight in law. We've sent it out to committee. There have been some amendments made." You bring it back for second reading and find out at second reading that there are maybe a couple of other things you've got to do, so off to committee it goes after second reading, and eventually you pass what is a good bill.

There are processes we can follow here in the Legislature that would make this place much more relevant as an assembly. At the end of the day, we'd probably serve our constituents much better. I think it's a disservice to our constituents to have a process such as has been established here where government introduces a bill and four days later it's passed. There's no real committee time, no real time to reflect on what a bill should do.

I'm just going to give you a couple of examples on this bill. On this particular bill, I've got to say that what the government is trying to do is a laudable thing. I don't have a problem with what the government's trying to do. They want to improve the safety of emergency workers like police officers, ambulances and firefighters in Ontario by making it mandatory for a vehicle coming upon an emergency vehicle parked on the side of the highway to slow down. That makes some sense; no argument.

Mr Martin: We supported photo radar, and we support this.

Mr Bisson: Yes. We think this is not a bad thing. I'll come to photo radar in a minute because I think that's very relevant to this debate.

We're saying, "That's fine, but we think you've missed a couple of things." For example, there are not only vehicles with red lights parked on the side of the road doing emergency service or providing service to the motoring public out there on Highway 400 or Highway 401 in terms of a vehicle stopped on the side of the road or an accident. For example, we have volunteer firefighters in Ontario. We passed a bill in this House last year, I think it was, that said volunteer firefighters have the right to take a green flashing light and keep it inside their private car so that if they're called to an emergency, they're able to put the green light up on the dash or on top of the car or truck they're driving and, within reason, hurry to where they're going without putting people in danger. We thought that was a good idea.

What happens if the emergency—because in communities that my good friend Mr Martin represents and in communities I represent, in many cases emergency vehicles and emergency workers are volunteers. In many of the communities I represent, Fauquier, for example, Opasatika and a whole bunch of other communities, the emergency response team are not paid people. They're not on full-time staff. My good friend Mr McDonald has the same situation in his part of the province. When you actually call in an emergency, it could be that the closest person to the emergency is a volunteer firefighter. He or she gets a page on the pager, takes the green light and puts it on top of the vehicle and rushes to the scene of the accident, giving initial service to whatever the emergency is until the emergency vehicle, staffed by other volunteers, comes to the scene of the accident. It's very possible that the first vehicle on the scene of the accident is the volunteer firefighter who shows up in his or her private car. So we're saying, why not extend this legislation, this regulatory or legislative law that tries to protect emergency workers, to that volunteer firefighter?

In fact, there was a tragic situation in Tony Martin's riding of Sault Ste Marie but a couple of weeks ago where a young volunteer firefighter was involved in a vehicle accident on the way to an emergency. I don't know, maybe we couldn't have saved her life by way of this bill; I'm not sure exactly what the circumstances of the accident were. But it's not inconceivable that the first person at the scene of the accident would be a volunteer firefighter. If that's the case, shouldn't we try to extend the same rights to volunteer firefighters that we're trying to give to other emergency vehicles out there responding to emergencies on our highways? I would think that's a reasonable thing to do.

When the government says to me, "Oh, you're holding up the bill and you're not allowing us to pass it," I say we have a responsibility here, all members of the House, to point out ways we can make legislation better. Imagine if we had just given you, bang, first, second and third readings all in one shot on the first day, one fell swoop by unanimous consent. We wouldn't have had the opportunity to raise the case for volunteer firefighters.

I use others. At the scene of an accident, once the emergency vehicle secures the accident scene and the ambulance takes the victims who are injured or in some cases deceased away, what is often the next vehicle to show up? Tow trucks. Are we saying we should not afford the same safety to tow truck operators on the scene of an accident?

I just recount one story—I've seen this a number of times—where I was driving along Highway 400 in September, I think, to bring some office equipment to my office in Toronto. I had my pickup truck and was on my way down the highway, basically driving along with everybody else, and there was an accident that had happened in the northbound lanes of Highway 400. I was in the southbound lanes. I noticed that there was a police officer and then parked behind him was a tow truck, in other words, more on the south side of Highway 400 toward Toronto. The first vehicle you would come up on in the accident was the tow truck. Here was the tow truck on the inside lane trying to hook up the accident vehicle to get it out of there. It was kind of late and there was not a lot of traffic. I'll tell you, I saw one guy slam on the brakes. I don't know how he or she avoided hitting that tow truck that was trying to manoeuvre itself into the inside lane to get that vehicle out.

In that case—just picture it—you're driving in the northbound lane of Highway 400. The OPP officer was parked further toward the Barrie side of the accident. The rushing oncoming vehicles were coming from the Toronto side of the accident and the first vehicle they came up on was the tow truck. That tow truck driver, I'm telling you, I swear to God that guy must have jumped about 10 feet to get out of the way. He was getting out of the driver side to walk to the back of the tow truck to do whatever he had to do to hook up the vehicle, and that guy jumped.

Shouldn't we be talking about affording the same kind of safety to people who drive tow trucks and have amber lights on their vehicles by way of this legislation? Again I say to the government, you come to me and say, "Oh, opposition, you're holding up legislation. You're endangering the lives of police officers." I say, "You're going to get this bill in four days." There's nothing we can do beyond four days to get debate on this bill, to hold it up, and we're not even holding it up. All we're doing is trying to make legitimate points. So we're saying, why not extend the rights to people who drive tow trucks in regard to amber lights on tow trucks or any other emergency vehicle that comes upon an accident?

Let's take our time. Let's send this bill either to committee or committee of the whole to do some amendments. We'll be very agreeable as the opposition to limiting the time we send this bill into committee, if you're prepared to give it a few amendments. We basically say in this bill that motorists who come upon the scene of an accident or come upon whatever kind of incident there might be where there are amber lights, red lights or green lights flashing, have got to slow down.

Mr Kormos: Or blue lights.

Mr Bisson: Or blue lights. That's what I mentioned. They have to slow down and do what is called for in this bill when it comes to calming—

Mr Kormos: By how much? How much do you have to slow down?

Mr Bisson: That's the other thing I was going to get to in this debate. Let me get to that in a minute.

I'm just saying that on that particular point, if we can at least afford the same respect to people who drive different kinds of emergency vehicles, like volunteer firefighters, tow truck drivers or whoever it might be with an amber, blue, red or green light. We're just saying, treat them all the same. They're on the scene of an accident dealing with something. You see that light flashing; everybody should slow down and make sure they're not speeding to the point they would endanger the worker or the emergency worker who happens to be at the scene of an accident.

My good friend from Niagara Centre raised exactly a point I wanted to raise: by how much do I slow down?

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. This is exactly the point I wanted to make. This legislation says—and this is why I think you have to have proper time for debate—in subsection 159.1(1), an amendment to the Highway Traffic Act, that "Upon approaching an emergency vehicle with its lamp producing intermittent flashes of red light"—and we say we should extend that to others—"that is stopped on a highway, the driver of a vehicle travelling on the same side of the highway shall slow down and proceed with caution"—what does that really mean?

Mr Kormos: It's so subjective.

Mr Bisson: It's very subjective. You're driving at 140 clicks—you're breaking the speed limit. That's what most people do on Highway 400. I drive at 120 clicks. Oops, I shouldn't have said that. But as I'm going down Highway 400, I've got people passing me at 140, 150 clicks.

Mr Kormos: And some guy's on your tail.

Mr Bisson: I'm telling you, people right up my tailpipe, honking the horn to get me out of the way.

Here's the scenario. Somebody's coming at 140 clicks down Highway 400, heading southbound and they see an emergency vehicle—only a red light because that's the only one they've got to slow down for in this bill. To what point do they slow down? We say "proceed with caution." The driver says, "I was doing 140. I got it down to 120." He slowed down.

Mr Kormos: It's the speed limit.

Mr Bisson: It's the speed limit. What's the point? "What did I do wrong? I slowed down. I wasn't doing anything wrong. I got by there real fine."

Mr Kormos: "And I was cautious."

Mr Bisson: "And I was very cautious," as the member from Niagara Centre says. He was in control of the vehicle. "What's the problem, officer? I didn't do anything wrong."

Mr Kormos: The road was dry.

Mr Bisson: Yes, perfect conditions, dry road, nice day, no rain. Everything was fine.

Do we need to, in some way, try to tighten that up a little bit? I think we do. Exactly what we need to do, I don't know. That's why I would like to have the police and others who are experts come before us and talk about what the speeds should be when we talk about slowing down and proceeding with caution. "Slow down and proceed with caution" with me as a driver might be me going from 120 to 100. For somebody else it might be 120 to 60. I don't know. It's very subjective, and I don't know how that will be dealt with in court.

I didn't hear anybody talk about this one—maybe the member from Niagara Centre did, but here's the other point. We've got the same accident on Highway 400. We're driving northbound on the 400 and we're on our way to Barrie. As you're driving up the 400, you've got a situation where there's an emergency vehicle stopped. A police officer has pulled somebody off on the side of the road to give a ticket. The police officer is out of the car giving somebody the ticket and all of a sudden somebody doesn't slow down.

Mr Kormos: A couple of government members are laughing. Are they laughing about the bill?

Mr Bisson: I know the government members are laughing because they're not taking this debate very seriously. We know that. They haven't gotten up to debate yet. But I want to make the point because there are members of the opposition who are at least listening, and I want to speak to them. I'm sure there are other people watching through the television services we have here at Queen's Park.

But let's take that scenario. You've got a police officer who has stopped somebody on the side of the road who's giving a ticket. The legislation says that if the flashing lights are on, you've got to slow down. What's the police officer to do? "Oh, God, he didn't slow down." Is he going to jump into the car and chase another car down the highway?

We saw an example just recently where there was an elderly couple killed—where was it? I read in the paper this morning that there was an elderly couple who were killed just south of Ottawa as a result of a high-speed chase that happened in the city of Ottawa. By the way, the police—and I don't fault the police. They were trying to do their jobs. That's not my intent. But the point is, we know we have a problem when it comes to car chases. Far too often, the people who get injured are not necessarily the people being chased or those doing the chasing. They're the innocent vehicles that happen to be out there when somebody runs a red light or goes through a stop sign, or somebody loses control and crashes into an oncoming car or shoves another car somewhere on a freeway.

I'm saying, is this really doable the way we're doing it? Does it mean we have to put more staffing out there? If there are emergency vehicles at an accident scene, the ambulance, the fire truck, the tow truck and the police officer, to make this legislation work does it mean we have to have a second police car ready to do the chase? I don't know. I just ask myself that question. I just wonder how practical this is the way it's written.

Mr Kormos: How many demerit points are we going to give this? Is this going to be more serious or less serious—

Mr Bisson: This is the other part of it. That's under subsection (2) of the bill, and I was going to get to that.

How are we really going to make this work? I don't think an OPP officer or a local police officer in one of the cities or towns across Ontario is going to jump into their car to chase after somebody who didn't slow down when they're on the scene of an accident somewhere in Ontario. I don't think it's going to happen. I don't think the police have the power to say, "I took the licence plate down. I saw that person not slow down. I'm reporting them and I've got their plate number." I don't think that would stand up in court either. I'm wondering how practical.

I've got to say again, government members are in here laughing. They're not taking the time to debate this bill.

Mr Kormos: In that respect, is it going to be vicarious liability?

Mr Bisson: If I knew what "vicarious" was.

Mr Kormos: That's like leaving the scene of an accident where the owner of the vehicle is fined, regardless of who's driving.

Mr Bisson: That's a very good point. We're having a debate in our own caucus about this as we speak. But I just say to the government, if you think this is really a serious issue, and I think it is, and that it deserves the attention of the House, and I believe it does, I would think the government would get up to debate or at the very least they would listen to what we have to say. But so far, all they've said is that they want this bill and they want it lickety-split. "We're only going to apply it to red lights and we don't worry if the bill's going to work or not." As a responsible member of the assembly, I'm saying, let's do it right. This is not a bad idea.

Mr Kormos: Amend it to make it vicarious liability. That way the police officer could record just the licence plate and the owner would be liable.

Mr Bisson: I didn't know what that meant, but that's basically what I was saying. My argument is that if we're going to have a situation where you've only got the one police officer at the scene of an accident, and we don't want him or her jumping into the car and doing a high-speed chase down the highway to try to catch up to somebody who didn't slow down, then maybe in the legislation we have to give police officers some sort of mechanism to charge a person by way of taking the plate down. Maybe that's something we need to do. I don't know.

Mr Kormos: Sounds like a good amendment, Mr Bisson.

Mr Bisson: There might be a good amendment, but I want to see the OPPA, the chiefs of police and others come in and tell me about this.

Mr Kormos: We didn't get consensus to go to committee.

Mr Bisson: We gave consent to go to committee to deal with this, and the government didn't want to go to committee. I'm a little bit confused about where they're going.

With regard to how this is going to work, I'm not too sure it's going to work the way it is because I know police officers in this province take their job very seriously. They're professionals at what they do. I can't believe that a police officer in the city of Timmins or an OPP officer who is on the scene of an accident, who is the only officer on the scene and sees somebody not slow down, is going to leave the scene of an emergency where they're giving service, jump in the car and chase somebody down the highway, and we're not prepared to give them at least the right to charge the person by some mechanism in a bill that says, "I've got your plate number. You're caught. We're getting you."

The other issue is that we're saying by way of penalty in this bill, if somebody is charged under this bill—that means the police officer had to get in the car and had to do chase to get the person to pull them over, and again I'm not so sure that's the way I want to do it—there are a couple of mechanisms we come in to in regard to fining. They're saying, under subsection (4):

"Every person who contravenes subsection (1) or (2) is guilty of an offence and on conviction is liable,

"(a) for a first offence, to a fine of not less than $400 and not more than $2,000; and

"(b) for each subsequent offence, to a fine of not less than $1,000 and not more than $4,000 or to imprisonment for a term of not more than six months, or to both."

What happened to the demerit point thing? It seems to me that's the best way to deal with it.

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: It's by regulation, but I haven't seen the minister come in and talk about regulation.

Mr Kormos: I'd like to hear it.

Mr Bisson: That's what I'm saying. I'm saying to the Minister of Public Safety, or whatever they call his ministry these days, it seems to me that the reason people don't do things is the fear of getting caught. I'm not convinced that people think they can get caught if they don't slow down. And if they do get caught, 400 bucks without demerit points—most people can afford the loose change. They'll pay the fine. But 400 bucks and three demerit points: "Ooh, that hurts my insurance."

Mr Kormos: It should be seven.

Mr Bisson: That's my point: three points or six points or whatever, because we all know that if you get charged and you lose demerit points, the insurance person is going to get you at the end of the year.

So I raise the issue. I want to have this debate. I want the government members to get up and tell me what you think of this. Shouldn't we be adding demerit points as a way of offering some sort of deterrent to the action of not slowing down, should you come upon an emergency vehicle?

Mr Kormos: We're getting pretty close to a quorum call. Not yet, but close—as soon as Mr Martin and I leave.

Mr Bisson: That's right. I need that to happen.

Anyway, I say to the government members who are saying, "We don't need a debate. We don't have to deal with this," that it's a good bill, not a bad idea, laudable goals, a step in the right direction—I give you full kudos for it—but I don't think we've thought this out.

I just want to get back to the issue of what happens in regard to the attention people give to this bill. The government says, "Boy, we need to have real debate when it comes to this bill." The government takes this bill so seriously. They say, "This is such an important bill." I saw them do backflips in this House today because they were so concerned about the bill, and they can't even hold quorum in the House.

Mr Speaker, can I ask you, is there a quorum in the House?

The Deputy Speaker: Would you check and see if there is quorum?

Clerk Assistant: Quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: Quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: The Chair recognizes the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: I'm going to make a proposal to the government that we put an amendment to this bill. I hope the government takes this suggestion as a friendly amendment, because it's an amendment I would like to bring to this bill, should this bill actually make its way to committee. I think we need to have a clause in here for vicarious liability. I'm going to go back and explain what that means.

If you have an accident somewhere in Ontario and there are emergency vehicles present at the scene of the accident or the incident, whatever it might be, and somebody doesn't slow down, I don't believe that we, as members of the assembly, want to force a high-speed chase on some municipal road or some highway in Ontario. One of the ways of ensuring that we don't encourage a high-speed chase is to give in this legislation a mechanism that allows the police officer to take the plate number of the car that slowed down and to issue a fine or issue a charge, I would argue, by way of charging the vehicle that went by, as we did with photo radar with failure to remain at the scene of an accident, or when it comes to red light cameras.

We already have the precedent in law that says, "If a car jumps a red light and has a picture taken by way of a red light camera," that we've passed in this House before—if a police officer sees a car leaving the scene of an accident, or for that matter a member of the public sees somebody leave the scene of an accident, you can register the licence plate number. The police officer is able to issue a charge and eventually a warrant, depending on what happened, to take action on that based on just taking a licence plate number.

I would argue, probably as an issue of public safety—and I'm sure the Minister of Public Safety doesn't want to encourage high-speed chases on our highways—we need to put a vicarious liability clause in the bill. That way we can ensure that the police officers or the emergency workers on the scene have the tools necessary to do the job of taking care of the emergency situation they are attending to and can at least write down the plate number to later on go after the person who didn't slow down at the scene of the accident.

Here's the other issue. This is the point I wanted to make before we end the debate tonight. What happens if the first on the scene of an accident is just an ambulance, and a police officer for whatever reason doesn't show up? What happens? The ambulance driver and his or her partner or the paramedics or the fire department are at the accident scene and are ministering at the scene of the accident, and the police officer isn't there yet, and all of a sudden, whoosh, the car goes by—

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): How does that go again?

Mr Bisson: It was "whoosh"—it almost hits the emergency worker on the side of the road, as the car doesn't slow down. What's a paramedic to do—jump inside their truck and chase the guy down the road? Certainly not. They don't have the right to do that. But if we had a vicarious liability clause in the bill, the emergency worker could say, "Ah, look at this. Here's the licence plate number of the person who didn't slow down. When the police officer shows up at the scene of the accident, we will give them that plate number and we will be able to issue a charge based on the plate number."

That way you don't have to have the police officer on the scene to make this legislation work. The emergency workers don't have to jump in their vehicle and try to chase the person down, leaving the scene of the accident themselves—which they would never do, obviously, but that's sort of what the bill entails them to do—or when the police officer shows up, say, "Don't stop here. Go after that guy," because then you're encouraging a high-speed chase somewhere in a town, city or highway in the province.

Over the years we've had a number of incidents that were very unfortunate. Police officers have been put in a position where they've had to give chase to somebody who might have blown a stop sign or left the scene of an accident or done something they thought was suspicious. They've taken off after the individual driving the car and there have been accidents where innocent bystanders have been killed. Every time that happens we say, "Oh, how are we going to deal with this? This is such a terrible thing."

I say to the government members that one of the ways we can deal with this is to put a clause in the bill that says that police officers or emergency workers on the side of the highway, or a member of the public who happens to be on the scene of the accident, can take down the plate number of the person they saw putting the emergency workers in danger by not slowing down their vehicle, so that later on they can issue a charge under this bill, under section 159.1(1) of the Highway Traffic Act, and deal with it.

Hopefully the Minister of Public Safety would be able to accept such an amendment, that I think would go a long way to making sure that not only the police officers but other emergency workers on the scene of an accident are made safe, and at the same time not putting the motoring public in danger by the police officer having to chase down the car to give the ticket in the first place.

I think I know what's going to happen. Most police officers—because all the ones I know are responsible—are not going to give chase. I don't believe they will. I look at my friends on the Timmins police force and the OPP up in my area who are doing the policing in our communities, and I don't believe one of them is going to give chase unless there was a really flagrant violation of the law. It would have to be pretty bad for an OPP officer or Timmins police to jump in their car and take off after somebody if they happen to break 159.1 (1) of the Highway Traffic Act. I think one of the ways to do it is to do as we had suggested: do a vicarious liability clause inside the bill. I've learned something tonight by going into this debate on that one.

The other thing that I want to say, and we've made the point before, is the issue of penalty. The government seems to think that the only way you can do penalty is by either charging a person a fine or giving imprisonment. That is one way of doing penalty, but there may be other, more effective ways of giving penalty to people that happen to break this law. One way to do that is possibly by adding some demerit points, three or six demerit points for the offence. The more I think about it as we get into this debate, probably six or seven demerit points is better than three. If people know it's against the law and they can lose demerit points for not having slowed down at the scene of an accident for an emergency vehicle, I think they are less likely not to slow down.

Mr Kormos: It's a reflection of the seriousness of the offence.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. The member from Niagara Centre makes the point well: it's a reflection of the seriousness of the offence and how seriously it has to be taken by the driving public to be able to deal with this.

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I am delighted to introduce to you and to this House my good friend Aldo Sforza and a small delegation from South America. Let's welcome them.

The Deputy Speaker: That is not a point of order, but welcome to our Legislature.

The Chair recognizes the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: He needs a geography lesson; they're from Italy, not South America, Italy and Colombia. Now we've got it straight. We have visitors from Colombia and Italy, and I know that people driving in Colombia and people driving in Italy would be very interested in this bill. That's why they've come here to lend support to what I'm saying, because in Italy and in Colombia they're saying that this is an important issue. We need to make sure we have a bill that works so that at the end of the day police officers and other emergency workers are safe, that there's some mechanism to deter people from committing this offence in the first place, and that if there is an offence, there's a mechanism for police that doesn't involve a high-speed chase.

On the high-speed-chase issue, I just want to say again that it's really a problem in many of our cities that, unfortunately, police get put in the position of having to give chase to a car, for whatever reason. Far too often, as I mentioned earlier, people are put at risk or actually killed because of the high-speed chase—not the fault of the police officer, I would argue, but because they're trying to give chase and the car they're chasing does something, runs into another car, jumps a red light, runs over a pedestrian. One of the things we really need to think about as legislators is trying to find ways to minimize high-speed chases. One of the ways that you do that is by putting the amendment to the bill that we suggest that doesn't force the police officer to jump in the car and pursue to charge the individual.

If government members took this bill seriously, as I think they should, I would have heard comments from the minister on this particular part of the bill. He would have told us why he has decided we don't have to have those types of amendments in the bill. He would have responded and we would have been able to reflect and say, "Maybe there's an issue we didn't look at. Maybe there's a reason he omitted other suggestions that were made in the debate about the bill we're having tonight."

I just hope, as we come back to the third day of second reading of this bill, that we're going to actually have the minister get up and speak to this bill and give us some indication of what he thinks about some of the amendments we put forward. The amendments are very simple, as we said. First, we think you should include all vehicles that come upon the scene of an emergency, be it a red light, a green light, a blue light, or an amber light. We need to protect all those various classes of vehicles and workers, emergency workers and others, who come upon the accident so we make it safe for them to do what they have to do on the highway when they're assisting at the scene of an accident. Second, we have to have a mechanism that allows the police officers to make the charge without having to jump in their car and run down the highway and do a high-speed chase to catch the individual.

Hon Mr Stockwell: When you jump in your car, you're not running, Gilles.

Mr Bisson: Well, he has to run to the car, jump in and then drive. That's very good.

Anyway, we need something that doesn't force the police officer to jump in and make chase, some sort of amendment that says that when it comes to failure to remain at the scene of an accident, a member of the public or an emergency worker or police officer writes down the licence plate. We charge the car and we figure out who was driving it after.

The biggest thing is that we try to create a deterrent in the first place. There's one thing I've come to appreciate. If people think there's a chance of getting caught, they're less likely to break the law.

Mr Kormos: The greater the likelihood of getting caught, the greater the likelihood of compliance.

Mr Bisson: Exactly. A good example of that is what happened when we introduced photo radar. Everybody slowed down. With photo radar, if people thought there was a chance they were going to get caught, they slowed down. Why? Because they knew they could get caught.

So I'm saying, if somebody's driving down the road and knows there's a law that says you can lose six points for not slowing down when you come upon the scene of an accident and there are emergency vehicles or other vehicles with flashing lights, they're going to slow down.

To the government members, there are a number of amendments we've put forward that I think are fairly important. I've got to mention this. The other day I was with Michael Prue, the member for Beaches-East York, driving to a meeting on Dufferin, up by the 401, and exactly the same thing happened. There was an emergency vehicle beside the road and somebody—I don't know why they weren't paying attention—almost clipped the guy as they went by. This bill probably would have been a good thing. If the government had taken the time to introduce this earlier, we could have done this in four days, and if we had had the amendments that we're suggesting in place, maybe we would have been able to prevent what potentially could have been a fairly serious accident up in the Dufferin area where I was with Mr Prue the other day when we were attending a meeting.

I know I've still got a fair amount of time left and I'm going to get an opportunity to come back to speak to this tomorrow. I hope the government calls this bill tomorrow. I think this would be an excellent bill. In fact, I'm going to the House leaders' meeting tomorrow and I'm going to ask the government to order up this bill tomorrow. I don't care if it's tomorrow afternoon or tomorrow night. I want to know that the government is serious and will call this bill tomorrow, because that will be the third day. I also want to know how much time they're prepared to give at committee so we can deal with this.

Interjection: One hour.

Mr Bisson: We don't need a lot of time in committee, I would argue.

Mr Kormos: More than an hour.

Mr Bisson: More than an hour, because it will take longer than that to do the amendments, but we need some time in committee to propose the amendments we think we need.

I look forward to going to the House leaders' meeting tomorrow and meeting with the government House leader, with him telling me that they feel so seriously about this bill that they're going to call it tomorrow for third reading and then next week we're going to have an opportunity to deal with it at committee so we can put forward our amendments, and then that they're going to bring the bill back next week. So by the time we leave for the Remembrance Day break, police officers and other emergency workers across Ontario will have the confidence of knowing they have a little bit more safety when they're at the scene of an accident. I know the government House leader and the government whip are going to support me in my request tomorrow that we debate this bill tomorrow afternoon, that we go to committee next week to deal with the proposed amendments, that we get third reading started and hopefully finished by Thursday of next week. I think that would be a really wonderful thing.

Mr Speaker, seeing that it's almost 9:30 of the clock, I would suggest we adjourn the House and come back again tomorrow to finish this most important debate.

The Deputy Speaker: A wonderful idea. It being 9:30, this House stands adjourned until 10 am tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 2129.

PRIVATE MEMBERS' PUBLIC BUSINESS

SLOT MACHINES

Mr Monte Kwinter (York Centre): I move that, in the opinion of this House, the Eves government should hold a public inquiry into the granting of up to 800 slot machines to Picov Downs.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): The member has up to 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Kwinter: I come to this issue with some experience. In 1986, as Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, I initiated the racetrack assistance program. The reason for that was that racetracks were in big trouble. They were having difficulties because of lotteries, charity bingos and the aging population of their normal client base, and they found that it was getting more and more difficult to function. This race track assistance program allowed them to do some marketing and to upgrade their facilities so that in fact they could attract a new clientele. That was very, very successful, and as a result of that particular initiative, I have maintained a consistent relationship with the industry, because I felt that I had a stake in turning it around.

In 1998, the government decided to address a further problem that the racing industry was having. The problem was they were now competing with the mega-casinos in Niagara, Windsor and Rama. What was happening was that the racing industry, which used to be the only legalized gambling in Ontario, was now finding it was more and more difficult for them to compete. So the racetrack slots initiative was put into place in 1998. The rationale was quite simple: there was gambling already taking place there. It would not upset, if you want to call it, the gambling ecology of the area, in that you would not be injecting a new gambling facility; it would just be enhancing the gambling facility that was there. That was good for everybody: the municipality who got a share of the profits; the racetrack industry, because they got money that allowed them to enhance their purses and their physical facilities; and of course, the big winner was the provincial government, who got a great deal of revenue from that.

There was a program put in place, and the 16 racetracks in Ontario were all allotted slot machines based on their performance and the wagering that took place. It ranged from a high for Woodbine Entertainment, which did $569 million-plus in wagering last year, getting 1,700 slot machines, to the very smallest slot machine operators in the province, ones like Woodstock, Dresden, Clinton, Hanover, which each got 100. In between there were varying other amounts but that was the range: 100 to the smallest and 1,700 to the largest. That was the program and it continued until the year 2000.

At that point, there was a feeling that maybe the gambling had reaching the saturation point in Ontario, so Management Board issued a directive on a fact sheet. It says: "On April 19, 2000, this government announced our three-year plan for gaming in Ontario. As part of that plan, we announced a three-year pause in the expansion of new charity casinos, new commercial casinos, and charity casinos at racetracks in the province." It went on to say that there was "a pause in implementation of slot machines at racetracks as of March 31, 2000, until the impact of this program can be thoroughly assessed," and it also says that "16 racetracks met our requirements to host a slot machine facility. Nine facilities have already opened and the remaining seven to open at a later date."

All of these facilities were opened without a referendum. They were all done by ministerial zoning orders, and I have no problem with that. I'm just saying that that was the way it worked and that is why Woodbine, which is in the city of Toronto, has slot machines even though the city of Toronto held a referendum that turned down gambling for Toronto. But because of the special nature of racetracks they were able to allot the slot machines based on these ministerial zoning orders. That is what has happened.

The interesting thing about it is that when that particular Management Board fact sheet and announcement was made, the Chair of Management Board was interviewed by Richard Brennan on Tuesday, June 20, 2000, and he said: "Management Board Chairman Chris Hodgson announced a three-year moratorium yesterday on all types of legalized gaming expansion, suggesting the province has nearly reached the saturation point." The announcement "covers the period from July 1 this year to March 31, 2003...."

"There are 8,812 slot machines in 16 racetracks, leaving two—one in Ajax and the other in Belleville—that will not be getting them for three years.

"Hodgson also said the province will not entertain any requests from racetracks until April, 2003, to become full-blown charity casinos...."

"Ron Barbaro, chair and chief executive officer of the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation, said research found 83% of adult Ontario residents have access to legal gaming.

"Barbaro said the research ... consultants showed the only spot left in the province where gaming is hard to find is in eastern Ontario."

Subsequent to that Management Board directive there was a change. There was an amendment that was made—it was not announced, but it was made—that racetracks were reduced from a three-year moratorium to a two-year moratorium. The interesting thing about it is: why would it be necessary to change a moratorium on allocating slot machines to racetracks from three years to two years when the only two racetracks in Ontario that do not have slot machines were deemed to be unsuitable candidates by the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp?

That's the first question: why was it done when the only possible beneficiary was this tiny, tiny racetrack? And when I tell you about "tiny," I just want to give you an example. As part of this initiative there is money to come back into the racing commission for its operation, and this is done by monthly track fees. Woodbine Entertainment pays, on a monthly basis, $237,239 for their monthly track fees. Picov Downs, which barely is even a racetrack—it doesn't even have a full oval and it only does $281,136 a year—their monthly track fee is $117. There are people in Toronto and Ontario—we hear about it every day—whose hydro bills are more than that every month.

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): Every week.

Mr Kwinter: Every week. Here is a racetrack that is paying $117 a month in track fees. As I say, it's a joke.

Why was the moratorium lifted? The Attorney General, in discussing the issue of the moratorium, said, "I've since been advised otherwise. Indeed, it was a two-year moratorium.... I would refer him in particular to a letter dated July 21, 2000, in which Jane Holmes clearly indicates that it is a two-year pause. That's straight from the horse's mouth." That was on September 30.

On October 10, 10 days later, the Attorney General, referencing the same letter's claim, "confirmed that the expansion of slot machines at racetracks was not covered by the three-year moratorium." He went on to say, "That moratorium was not to apply to slot machines at racetracks." It's simply not true.

I've read to you the directive from Management Board. I will tell you about other documents that have been put out. Nobody, other than the Attorney General, is questioning that it was a two-year moratorium. I would suggest that, when he says it comes "straight from the horse's mouth," his statement doesn't come from the horse's mouth but rather from the other end of the horse.

When we get to the situation of the end of this moratorium, which was in March, we had a letter sent to the operators of Picov Downs, and it spells out some very troubling procedural events that I will be talking about later. But there is no question in my mind that there are enough questions out there that absolutely must be addressed by a public inquiry, because without that we're going to have a situation where the process is being perverted, where there are severe questions of ethics. I think it's important we support this motion.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate. The Minister of Enterprise, Innovation and—

Interjection.

The Acting Speaker: I'm sorry. I always have trouble with that one, Minister.

Hon Jim Flaherty (Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): I have trouble with it from time to time. It's the great new Ministry of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation.

I speak at this time of course in my primary duty as the representative of the people of Whitby-Ajax in the great region of Durham, a region about which the member opposite quite clearly knows very little and cares very little.

He and his Liberal colleagues care very little about anything except their friends in the city of Toronto, in particular the member opposite who just spoke and his friends in the horse racing industry who have been his friends, he says, since 1986. Good friends and financial supporters they are of the member opposite.

He doesn't care about Durham region and he doesn't care about economic development in Durham region. No, he says all the other racetracks in Ontario should have slot machines, and 14 out of 16 do. He started that process and he's proud of it. But not Durham region; no, not the 500,000 people of Durham region. They should go to his friends' racetracks in Toronto. The people of Durham region should be denied by the Liberal Party, by the member opposite who just spoke, that sort of entertainment opportunity, he says.

Why does he say that? Is this about integrity or ethics? He says that. He knows that's not so, even though he didn't say this. He knows this matter was raised by me with the Integrity Commissioner of Ontario. He knows the Integrity Commissioner was satisfied with the way it was handled. He knows that, but he doesn't say that.

It's not about ethics or integrity—perhaps his ethics and his integrity, given his financial backers, and we have the list here. We know who's been backing him financially in the horse racing industry since—what was it the member opposite said?—1986. We know that. So it's not about ethics.

Is it about contributions to political candidates? No, it's not about that. We have a system for that in Ontario. We have a disclosure system in leadership campaigns. That's how the member opposite knows where the financial support came from, because all of us obeyed the law. We support the law. We disclosed who has given us financial support during the course of our various political campaigns in the province. So it's not about that.

It's not about ethics and it's not about contributions to political candidates. Is it about the number of slot machines? No, it's not about that either, because he knows that the decision, as the Attorney General has explained in this place, was up to a certain number and that that decision will be made in the normal course, following the normal processes, by the normal commissions. He knows that too. So it's not about that.

So what is this about today? Is it about finances? He says he has some experience in these matters. The window to the truth is that, I think when he says he has some experience, yes, he does. His experience was against Durham region. His experience was to give nothing to Durham region. Even today, what does he call our racetrack? He calls it "barely a racetrack." That's what the member opposite says. He demeans Durham region. He demeans our facility.

What's wrong with Durham region participating in this entertainment business in Ontario? Why is the member opposite so keen on denying the people of Durham region this $5-million investment opportunity? Why is he against the council of the town of Ajax? Why is he, the member opposite from Wilson, against the regional municipality support? Why is he against the people of the town of Ajax, who in a referendum voted to support this? Why is he against all of those things?

If we look at the record, when he was a minister in government from 1985 to 1990, the Liberals ignored Durham region: no expansion of highways; no MRI machine; no university certainly, which we now will have in Durham region, the new University of Ontario Institute of Technology. Durham region matters to the Conservative government of Ontario, first led by Premier Harris, now led by Premier Eves.

Is it any wonder that every member from Durham region in this place is a Progressive Conservative? There's not a Liberal elected there. The member opposite—I thank him for this—is ensuring there will not be a Liberal elected there for a long time, because he goes out of his way to advocate for his friends, his financial supporters, not looking at the interests of the province of Ontario, oh no, looking at the narrow interests of his supporters in his part of the racing industry in his region of Ontario.

The Liberals are against Durham region. They've ignored Durham region. They have not reached out to support a business enterprise, an entertainment location, that is supported unanimously across the region.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): Unanimously.

Hon Mr Flaherty: It is unanimously when you have the town council, when you have the economic development people, when you have the people themselves voting in a referendum.

The member from Rosedale is against it too. Am I surprised? No. What does the member for Rosedale care about Durham region? He's another Liberal who thinks the sun rises and sets on their ridings in the city of Toronto, like the member from Wilson. So we have two of them now this morning going against the people of Durham region.

It'll be a long time before a Liberal gets elected in Durham region. I invite the member opposite from Wilson, if he doesn't think so, to come on out to Durham region and talk about this. Come on out and meet with the people in Ajax. Come on out to Harwood Avenue and Westney Road. Come out and talk to the people and see if you maintain that view you seem to have that you know what's good for economic development in Durham region better than the people of Durham region do.

As I say, this isn't about conflict of interest. That's been dealt with by the process we have, which the Liberals don't have in Ottawa. We have a meaningful process here, but his friends in Ottawa don't have that kind of meaningful process. We have an empowered Integrity Commissioner in Ontario who reports to this Legislature. It's not about our system of disclosure of political contributions, which works and works well in the province and which is the right system to have. It's not about the number of slot machines. What it is about, quite frankly, is a member of this House demeaning himself and demeaning this House by advocating for special interests in his particular region and ignoring the needs of others in this province, in particular, the people I'm proud to represent from Durham region.

This is a good project for Durham region. I know the member opposite is against it. I know the Liberals are against it. I'm for it. I'm going to continue to fight for it. It's good for my people in Durham region. It's good for our economy. We're just as important as your special interests in Toronto.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Kwinter: I have to refrain from laughing out loud at this minister's protestations about what was going on.

Just to put the record straight, OHRIA, the Ontario Horse Racing Industry Association, is opposed to this. It's not a Toronto-centred organization. It represents the 18 racetracks in Ontario. They have said that the allocation of up to 800 slot machines is inexcusable; it is grossly disproportionate. They have said that.

Hon Mr Flaherty: Who controls the racing days? Your friends. You know that.

Mr Kwinter: You appoint the racing commission. What are you talking about?

Hon Mr Flaherty: You're just defending your friends. You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr Kwinter: Let's just talk about what is happening here. The member talks about this great support in Durham. He doesn't say there was a referendum to bring a charity casino to Durham that was defeated. Another referendum was introduced to put in racetrack slot machines, and it was passed by 54%. This has absolutely nothing to do with the people of Durham. It has to do with the process; it has to do with what has happened.

The minister says this was approved by the Integrity Commissioner. He certainly must have that in writing; I can't believe it was done orally. Would he please table that clearance right now? Would he show me the document that says the Integrity Commissioner heard you make an approach and say, "Somebody who's got a matter before cabinet is planning to give me an $80,000 contribution. Is it all right if I accept it and still be in cabinet?"

Hon Mr Flaherty: You should be ashamed of yourself.

Mr Kwinter: You should be ashamed of yourself. Where is the document that says—

Hon Mr Flaherty: I'm not listening to this. You should be ashamed of yourself, Monte. You're a better man than that.

The Acting Speaker: Order, Minister. The member for York Centre has the floor, and only the member for York Centre. The member for York Centre will speak through the Speaker.

Mr Kwinter: Again I challenge the member: if he has a clearance from the Integrity Commissioner—I don't deny it—let him show it to me. Let him show me in writing that he has that clearance.

Now, the Attorney General consistently says that everything is done by the book. The facts are that the letter that was sent on April 10 by Tim Hudak to Norm Picov was unique. Of the 16 tracks that received slot machines, not one received the letter from the minister; they received the letter from the chairman and chief executive officer of the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation. Under the process—and the Attorney General keeps insisting regularly: "This is an arm's-length process; it has nothing to do with us. You will deal with the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation. They will make the recommendation. They will make all the arrangements."

So what happens? The minister says, "I am writing to advise you that the OLCG"—the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corporation—"has been directed to begin discussions with you for the establishment of a slot machine facility, with up to 800 slot machines, at Picov Downs." There goes the arm's-length, independent gaming corporation. They have been directed by cabinet to do it.

What as the result of that? Ron Barbaro, the chairman, refused to send the letter. The deputy minister refused to sign off. So what do we have in the dying moments of the former government? The day before the power shifted to Ernie Eves, we have the minister, a strong supporter of Mr Flaherty, putting together a proposal, sending it out and saying, "You're going to get 800 slot machines."

Hon Mr Flaherty: You should be ashamed of yourself. You should put a bag over your head.

The Acting Speaker: The minister will withdraw that. And if he continues, he will be named.

Hon Mr Flaherty: I withdraw.

Mr Kwinter: I have a question. If there is a possibility—and I can tell you the Attorney General has said on four separate occasions, "We may not give them any. They may not get any." When you talk about doing a disservice to the people of Durham, their member stood up at a press conference and said, "This has been approved. We're going to get up to 800 slot machines." The council was delighted. Everybody was happy. This was a great day for Durham. Now the Attorney General stands up and says on a regular basis, "We may not give them any. We may not give them any slot machines."

Interjection.

Mr Kwinter: Talk about how you can go back to Durham—I'd be happy to go back to Durham and defend my position. But if they're going to get no slot machines, you're going to have a problem going back to Durham. They've already been dancing in the streets; they've been told they're going to get them.

Why do we have this situation with the Attorney General saying they may get one, they may get two, they may get four or they may get 10? It doesn't make any sense. If you can't give them 100—

Hon Mr Flaherty: OHRIA says 200.

Mr Kwinter: I'm saying the number is between zero—

Hon Mr Flaherty: Your friends say 200.

Mr Kwinter: You give them none or you give them between 100 and 800. I have no quarrel with that. But don't muddy the waters by saying, "We may give them none, we may give them two, we may give them four, we may give them six." You can't give them six slot machines. What are they going to do with them? Mr Picov will set them up in his living room and invite his friends to come in and play the slot machines. You can't do that. You've got to give them a minimum—

Hon Mr Flaherty: You just get right down there. Why don't you get down on all fours? What a low-life.

Mr Kwinter: Mr Speaker, that's out of order.

I just want to give you some comments. I want to quote Mr Picov.

Interjection.

Mr Kwinter: One has nothing to do with the other, and you know it.

Mr Picov stated, when asked about giving the $80,000 to Mr Flaherty, "One has nothing to do with the other. I am not political. We're not political at all. My sole motivation is that I would like to see a Premier from the Durham region." If you say that, why, after he gave Mr Flaherty's campaign an $80,000 non-tax-receipted contribution, did he then give $10,000 to Ernie Eves? If he was really planning to make sure that Mr Flaherty became the first Premier from Durham region, why did he give Mr Eves $10,000? It doesn't make any sense.

I want to quote from an article in the Toronto Sun, not exactly a supporter of the Liberal Party and basically the house organ of the Conservative Party. Here is a quote from Hartley Steward: "Only a fool would believe our politicians don't understand their part of the deal when they take a $100,000 donation from someone running a business in their jurisdiction. That donor, some day, is going to show up on your doorstep with a favour to ask." That's from Hartley Steward of the Toronto Sun.

When we talk about problems, here's an article that appeared in the Globe and Mail on September 28, 2002, written by Murray Campbell. He starts off talking about the Conservative Party: "It was a bad week for them—a terrible, horrible, no good, very bad week. The bad news got magnified and the good news got buried.... For Mr Flaherty, the problem was he received $80,000 in donations from a racetrack operator looking to win government approval for lucrative slot machines."

Mr Flaherty keeps trying to portray that I have something against the people of Durham. I have nothing against the people of Durham. I wish them well. If they want to get slot machines, do it, but don't do it through the back door. They had a referendum for a charity casino, and it was turned down. They then thought, "Do you know what? We can actually put slot machines in through the racetrack route. Let's do that. We don't have to do anything." In theory, they didn't even have to have a referendum. But they did have one, and it passed by 54%, a majority without question, but it's only a yes or no sort of thing so it's not resounding, unanimous consent. So we have a situation where what they couldn't get through the front door they're trying to get through the back door.

The question it also begs is why a decision that was finally reviewed and approved by cabinet last December, almost 11 months ago, has yet to be implemented. Why didn't you give them the slot machines? There is obviously a problem.

If any of you watched Fourth Reading with Susanna Kelley when she had leaked cabinet documents and she talked about the Premier, and she said that at a cabinet meeting the Premier said to Flaherty, Janet Ecker and Tim Hudak—this is her report, her words, not mine—he had Janet Ecker in tears and he said, "I am not an effing crook." When Steve Paikin said to her, "Did he actually say effing?" she said, "No, he said the whole word." So what we have is a situation where the Premier is obviously disturbed by this thing. There's obviously a problem with this, because why hasn't it been implemented when it's been kicking around for over a year? Why was all of this done without any regard to what is the intent of this program?

Again, I haven't been trying to attack Mr Flaherty personally. That's not my style, and you know that. I am trying to deal with a situation that has to be addressed. One of the interesting things about it, in an interview with Robert Benzie in the National Post, Mr Flaherty said he finds it unsavoury that I would be even asking these questions. Talk about unsavoury—the aroma that is emanating from this particular proposal is really unsavoury and it requires answers. I wish the people of Durham well. I wish they would have—go out and give them 800 slot machines. Don't pervert the system, don't distort what is happening, because if they were to get 800 slot machines, then the people in all of the other tracks that only have 100 would say, "This is ridiculous. Why would you possibly give them 800 when I do 200 times more volume and I only have 100? Why is this happening? Why would this possibly happen? Why would a"—

Interjection.

Mr Kwinter: What is happening is that you're trying to get it to the point where the tail is wagging the horse.

You're trying to say, give us the 800 slot machines—and Mr Picov's son is on the record as saying, "If we can't get 800 slot machines, it's not viable." The whole situation—it is not meant to work that way. It is not meant that the slot machines go in to a track that does $280,000 a year in wagering and turn it into a colossal gambling centre. It's not meant to do that. It's meant to take a racetrack that is viable now but enhance its viability, and do it in such a way that it does that.

It would seem to me that we have enough questions being asked that have no answers. There are no answers. The only answer we get is Mr Flaherty attacking me personally, saying, why would I do this? I should be ashamed of myself. I am not ashamed. I am not ashamed to raise this question, because I think the people of Ontario deserve an answer. They deserve an answer as to why this could happen. Why does someone think that they can buy influence? Christina Blizzard, in an article the other day when she went through this—and she again is not exactly a strong Liberal—referred to it as an "astounding" contribution.

We're all politicians, every one of us. I can tell you that if somebody came up to me and said, "I would like to give a $80,000 non-receiptable contribution," immediately my antenna would go up and I'd say, "Wow, hold off a minute. This doesn't smell right." I'm telling you, that's a lot of money.

Again, I challenge the member who claims that he—and I'm not disputing his claim. He's an honourable man. I have no reason to contradict his claim. But I would say this to him: he could have quietened this whole issue down very, very quickly by saying, "Mr Kwinter, here is a letter from the Integrity Commissioner telling me that what I did was perfectly in accordance with the rules."

Interjection.

Mr Kwinter: He claims that he went to the Integrity Commissioner and got approval. I have no reason to doubt that. All I'm saying is, show me the letter that says it happened.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I want to give the bulk of the time to our deputy leader, but I just want to jump in this debate for a couple of reasons.

I think there's a lesson to be learned here. In the last provincial leadership race, the Tories raised a total of $8 million. There was $8 million solicited from all kinds of contributors around the province of Ontario, from individuals and businesses, in order to run their leadership campaign—$8 million. I will argue that's more than any one of our parties will spend in the next provincial election to elect a government. So I would argue that there's a problem internally within the process of how you elect a leader. To me, it's unbelievable that you're allowed to raise $8 million for a leadership campaign. Our total budget in the NDP for the next provincial election is going to be about $2.5 million or $3.5 million, tops.

Interjection.

Mr Bisson: It tells me there's a problem.

So when the member from the Liberal Party raises the issue and says, "Well, it raises a couple of questions when an individual gives an $80,000 non-receiptable donation and doesn't expect anything back"—I don't think people give that kind of money. I'm not arguing that Mr Flaherty knowingly did anything wrong. He's an honourable member. I quite like the man. What I'm saying is that the public perception out there, and that's really what it comes down to, is that something stinks in Denmark. I can't blame people in the media or the member for raising this issue. I don't think that you can blame the public for saying, "Well, is it conceivable that a person who gives an $80,000 contribution is not going to want something in return?" I think that's a pretty interesting—

Mr Mazzilli: What do the unions want from you guys?

Mr Bisson: He says, "What about the unions?" I don't know too many of them that gave us $80,000. But the point I make is that there's a problem in the process.

I just say to the members who are here and the media who may be watching that in the entire federal leadership process, because of the rules that we put in place, no NDP candidate in a federal leadership race is allowed to raise more than $700,000. There's a reason we do that as a party. One is that we don't have the ability to fundraise like you guys have. People think that if they give a lot of money to a leadership race, somehow they're going to get something back from the government. But we want to make sure that the perception within the New Democratic Party is that nobody's buying large favours, so there's a limit to how much money a candidate can raise. It's a $700,000 limit for any one candidate.

I think what we need to take a look at are two issues: that there should be rules around how much money you can raise for a leadership; and certainly I would argue that we need to do something around campaign finance reform when it comes to overall general elections as well, because I think it does leave the public with a bad taste in their mouth.

I would just say this is an interesting thing because in this particular case it was a person who owns a racetrack who was giving the donation. I'm a bit of a horse racer myself, I have to admit. My wife and I go out on Friday and Saturday nights to the off-track betting place, and we like to bet on a number of tracks around the province of Ontario. Unfortunately, we can't bet trotters up north because of the monopoly the guy in Sudbury has, but that's another story. We like to put bets at Woodbine and Fort Erie and when the thoroughbreds are racing. As a matter of fact, the Breeders' Cup was on just last weekend. I lost my shirt as usual. I didn't win one bet. The only two that came in were the two low exactors I had bet, but that's another story.

I have to say that I've been around betting for a while, and I just think it's interesting—here's a guy who owns a racetrack. Let me see if I have this straight. He bets $80,000 for Flaherty to win, and his odds of winning that leadership race were probably around 20:1, right? Then he says, "I'm going to cover my win bet by making a place bet on Mr Eves," by putting up $10,000 on what was probably a 2:1 odds favourite. You're losing money on the place bet. What was the matter with the guy? You have to really wonder—10,000 bucks on a place bet. I just want to say to the man who owns Picov Downs, if that's how you bet horses, man, I don't want to bet with you because you'd lose a lot of money. You should have done it the other way around. You should have put $10,000 on Flaherty to place and put $80,000 to win on Mr Eves. I can tell you, that ticket would have paid a lot of money.

Mr Garry J. Guzzo (Ottawa West-Nepean): I want to start out first of all by commending the member for bringing forward this particular issue. I may not like the manner in which it was brought forward, but I cast no reasons and no aspersions with regard to that. I very much thank him, though, for allowing this issue on the floor this morning and I welcome the opportunity to speak to it.

I want to speak to it from the position of a backbench member from Ottawa who was an owner and a breeder of harness horses for 20 years, a lover of thoroughbreds—and Valponi, I might just tell the member opposite, was an Italian horse. He was a natural pick. I don't understand—$89 at the track—more here.

Mr Bisson: But you don't make a place bet. You know that; you put it on show only.

Mr Guzzo: As a lawyer, I didn't make place bets. You have to win—there are only winners and losers. As a practising lawyer I have in the past acted for racetracks, for horsemen. I acted for unions: the Horseman's Association—think about that, my NDP friend. That's hard to accept, I'm sure.

I think if the Leader of the Opposition were here this morning in the House, I'd have to admit that—because he practised in Ottawa the same time that I did—I have an association, because for some reason I defended a number of bookmakers over the years. I make that abundantly clear.

It is from that perspective that I draw my knowledge and my background on the horse racing industry. When I say that I welcome this opportunity, it is because what we as a government have done since 1995 is one of the positive, strong points of what we have been able to accomplish. I, for one, am extremely proud of it.

I have to acknowledge in my professional life, being aware of the racetrack assistance program, which the honourable member from York Centre was instrumental in setting up—indeed, it helped some ailing tracks, but I disagree with him when he gave us the reason for the difficulties of the tracks back in 1986 and again in 1995.

The fact of the matter is, sir, that the racetracks are in trouble because they were the worst-run businesses in Ontario. They were the worst-run businesses in Ontario. Notwithstanding what we have done, and the success of certain tracks, some more than others, they are still not service-oriented and they are not treating the public and the customer the way the customer deserves to be treated. It's for that reason that they are running into difficulties.

We did what we had to do for one reason—you heard it from your member, Mr Phillips: the issue was jobs, jobs, jobs in 1995, and we went the route that we went for the purpose of saving the jobs.

Mr Agostino: For your friends.

Mr Guzzo: Maybe for the friends, but let me explain something to you. It wasn't to save the jobs at the tracks—

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Order. The member for Ottawa West-Nepean has the floor. He doesn't need all this assistance.

Mr Guzzo: It wasn't for the purpose of saving the jobs at the tracks—they were important, and they are very important jobs. When I look at the racetrack in Ottawa, some of the finest young doctors and lawyers in our city worked at that track in the dining room and punching tickets in order to put themselves through medical school and law school, and I'm sure the same is true in a lot of the communities—and we should be proud of it. The purpose of what we were doing was directed to the rural area and the jobs in the rural areas—jobs on breeding farms, jobs at training tracks and, indeed, jobs on the back stretch at the different racetracks—people who may have had difficulty in securing employment and staying off welfare if this industry had been allowed to fail.

When you look at the tracks, they had a track record. The track in Ottawa was 35 years old and had been successful—some years more successful than others, I suspect—and it was getting more difficult because of external pressures to keep going. It was the logical thing to do, as opposed to setting up charity casinos around the province, to help maintain the jobs in the agricultural sector and at the tracks by placing the machines there.

I wish the member from Thorold—formerly Thorold, now Niagara Centre—were here because he was on the committee when we started and stopped with certain types of machines and changed back the one program and then moved to the racetracks. My argument always was that the illegal betting that was going on and is still going on—I bring the paper from this morning and I look at the NFL line with the point spread. All summer long you have baseball, all winter long you have hockey, in the fall you've got the CFL and the NFL, all printed for the benefit of the illegal bookmaking establishment.

The betting that goes on is excessive as we sit here. Everyone knows it. Everybody appreciates it. We have done a little to put a dent in it. We eliminated a number of grey machines. When we were on that committee and traveling in the north, we visited five or six cities. In four of the cities where we stayed to have hearings, they had grey machines in the bar, where Mr Kormos and I would go for a couple of Cokes on occasion. The bars had these grey machines in every city we went to, even up in the north.

I used to suggest to you that you could go within 10 blocks of this building and find 100 grey machines. In Ottawa you could find 500 within 10 blocks of Parliament Hill. They're gone. Those machines were not regulated. Those machines were not operating at a 90% return to the people who were playing them the way the ones at Rideau Carleton Raceway are today or the ones at other racetracks are being regulated and maintained today. The public has been well served. This government is proud of what we have been able to do.

You make one good point: the operation of the Ontario Racing Commission is paramount and should be the first stop on this trek, not the lottery corporation. I have to tell you that I don't have the faith in the Ontario Racing Commission that I have in the lottery corporation. I am satisfied the Ontario Lottery Corp will protect this process—I know it will—or this government will be in some difficulty. The racing commission is the first step.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate. The member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale—or Toronto-Danforth, I'm sorry.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): You don't want to mix up Mr Smitherman and me, let me tell you.

This is a very serious matter before us this morning. I agree that it's tempting to get up and tell our own individual racing stories. When I was the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, I would go to the Queen's Plate and Mr Kwinter would always be there. I assume he's still going. I have to say that, coming from Labrador where there weren't even any horses, it was quite an interesting journey for me when I became the minister and was suddenly responsible for gambling in this province, including horse racing. I had the pleasure of working directly with people like Tom Joy and Peter Hardy, both of whom are deceased now. They were just incredible, wonderful human beings who really cared about the industry and worked hard to keep the industry viable and to make sure the people they employed continued to have jobs.

I went through a period of working with the horse racing industry, because they were losing ground. That's how slot machines started to come into the tracks, to all the other forms of entertainment out there. We put together a committee, which Peter Hardy chaired, and we were able to come up with some strategies to help the industry.

I know Mr Kwinter before me had come up with some solutions as well, which we carried on. Some interesting things were done at that time. I also had the dubious pleasure of bringing in the first commercial casino in Ontario, in Windsor. Let me tell you that there was quite a struggle then across the province because of the recession and cross-border issues. A lot of communities wanted casinos. I had the responsibility of bringing in the first one, in Windsor. Most of the people there wanted it. Now there is one in Niagara Falls, even though these guys who were sitting over here at the time were horrified that it would even be considered.

However, I learned some lessons, and this is where I want to get very serious about the resolution before us today from Mr Kwinter, which I support.

In the gambling industry, the potential for even perceived wrongdoing is very high. When I was put in the position of having to be responsible for bringing a casino to Ontario, my God, did I work hard to make sure I set up a system that was at arm's length from me as minister.

I know the opposition at the time tried a couple of times to question me about our process and couldn't find anything on me, because I made darned sure there wasn't, that there was absolutely no connection between me except for setting up a system that was fair and above-board and transparent for the selection of the private sector company that was going to come in and run that casino.

I set up a team of bureaucrats, run by my deputy minister at the time, to do all those negotiations. We came up with a very rigid list of standards and rules that applied to everybody who had applied to run that casino. I remember somebody once telling me that one of the people who was bidding to run that casino just wanted to shake my hand. They didn't want to give me any money because there was no way I was going to take any money in any way from these guys. He was going to be at an event in the Lieutenant Governor's suite, and if I were there, he'd just like to say hello. I ended up not even going to that event. I wanted not only to not be implicated in any way with being influenced by any of those bidders, but I also didn't even want any perceptions, so that I could honestly say I had nothing to do with that, never met them, never dealt with them, that it was all transparent and was all at arm's length.

I find this issue before us today very serious in that whether or not there's influence-peddling here, there's a perception that needs to be dealt with. Dare I bring up poor former Premier Glen Clark. I'm sure there are a lot of people who would prefer I didn't, but I'm going to bring him up because look at what happened to him. He's been acquitted of all wrongdoing, but it's been stated by the judge that there was some bad judgment involved. For heaven's sake, look what he was dragged through for having a neighbour who had applied for a casino, who spent a few thousand dollars on some free labour on fixing up a deck.

Here in Ontario we have a government that just held a leadership race where we have this particular Picov Downs giving Mr Flaherty $60,000.

Mr Kwinter: It's $80,000.

Ms Churley: It's $80,000. I've got $60,000, and how much to Mr Eves?

Mr Smitherman: It's $10,000.

Ms Churley: It's $10,000. I've got my numbers wrong here. It's $80,000 to one of the leadership candidates and $10,000 to another.

Whether there was any wrongdoing here or not, a public inquiry could tell us that. There sure is a perception of some influence-peddling happening here. I would think the government would want to be part of trying to get to the bottom of what happened if they're proclaiming their innocence in this.

Here's what happened. Here's the issue. On April 12, the last working day before Ontario Conservative control was to pass from Mike Harris to somebody else, Ontario's then Minister of Education quietly announced that up to 800 slot machines would be installed at Picov Downs, which falls within her riding. Then the donations happened, and reportedly the Picov Downs proposal was pushed through cabinet in one of the body's last meetings before Ernie Eves was to take over. It makes me think of the $10-million gift to the sports teams just at the last minute. There's something about this that doesn't smell right.

I think, though, that this is a bigger issue—much bigger, as my colleague Mr Bisson outlined. I would like to extend this to an overall inquiry as to the whole way we allow donations to be given, particularly in leadership campaigns, as a result of the $8 million that was given throughout the previous Tory leadership campaign, because it's a lot of money; it's a whole lot of money to have to raise. It shuts a lot people out, number one, because they can't raise that kind of money. I just want to give you some other examples that my leader, Mr Hampton, raised in the House as well that never really went anywhere.

Brascan and its subsidiaries gave $150,000 to Mr Eves. If you look at that figure, they stand to make a lot more than Picov does. There are Brascan shell companies on the Eves list, including Noranda, $25,000, and Trilon, $25,000. If you look at the list of some of those donations—and I particularly bring up the ones related to energy because of the privatization agenda of the government—there is a connection here. Again I say that whether or not there is influence-peddling, the perception is that there is. I think that when any companies are giving donations of this size and there is something going on within their industry, something very large like, in this case, the privatization of Hydro—that amount of money was being given to leadership hopefuls during a time when the whole deregulation and privatization of Hydro was in some disarray, with many, many concerns about Hydro One, which Ernie Eves eventually, through a lot of pressure, mostly backed down on, but the privatization of generation is still going ahead. I have real concerns about that kind of perceived or real influence-peddling that may have gone on. I would like to extend this to a whole review, an investigation of the transparency and the limits that should be put on how much money can be given to somebody who is not just running for the leadership of a party but indeed will become the next Premier and will have a lot of power.

We've got some of the same things going on in Ottawa right now with the Liberals. We've got Paul Martin, who is running to be leader there. He is not disclosing his donors; he doesn't have to now, because he's out of cabinet. We know he's making pots and pots of money. He has not spoken out on Kyoto yet. Jack Layton, who is running for the federal NDP leadership, has released all his donors to date, mostly individuals. But Paul Martin has not spoken out about Kyoto yet. You've got to wonder why.

So I think we need a thorough investigation into these leadership—

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. The member for York Centre has two minutes to reply.

Mr Kwinter: I want to thank all the participants: the members for Whitby-Ajax, Ottawa West-Nepean, Timmins-James Bay and Toronto-Danforth.

I particularly want to thank the member for Ottawa West-Nepean and the member for Toronto-Danforth, because they bring some experience to this debate. One was the minister who actually succeeded me as minister, and the other is someone who, by his own account, has had some great interest in and exposure to this industry.

I just want to make it clear in my final minute and 23 seconds that I am totally supportive of slot machines at racetracks. I am totally supportive of the people of Durham getting as many slot machines as they can get. That is not the issue. I am not in any way opposed to that.

What I am opposed to is the perception that there was a payment made. A decision that was before cabinet was accepted by a minister who sat at that table, and a decision was made for an inordinate number of slot machines. The industry has said it is absurd that someone who does $280,000 in betting a year is given up to 800 slot machines where other racetracks that are doing $65 million and $80 million are getting 100. How could that happen? What is the justification for it, unless there was something untoward? Why did the person responsible, the chairman of the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp, decline to send the letter and say that the case had not been made? Why did the minister, for the first time ever, send that letter when he's never done it before? Those are the questions that have to be addressed.

Why, as reported on TVO, was the Premier so upset? There's obviously a problem here, and the fact that this decision has not been carried out over—

The Acting Speaker: Thank you. This completes the time for debating this ballot item.

CONSUMER REPORTING AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LES RENSEIGNEMENTS CONCERNANT LE CONSOMMATEUR

Mr Cordiano moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 158, An Act to amend the Consumer Reporting Act / Projet de loi 158, Loi modifiant la Loi sur les renseignements concernant le consommateur.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): The member for York South-Weston has up to 10 minutes for his presentation.

Mr Joseph Cordiano (York South-Weston): I don't believe there has been a more important time to make the amendments I'm calling for in the Consumer Reporting Act. We have largely become a credit-dependent society. Our economy is being driven by consumers who are, to a large extent, dependent on credit on a daily basis. More and more, people turn to credit cards. They're using credit on an ongoing, revolving basis. I don't think there's a person in this Legislature who doesn't have a credit card or some form of credit card. So I believe that each and every one of us has a stake in the amendments I'm calling for to this piece of legislation.

What happens when a consumer applies for credit? A credit-granting agency, such as a bank or a credit card company, turns to a credit-reporting agency for what's called a credit report. The credit report is a detailed history of that person's credit, and it will determine creditworthiness.

Credit-reporting agencies gather information from credit granters—the banks, credit card companies etc. They accumulate this information on each and every consumer who applies for credit. They organize the individual information and maintain it. Based on someone's credit history, the credit-reporting agency will determine what's called a credit score, and that credit score is all-important, because it determines creditworthiness.

If the information about that individual, the credit history, is inaccurate in some way, it could have devastating results, an adverse effect in terms of getting that first loan, getting a loan for a car or getting a student loan or a mortgage. In fact, it can have an impact on tenants who apply for a place to live, rental accommodation from a landlord. Many, many tenants have been affected by this.

I would go one step further. Even prospective employers are demanding credit history information. I have the case of a gentleman who was affected by this, which I'll get into later. But that can have an impact on someone's ability to get a job.

As you can see, this is tremendously important to individuals, consumers right across this province. And errors do occur. The anecdotal evidence is overwhelming, and I can give you some further evidence.

In 1991, the CBC's Marketplace show asked 100 people to request their personal credit reports. They found 47 had errors. Thirteen of those had significant enough errors to prevent them from getting any kind of credit. More recently, in 1997, US Public Interest Research Group conducted a similar study and found that 29% of credit reports they received contained significant errors that could also result in the denial of credit. These are significant cases of situations where consumers are denied credit. What does the current legislation say on what recourse the consumer has when an error occurs in his or her credit history? The current legislation, the Consumer Reporting Act, places the onus entirely on the individual to correct his or her credit history if an error is found. The consumer has to provide the credit reporting agency with written documentation. So a consumer has to look back for cheque stubs or any kind of document to prove that, for example, a loan was paid off. Dealing with credit granters can be very difficult and trying if you've lost that cheque stub or there is no documentation. Sometimes this can go back years.

Again, under the existing legislation, written notice has to be provided by the consumer to the credit reporting agency. Under the Consumer Reporting Act, the only requirement placed on the reporting agencies, however, is that the agencies must use their best efforts to correct mistakes within "a reasonable time." So there is no additional onus on the credit reporting agencies. In fact, there are stories of these reporting agencies not following up on requests made by consumers. They use their best efforts to try and correct this information, but it's not being done.

To support what I'm saying, I want to look at the year 2001. The registrar is the regulator of the credit reporting agencies, and each reporting agency has to be registered with the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services. There are 58 credit reporting agencies currently registered. This is very interesting. In 2001, 2,174 complaints were made regarding credit reporting agencies and erroneous information. Under the act, the registrar can conduct audits and investigations. However, in the past three years the registrar has conducted only one audit of any company, which is amazing after 2,174 complaints in 2001.

As we can see, the existing act does not really deal with consumer complaints in a reasonably timely fashion because the entire onus is placed on the individual. Working with credit granters is not an easy thing for an individual to do, to extract information, to have that information documented. The onus is too great. In a moment, I will get to other jurisdictions that have brought their legislation up to date, placing the onus back on the credit reporting agencies.

My bill calls for three things, really. It increases the accountability of credit reporting agencies to disclose information promptly and to correct any erroneous information. They have to do so within a 30-day period, and they have to notify consumers in writing that there is something wrong with the information.

Secondly, it provides consumers with better access to information that could be used against them in their credit history. It also details how a credit score is arrived at. So there has got to be information provided. I am also calling for a toll-free number to be instituted by these credit reporting agencies and to have trained personnel on staff to explain how they arrive at a credit score. This is all being done in the US. Some of the same companies that operate in the US also operate in Canada.

Also, the main point of this legislation is to ensure that consumers are not penalized every time they apply for credit. When a credit check is conducted on a consumer, the very fact that they are applying for credit works against them under the current legislation. It acts as a penalizer if you simply ask for credit. Shopping around for credit these days—and everyone shops around for the best price—should not result in the consumer being penalized or having a downgrade in their credit-worthiness. That should not be the case. The amendment to the act I'm calling for does away with that, prohibits that from actually going on a credit score.

As you can see, there are three things that are called for in the amendment I'm bringing forward that would go a long way to dealing with consumer complaints. It would bring our legislation in Ontario up to date with other jurisdictions, the US being one. The UK is also moving in that direction.

I say to members, this is important and worthy legislation that we can all support, and I'll speak to some other examples later in my time.

Mr Joseph N. Tascona (Barrie-Simcoe-Bradford): I'm pleased to join in the debate with respect to this Bill 158. Protecting personal information is a priority for the Ernie Eves government and we are more than willing to give full consideration to any proposal to increase the control individuals have over their personal information, including their credit information.

While we support some of the policy intentions in Bill 158, there is some concern that a balance has not been achieved between the ability of the consumer reporting agency and credit providers to continue functioning and the potential benefits provided to consumers.

One key concern is that this bill has been drafted without any input and consultation with the key groups that will be directly affected by it, such as businesses, the credit industry and other users of consumer reports—a full discussion. These organizations have significant concerns regarding some of these proposals and could provide advice on ways to address the needs identified by the member while at the same time not causing a great deal of harm to their businesses. As well, we would like to hear how consumers and consumer organizations view this bill.

The Ministry of Consumer and Business Services would be pleased to work with the member and stakeholders to consult on the bill and improve upon it in a way that maintains important consumer protection features but in a manner that is more balanced with the needs of business and consumers. We believe the bill would benefit from consultations with the organizations it will impact directly, as well as representative consumer groups.

The bill could be improved in a number of ways. For example, the obligations of organizations to disclose information to consumers could be more focused on instances where consumers indicate a need or a desire to see this information.

Let's be correct in what we're dealing with here. With consumer reporting, what we're talking about is a consumer report. That means a written, oral or other communication by a consumer reporting agency of credit information or personal information, or both, returning to a consumer for consideration in connection with the purpose set out in clause 8(1)(d).

The purpose of getting that information under the act is that a consumer report is given to a person it has reason to believe intends to use the information with respect to the extension of credit to or for the purchase or the collection of a debt. It also deals with entering into or the renewal of a tenancy agreement, information for employment purposes, the underwriting of insurance involving a consumer, dealing with eligibility under a statute for a consumer, and direct business information.

There's some merit in this bill in terms of what he wants to amend. I think it's sound business practice, and I'd be surprised if any consumer agency didn't do this. He wants a consumer reporting agency not to provide a consumer report to any person without first obtaining—they need to get the person's name, address and telephone number and confirmation that the information is sought for a purpose permitted under this section and will be used for no other purpose.

The key thing here is that obviously you need to have the name, address and telephone number of the person requesting information from the consumer reporting agency. The more fundamental purpose, and I think this has to be toughened up somewhat, is confirmation saying, "We want it for this purpose under clause 8(1)(d)." They need to know exactly what the purpose is, so it's caught under that section. It needs to be a little bit tougher with respect to making sure that consumer report is caught under that section. I don't think the member would disagree with that, and I'd be surprised if he did.

One area I'm a little concerned with is that the member wants to repeal subsection 12(2) of the act. I don't know why he wants to do this. Maybe he can respond why he wants to repeal this subsection, which reads, "A consumer reporting agency shall withhold from the disclosures required by subsection (1) any medical information obtained with the written consent of the consumer which the consumer's own physician has specifically requested in writing be withheld from the consumer in his or her own best interest." I'd like to know why the member wants that section repealed. It's a fundamental section with respect to the relationship between a patient and their physician.

There are other areas with respect to the area he's talking about, correcting errors. That's a good area, because I think what he's trying to do here is put a timeline on the consumer agency, where there is an error in the consumer report, to make any corrections. He's got a 30-day timeline to investigate the dispute, notify the consumer and correct that information. I think what he's proposing under subsection 13(1) has some merit.

In conclusion, I want to say that certainly the Consumer Reporting Act needs to be reviewed in certain areas, and I think the member is trying to do that. But we have to have a proper balance in that exercise with respect to the reporting agencies, the consumer and those affected by that information, ie, landlords, credit information areas, insurance companies etc.

Mr Cordiano: I listened to the member, and I'm not quite sure about part of what he said with respect to particular sections of the act. But let me say I'm willing to examine this and talk about where this might go in the future. Obviously, committee would be one good place to deal with those questions.

Let me just continue with what I was saying in regard to why we need this legislation. The US federal government passed the Fair Credit Reporting Act in July 1999, which deals precisely with what I've been calling for in the amendments to this act. We're behind other jurisdictions when it comes to ensuring that consumers are protected and that information is properly maintained by credit-reporting agencies. In fact, in January 2000, three of the biggest credit-reporting agencies were fined by the US government for failing to maintain a toll-free number, which is a requirement of the US federal legislation.

Recently in California, the Senate passed legislation requiring the disclosure of credit scores. In the United Kingdom, the Office of Fair Trading recommended that creditors be required to tell customers or consumers that credit scoring is part of the decision-making process. As we can see, other jurisdictions are moving in regard to this and are making changes to update legislation, because they recognize this is crucial to the functioning of the economy. It's important for consumers, and it's also important for our economy to move forward, since we depend on credit.

The member who spoke previously said there wasn't consultation with stakeholder groups. I have letters of support from the stakeholder groups that I want to quote from, some of whom have suggested that all members support this legislation, as it is significant and moves in the direction they want to go. As soon as I find what I'm looking for on my desk, I'll quote those.

Let me say further that the amendments we're asking for are not that onerous with regard to what's required of the credit-reporting agencies. It will certainly cause them some additional costs; there's no doubt about that. Maintaining a toll-free number will cost some additional dollars. Updating their files will cost some additional dollars. But these credit-reporting agencies are also making huge sums of money by passing along information about their consumers in other forms. You can actually apply to have your own credit report done on the Internet, with a cost attached to it. There are all sorts of fees being charged to consumers for information.

The Public Interest Advocacy Centre, in their letter to me regarding the amendments to the act, says, "The importance of consumer protections with respect to credit reporting cannot be underestimated. We have become an extremely credit-dependent society.... It can determine our ability to get bank accounts, debit cards, mortgages, credit cards, and even employment and rental accommodation. Many Ontario consumers are suffering as a result of abuses that this bill would address. It is for these reasons that we support these important amendments found in Bill 158.

"We strongly urge all members of the Legislature to support Bill 158 to ensure that an improved Consumer Reporting Act is adopted."

I also have a letter of support from the Consumers' Association of Canada. They say, "We believe that the Consumer Reporting Amendment Act works to address some of the concerns we have regarding the current credit reporting industry, and would urge all members of the Legislature to support Bill 158, in order to improve the existing Consumer Reporting Act."

So we have support from these consumer groups, and it's very significant.

I also have a number of examples of what's wrong with the current situation. This gentleman has a bad mark on his credit report because of the responsibilities he had under the Family Responsibility Office. In July 1997 there was an outstanding balance of $52,000, which was paid by this individual. There was also an order from the Superior Court of Justice, dated June 2001, which stated that no monies are owed by this gentleman.

A company called Equifax has been consulted many times. The latest correspondence from Equifax to this gentleman's lawyer, who has intervened on his behalf, stated that they need an instruction from the group that lodged the collection notice. Anyway, it goes on. The court, as I say, supports the gentleman. His ex-wife also supports the fact that this debt was paid off. However, this bad mark stays on his credit report. It is there, and it resulted in his being prevented from getting employment successfully as well as from accessing rental accommodation. As you can see, this has a detrimental impact on individuals.

I am suggesting today that members support this legislation. It would go a long way to ensuring that consumers are protected and that what's in their files is current data. It puts the onus back on reporting agencies to update their files. It also calls on these agencies to better explain how credit scores are arrived at, maintaining a toll-free number with personnel available to explain that. As I say, it would cause these firms to be more accountable for their practices. It would also eliminate the possibility for credit-reporting agencies to use the mere fact that someone is applying for credit and a credit report is being conducted on that individual as a bad mark against them.

I think these are essential amendments, which are required in today's fast-driven economy that is so dependent on credit. All of us who depend on credit—we all use our credit cards extensively; we use them for a number of purposes, for ID. I think we're just bringing Ontario up to modern standards. I would urge all members to support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: Further debate?

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I'm pleased to make some comments on behalf of my caucus this morning, because I believe we all share the same point of view on this particular private member's bill before us today.

I'd like to congratulate Mr Cordiano for bringing it forward. I'm going to tell him at the outset that I have some criticisms of it, and I'll outline those—I don't think it goes far enough given today's climate—but I also understand why he limited it to what is in the bill today.

He's trying to be reasonable, knowing what might possibly get passed here. Some of the stuff I am going to suggest should be in the bill, I'm sure he thought of, but given that the Americans have already done something similar in another jurisdiction, I understand that he was cautious in his approach today and tried to find the balance Mr Tascona referred to in expressing concerns about the bill because there wasn't enough balance in it.

I would say everybody knows by now that as we use more and more credit cards, and this has become a credit card society, many consumers have very real problems. There isn't a balance now, which is what Mr Cordiano is trying to correct. They have real problems with credit reporting agencies. The whole system gives pretty much all the power to businesses and creditors, and leaves the consumer with very little power at all. He is trying to correct that.

The reason I am glad the bill is before us, as well, is that it gives me an opportunity to talk about consumer protection and the lack thereof in other areas under this government. I know you're not trying to address those today, but we're talking about consumer protection. The government recently brought forward its own legislation and didn't do these, in my view, very simple amendments that would go some way to giving relief to consumers. By now we have pointed out so many holes in the government's new consumer legislation that it's hardly surprising Mr Cordiano found yet another hole to plug, which is what he is attempting to do today.

The bill attempts to address the serious problem of credit reporting agency practices, but in some way, because I know he's trying to be cautious in his approach, it takes a rather complicated route. The problem is that businesses check your credit rating many times without cause. We're finding that more and more. You're not a customer and you're not applying for anything, but they're still out checking your credit rating.

I don't think they should have the power to do that. Instead of just saying that a consumer report can't include the number of inquiries, why not just say that businesses can't check without reason? Again, I know you would have preferred to have that in there, I would think, but you knew that wouldn't go anywhere. I think that's where we should be heading, that they can't check without reason, pure and simple, or better yet, don't include the number of times your credit rating has been checked on your history at all.

The bill goes in the right direction and I would urge full support for it today. There should be committee hearings so we can have amendments. As you know, with private member's bills, I think we all accept that we don't have the infrastructure behind us that the government does to write the bills. Good ideas come out and then we need to take it to a real committee, not committee of the whole House where it dies, which the government tends to do now. It sounds as though they'll vote for something, so it'll look good on paper, but then they refuse to send it to a real standing committee and they send it to committee of the whole House, which the public mostly doesn't understand, for heaven's sakes, with good reason, and there it dies. It never sees the light of day again.

The component of the bill dealing with disclosing what's going on, with actions against consumers and requests for reports to the consumer, is a really important positive step, but as I said, we really need to fix the whole system. I want to say, Mr Cordiano, I know that's not what you're trying to do today, but I think it's important to point out that as to the system, we need to examine the whole thing and fix it to create more of a balance so that the consumer gets a fair shake.

I want to talk more about consumer protection and the fact that the government brought in a new bill, and as I said, there are so many holes in it. I want to come back to the scamming hydro marketers, and again, you're not trying to deal with that today but we have to use it as another example of some of the big, big problems in our consumer legislation that the government didn't fix in its bill.

The legislation the government brought forward will not protect hydro consumers from the scams, the forgery and the high-pressure sales tactics that we hear are still going on out there, which the Conservative government let loose on consumers in this province. We're all hearing more and more about these.

For well over a year, the government allowed pushy energy marketers to invade your doorstep and sell you so-called electricity deals. What they didn't tell you was that the prices they quoted didn't nearly include all the costs. Many people, not knowing what to do, who didn't read the fine print as many people don't in these long contracts—yes, we all should. When the minister was asked about that yesterday, he said, "Well, they should have read the fine print." That's his answer to people who are going to have to turn out their lights or not eat, to make those choices. What they didn't tell you was that they didn't include all the costs. Many signed deals with these marketers that will cost them big money. They're finding that out now. The average consumer who signed with a marketer will likely lose at least $150 in the first year alone that they didn't have to lose.

Many consumers who signed these so-called deals will also have to pay any rebate they receive from the government to the private marketers. That was what Mr Baird, the energy minister, referred to yesterday, that it's too bad they didn't read the fine print. They are not going to get to keep the rebate they are going to get back from the government, the election ploy of giving people a few dollars to try to deal with this incredible scandal the government has brought upon itself.

In the fine print of these deals, not pointed out by these scam artists at the door, they were going to be able to keep any rebate. It's just absolutely shocking. Talk about lack of consumer protection. Even an economist who actually worked on setting up the deregulation system admitted he couldn't understand the sales pitch that was being made to him at the door, yet over 25% of Ontarians have signed these deals. If one of the economists who helped set up the deal couldn't understand what he was being told, we know there's a real consumer issue here.

Howard Hampton, the NDP leader, has been very clear in this House that consumers should be allowed to rip up these deals, and we have put forward to the government a private member's bill, I believe it was, or a suggestion—I think it was a private member's bill—but the government says no, it's going to make them stick. Here it is. It's Mr Hampton's private member's bill, Bill 73. It would allow consumers to get out of these deals. I would ask the government, when we're talking about consumer protection today, to revisit that, given that we now know they cannot even get their rebates, and allow them to rip up these deals. The bill is currently before the Legislature but it hasn't been allowed to go forward. Bill 73 would also put a stop to door-to-door marketing and would allow consumers to rip up contracts they didn't want to get into in the first place, because there was such confusion out there to consumers about what was going to be happening with hydro bills.

We don't have a lot of opportunity to talk about consumer protection and this bill gives us an opportunity to talk in general about what's happening to consumers here under this government. The bill the government brought forward, the consumer protection bill, and the bill the Minister of Finance unveiled yesterday—she didn't make a statement in the House but I believe a member asked a question so she could highlight it—would not, either of the bills, protect the consumers of financial services who entrusted and subsequently lost their savings, often their retirement savings.

I have an elderly gentleman in my riding who lost his retirement savings completely. He is spending a lot of time being frustrated with me, and I understand that. I have tried through various means—I talked to the former Minister of Finance and the parliamentary assistant at the time and set up a meeting and letters went back and forth—to put his case forward, but under the existing laws and now the new law that was brought in, there's nothing that can be done for this gentleman. It's one of the saddest things to see. He has lost all his life savings and there is no legislation before us, including the legislation the minister brought in yesterday, that will get him back his money or prevent this happening to others out there in the future. The government's so-called investor protection legislation just doesn't deal in a comprehensive way with the issues that are facing us today.

Again I want to point out, so people understand and know, that there are alternatives. We can improve this legislation. The leader of the NDP, Howard Hampton, has a "No Enrons in Ontario" document, which outlines the kinds of protections consumers should get from the corporate scamming that is endangering Ontario investors. This package includes things like toughening up—really toughening up—the rules and regulations governing public auditors to ensure that investors are really protected and that arm's-length audits tell the truth about how a company is doing; giving the Ontario Securities Commission more power to clamp down on securities fraud; increasing corporate board members' legal liability for misleading statements; forcing mutual fund holding companies to have independent boards for each fund. It creates a real public oversight board for accounting, which would be responsible for licensing, investigations and disciplinary activity of the public accounting profession and would create a new standard-setting body that would not be associated with existing organizations representing the accounting profession, which is a real problem. You've got to separate the two.

It would forbid public accounting firms from providing non-auditing services in conjunction with auditing services, ban inside directors from serving on audit committees, and establish a two-year cooling-off period before an employee of an audit firm can join a client firm. These are no-brainers given what we saw happen in the US with Enron and other big corporations and what we actually are seeing here in Ontario too.

It would require firms to rotate or change their auditing firms every five years in order to ensure greater accountability.

There are many more aspects to this No Enrons bill, which I urge all members to look at. I urge the Minister of Finance to take a look at it and indeed be willing to improve upon the bill that she introduced yesterday, which will not do what she said she wants it to do, and that is to protect these smaller investors and their life savings.

Coming back directly to Mr Cordiano's bill today on consumer protection, as I said earlier, I believe it should and could go further. I think the problems are very far-reaching now and there is a lack of balance between the business community and consumers. The consumers are on the wrong end of the stick.

I would say to government members, I spoke about the fact that I don't think the bill goes far enough, and I can tell you there are a lot of consumers who think that as well. But Mr Cordiano has brought forward a bill today which I believe he wrote in the belief that Tory members could support it, because he understands that should he have become more radical in his approach and done some of the things that we really need to do to protect consumers, it wouldn't get anywhere; it wouldn't see the light of day.

Although in some ways there are complications in what's before you today that I think need to be fixed, the government should agree to pass the bill today—after all, they're already doing it in the US and other jurisdictions, so we're not reinventing the wheel here—take it to committee hearings, deal with some of the issues and some of the problems, and make any necessary amendments to strengthen it.

Congratulations, Mr Cordiano, for bringing this forward.

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): It's a pleasure to be here this morning to make a few comments on Bill 158, An Act to amend the Consumer Reporting Act. Of course, it's brought forward by Mr Cordiano, the member from York South-Weston.

Protecting personal information is a priority of the Ernie Eves government. Whenever we talk about personal information, I think everyone always looks back to what we see in movies and a lot of times in the media of Big Brother and Uncle Sam and all these phrases that the public gets to acknowledge when they think of how much information the government has on you. It's always interesting when personal information comes before this House.

However, we are more than willing to give full consideration to any proposal to increase the control that individuals have over their personal information, including credit card information. That's something that people in our province, as we move forward with a system where more and more business is done by credit card, by the use of high technology, are concerned more and more about: just what type of information is released.

I have to say right up front that I will be supporting this bill. I believe it has a lot of merit and I congratulate the member for bringing it forth. But while we support some of the policy intentions in Bill 158, there is some concern that a balance has not been achieved between the ability of consumer reporting agencies and the creditors that are providers to continuing functions and the potential benefits provided to our consumers.

One key concern we have is that the bill has been drafted without an awful lot of input and consultation with key groups that will be directly affected by it, such as businesses, the credit card industry and other users of consumer reports. When any type of private member's bill passes through this Legislature, I consider it essential that as many of the stakeholders as possible are notified and consulted with. I know Mr Cordiano has certainly met with some, but I don't know how complete that really is to this date. These organizations have significant concerns regarding some of the proposals in the bill and could provide advice on ways to address the needs identified by Bill 158. At the same time, they would not be causing a great deal of harm to their businesses. As well, we would like to hear how consumers and consumer organizations actually view this bill.

I know Mr Hudak, the Minister of Consumer and Business Services, and Mr Tascona, the parliamentary assistant, would be pleased to work with Mr Cordiano and stakeholders to consult on the bill and improve upon it in a way that maintains important consumer protection features, but in a manner that is more balanced with the needs of businesses and consumers.

The bill could be improved in a number of ways. As just one example, because I'm going to let Mr Galt have some time here this morning as well, the obligations of organizations to disclose information to consumers could be more focused on instances where consumers indicate a need or desire to actually see the information.

Again, it's a bill that has a lot of merit. I don't know how all of our caucus will be voting on it. I will be supporting it myself. Any time we can make an attempt at helping consumers in dealing with personal information, I think we as a government and all members of this Legislature have to take a serious look at it.

I appreciate the opportunity to say a few words today, and I'll let Mr Galt have the rest of my time.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I'm delighted to rise and speak in support of the private member's bill of my colleague Mr Joe Cordiano, the member from York South-Weston. At the outset, I'd like to say that I very willingly support the bill and I would urge the government members to support it as well.

It does two main things, and it goes a long way to complementing the existing credit reporting act. One is to increase the accountability of credit reporting agencies with respect to disclosing information. One very important aspect of that would be the ability to rectify that information once it has been submitted to the credit-reporting agency. Number two, also very important for the individual consumer and small business person, is to provide the information—quickly and easily accessible—that is used to determine the creditworthiness of that individual consumer or small business person.

Why is that? It's because the way the act is presently written, there is no protection, no accountability. In this area, the government must engage this debate very seriously, because there is no accountability and no protection for the consumers in our province. We can't allow reporting agencies to provide false, inaccurate and misleading information that affects the lives of our individual consumers and our small business industry. It does it so directly and so adversely that it affects indeed the lives of many consumers. The government must show leadership, must take responsibility and make sure that information being given out to the general public is correct, and when it isn't, that it must be corrected.

Mr Cordiano brought to the attention of the House that in 2001, over 2,000 complaints were brought to the attention of the consumer protection agency; only one was audited. That isn't acceptable. That is totally unacceptable.

I can vouch, from my personal experience with Equifax, supposedly a very reputable credit agency—well, let me tell you, my experience says otherwise, because when I brought complaints to the attention of Equifax, they said, "We retain the information provided to us to be correct." When I said, "Hold on a second here. This is infringing upon my rights, and I want to correct it," it was "Forget it. It is here. We deem it to be correct, and it's going to stay in our books for seven years." I beg your pardon?

How can we allow that this credit agency can distribute at will, to anyone who asks about the credit of anyone or of any business, and can continue to provide false, misleading and incorrect information for a period of seven years? That is unacceptable. We cannot allow that. We cannot allow that when a complaint is lodged with a credit-reporting agency, they stay mute. Unless a credit check gets done on you, if you go to purchase a car, a home, apply for a mortgage or whatever, anything that warrants a credit check, you may not know that indeed a complaint was lodged on your credit two, three, four, five, six years ago. It has been on your credit that long because that credit-reporting agency has no responsibility within the existing act to advise you, the consumer or small business person, to take action and make sure that misleading, incorrect and false information is corrected.

This is very penalizing to consumers in Ontario. It's penalizing to the small business industry, where it affects their day-to-day operations to supply or receive materials or other goods and even trades. We cannot condone this.

I'd like to thank the member for York South-Weston for bringing this piece of legislation to the House today. I would very strongly encourage the members of the government to make sure that this private member's bill indeed moves on and is approved today, so that we can say that information that is being collected, provided and distributed hereafter is correct. I think the public can accept that. I think small business and consumers can accept that as well. The government has a responsibility, when information is provided, that correct information is provided, and when it is contested, that action must be taken to correct that information.

We must amend the act and provide power to the registrar so that every time a complaint is lodged, it is investigated very effectively. In the last five years, out of thousands of complaints, only two were investigated. That isn't acceptable.

I hope that today every member of the House will support Mr Cordiano's bill and move it on for the protection of our consumers.

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): It's a privilege for me to be able to say a few words on this bill. But before I get too far into that, I'd like to welcome to the Legislature some students who are here from Welland. They attend Jean Vanier school, and they're in the audience here this morning. We welcome you.

What we're debating is private members' time, which we set aside for individuals to bring forward bills or resolutions that can be debated in a relatively non-partisan way. That's the intent. Anyone other than a minister can bring forward a bill or resolution, and it can be debated. It's usually an issue that's of concern to that individual in their respective riding.

This morning we're debating a bill that's been brought forward by the member for York South-Weston about consumer reporting, maybe not a big issue to our students in the gallery this morning but probably a significant issue to the teachers and parents who are accompanying them here this morning. I'm sure that down the road it's going to be of significant interest to them once they have a credit rating and are being checked on by various reporting agencies.

There's no question that I certainly support the concern of protecting personal information. I certainly support the opportunity to be able to correct any information that may be present in one's records that's inaccurate. We know how this information can be mistakenly recorded. Certainly, with computers, some of these records can be perpetuated way into the future when in fact they're very incorrect and can be very harmful to people.

I think there could have been a little more consultation put into this particular bill prior to bringing it to the House, because there certainly are groups who are opposed to it; for example, some of the reporting agencies are very opposed to this particular bill. But listening to the debate this morning, I think I'm probably going to be able to support it, because it does have the kind of intent I certainly believe in.

The present Consumer Reporting Act does provide protection for consumers. That being said, we're more than willing to look at various new ways to improve the protection of personal information. Everybody in our society should have that kind of protection.

Agencies are regulated under the present Consumer Reporting Act. Often referred to as credit bureaus, CRAs are companies that gather information on consumers and sell that information in the form of credit reports to credit granters, landlords and others for use in consideration of specific transactions.

These consumer reporting agencies keep records of consumers' debts and how regularly these debts are repaid. They gather information from creditors that shows what each account holder owes or indeed has paid. These data will show if payments are up to date or overdue and if any action has been taken on these overdue accounts. The reporting agencies' reports also contain information pertaining to bankruptcies and judgments involving the consumer.

You can see from this how they reach out like tentacles into our everyday lives, whether it's banking, credit cards or whatever. Certainly we need the opportunity to be able to check out whether mistakes have been made, and as I mentioned earlier, particularly in this era with computers when some of those errors can be extended and be very harmful to people.

I look at Bill 158. It has a lot of good things in it. However, there are some difficulties with it. I hope some of those difficulties can be corrected when it goes to committee.

The Acting Speaker: Response?

Mr Cordiano: I want to respond to some of the criticisms that have been made by my friends from the governing party. Frankly, this legislation does achieve balance because it puts the onus back on credit reporting agencies. Right now, there is no balance. The onus is placed on the individual consumer, who does not have the wherewithal or the resources, and the information is held by these credit reporting agencies.

Someone spoke about the fact that there was no consultation. I alluded to and quoted from support groups, public advocacy groups, that have supported this legislation. Furthermore, if the members opposite feel there were no consultations, why don't we go to committee and have consultations? You can have all the consultation you want. I'll sit there till the cows come home, until we pass this legislation. It's absolutely necessary.

One of the members spoke about medical information. Section 12(2) of the act deals with medical information.

As a result of this government pushing more and more medical costs on to consumers, we're becoming a consumer-driven society in the area of medical services and products. So the same thing applies to consumers in that area. Credit is important to purchase medically necessary products and services. That's why that section is in the bill.

As well, release of information to users other than for the intended purpose when you apply for a credit card: we don't want this credit history being circulated to other credit providers willy-nilly. That shouldn't be happening.

There are a number of provisions in here that do go far enough and do strike the necessary balance. I hope members of the Legislature will support this legislation.

The Acting Speaker: This completes the time allocated for debating ballot item number 66.

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the nays have it.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

HYDRO RATES

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I rise in the House today to speak on the Harris-Eves government's continued mismanagement of Ontario electricity policy. From higher costs and bungled regulations to the lack of consumer education about the new system, there's no question that the Harris-Eves government has lost control of the hydro file.

In my riding of Brant, seniors, homeowners, service clubs, large companies and small businesses such as Wayco Ltd continue to pay skyrocketing bills which have increased 21% since May in the cost of power alone. Even more ridiculous, owner Wayne Atfield contacted my office shocked that he had received two hydro payment bills within the same month of October, two weeks apart. In fact, I have a copy of Mr Atfield's hydro bills, which clearly show he paid the bill on time but was given another charge in the second bill as a late fee charge, not to count the fact that the GST charge was higher than the debt retirement charge.

The Harris-Eves government promised that this new system would deliver lower hydro rates and improved service, but since privatization of Ontario Hydro, we have seen nothing but higher rates and story after story of lousy service time after time. Small businesses like Wayco Ltd will continue to suffer from soaring hydro payments and eventually close because of the mismanagement of this government. The Liberal caucus has said from the beginning that the Harris-Eves government has completely botched the hydro file.

Premier, show us the plan to fix the mess you made. Better yet, call an election and the people will tell you what they think of this botched government policy.

SOCIAL ASSISTANCE

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): Today is Halloween, so I'm bringing you a really scary story. It is a story about being poor in the province of Ontario.

The Eves government would have you believe that if people are poor, it is their own fault and they must be lazy or immoral or both. The truth is, there are many reasons why people can end up falling on hard times: losing their job, being in a car accident, being born with a disability, losing their health, having to leave an abusive relationship, problems with mental health, and the list goes on and on. The truth is that it could happen to any one of us here.

The story gets scarier. If you find yourself poor in Ontario under this government, there is no help. If you are on your own and need social assistance, you will only receive $520 a month, not even enough to cover your rent. Can you imagine having to live on $6,200 a year? But if you are on social assistance and want to get a better education to improve your life, forget it. You aren't even allowed to go to school. The $10,000 a year you get in student loans is not enough to pay for school and rent and food, forcing people at the bottom to stay at the bottom. Kimberly Rogers was on social assistance and she wanted to get off. She collected her $520 a month from social assistance and got the $10,000 in student loans and did well in school, but today, because of the Tory policies on that, she's not with us any more.

DIWALI

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): On Monday, November 4, Ontario's South Asian community will celebrate Diwali, the festival of lights. Many members of our community will observe this auspicious occasion with their family and friends.

On Diwali, sweets are exchanged and prayers are offered to Lakshmi, the Goddess of Wealth, and to Lord Ganesh. Diwali, the darkest night on the lunar calendar, marks the return of Lord Rama to his kingdom of Ayodhya after 14 years of exile. For Sikhs, it also marks the return of Guru Hargobind Ji to the holy city of Amritsar after his release from captivity by the Mughal ruler Jahangir.

In many homes, mandirs and gurdwaras, deeyas, or small lamps, are lit in celebration of the victory of light and goodness over darkness and evil.

On behalf of all members of this Legislature, I would like to extend happy Diwali greetings to Ontario's more than half-million South Asians and the one billion Hindus and Sikhs worldwide who celebrate Diwali.

Namaste. Sat Sri Akal.

NEW DEMOCRATIC PARTY

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): I rise today to speak about myths and reality.

Howard Hampton and the NDP are trying to breathe life into their tired and dying party by twisting the facts on their Ontario Hydro policy. The NDP want to close the border to all hydro imports. That would leave Ontario sweating on hot summer days. The NDP want to stop the thousands of megawatts of new and clean gas-powered electrical generation coming from the private sector. That would leave Ontario in darkness on cold winter nights. And the NDP wants to give Ernie Eves's Ontario Power Generation 100% control over our electrical generation, despite all their failures. That would result in billions of dollars in new taxes and even higher debt.

There is no wonder the NDP is a tired, dying party that history is leaving behind. Their federal party's leadership race has attracted just 5,000 new people across the whole of Canada's 301 ridings, and absolutely no news. To put that in perspective, there are single Ontario Liberal riding associations supported by more than 7,000 members.

The public is on to the NDP. They know that, like their public auto insurance policy before this, the NDP hydro platform will never see the light of day, because they don't trust Howard Hampton and the NDP with hydro any more than they trust them to run our economy.

HALL OF DISTINCTION BUSINESS EXCELLENCE AWARDS

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): Last Wednesday, October 23, 2002, I had the honour and pleasure of attending an event hosted by the Newmarket Chamber of Commerce, the annual Hall of Distinction Awards, 2002. There are five categories of awards.

The first one, the new business award, was awarded this year to We Care Home Health Services. This award recognizes successful and innovative new entrepreneurs. The firm must be at least one year old and cannot have been in existence for more than five years.

The Bell technology award was awarded to Phoenix Systems. This business has demonstrated innovation in the use of technology in the ever-changing communications area.

The award for developing international trade was awarded to R. Reininger and Son. This award recognizes outstanding achievement in the development of export markets. Recognition received from governments and organizations outside of our community is also taken into consideration for this award.

The award for extraordinary business achievements went to the Upper Canada Mall. This award recognizes a successful entrepreneurial business, whether large or small. The areas of achievement include research and development, growth, new market development and community service.

The final award, the founder's award, was awarded to Charles E. Boyd Insurance Ltd. This honour recognizes the founding fathers and mothers of the Newmarket community. These are the people who have dedicated their working lives to making Newmarket the commercial centre it is today.

GOVERNMENT'S RECORD

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): There's a new movie playing all across Ontario. It's a real gory thriller called Nightmare on Tory Street. Work with me. It's all about a slick Bay Street banker who buys his way into the Premier's chair so that he can continue to look after his friends at the Eves trough with government appointments.

But what he doesn't know is that all the ghosts and goblins from the last guy are still there to haunt him. His own staff starts leaking cabinet documents. His ministers sign deals to give away millions to professional sports teams. And then his own scary policies from the past come back to haunt him. Schools are crumbling, families can't access life-saving surgeries, children don't have textbooks, and hydro bills—well, they're skyrocketing.

This guy just can't seem to get it under control, even though they refer to his office as the Kremlin. He said he was going to be Dalton McGuinty's worst nightmare, but it's the people in his own party who are jolted awake in the middle of the night in a cold sweat. It's the people in Tory Town who are screaming out in horror. He's plummeting in the polls. No one knows where he stands on any issue. No one knows why he wants to be Premier. He has no plan to fix the services he broke.

The nightmare is very real on Tory Street. People like Jim Flaherty, Mike Harris, Tony Clement, Janet Ecker and Chris Pipe-up Stockwell can be heard crying out, "When will this nightmare ever end?" But children, don't worry. There is a happy ending: Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals form the next government and sweep up the Tory mess.

TERRY HARKINS

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): It's a pleasure to be here today to listen to the fairytales from across the way.

I'm very excited to be here today to speak about a special event that happened on October 19, when we had the Ontario Medal for Good Citizenship awarded right here in our provincial Legislature.

Terry Harkins, a friend of mine who actually resides in Sean Conway's riding, was a recipient of one of the awards. I want to mention a little bit about Terry's background.

Terry is a former educator and now he's a full-time volunteer in our province. First of all, he's the chief superintendent of the Ontario Provincial Police auxiliary program. For people who don't know that program, and I hope everyone in this gallery understands, there are 940 auxiliary officers in our Ontario Provincial Police program. It's the largest auxiliary program, I believe, in the world. It's also the main recruitment area for the Ontario Provincial Police.

As well, Terry is the president of the Ontario Education Leadership Centre at Longford Mills. Each year the Ontario Education Leadership Centre graduates 2,200 young leaders from across our province.

I wanted to congratulate Terry on a job well done and on his Ontario Medal for Good Citizenship.

RACIAL PROFILING

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): Leaders from the black community held a press conference this morning. They expressed serious concerns about events surrounding the black community over the past few weeks in Toronto. They point out that this is far broader than simply a police issue. I very much share their concerns.

The community made a request of Premier Eves to take action. They point out that this issue has been studied, with major studies, several times over the past few years and many of the recommendations have not yet been implemented. My colleague Alvin Curling is at a media event with the Premier now and I think the question may be asked of him.

I believe the recommendation the group made this morning is a good one, and that is to request the Premier to find a way to have someone or some people look at the studies that have been done over the past few years, look at the recommendations, look at which ones haven't been implemented, find out why, and put forward an action plan to make sure that the ones that should go forward do in fact go forward.

I repeat what I said earlier in the week in the Legislature. This is an extremely serious issue, not only for Toronto but also for Ontario. There is a risk of our communities being very deeply divided. It requires calm and decisive leadership.

I would urge the Premier to look seriously at the recommendation that was made this morning, for him to examine those reports, to look at those recommendations and to proceed with a plan for implementing the appropriate ones.

ONTARIO VOLUNTEER AWARDS

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): On Tuesday, October 28, I had the wonderful opportunity of presenting Ontario Volunteer Awards to many dedicated, hard-working Niagara constituents.

The volunteer recipients included Harold Detlor and Hugh Detlor—posthumously accepted on his behalf by his daughter—for 50-plus years with the 1st Niagara Scout Group. Thank you and congratulations to both men for their inspiring dedication and commitment; also Sylvia Fast for 30 years of dedication to the same organization.

Niagara Boys and Girls Club volunteer Larry Webster was recognized for 25 years of service to that great organization. Other Niagara Boys and Girls Club recipients included Dora Nicholson, Dan Nywenig, Brian Pellow, John Russell and Bill Walters, all for at least five years, and some for more, of service to the organization.

For the Niagara Falls Curling Club, Margaret Lyon was recognized—also accepted posthumously, by her daughter, Kim Gibson—for her 25 years of service to that organization.

For the Niagara Health System, recognized were volunteers Elizabeth Blanchfield and Evelyn Gavin, and as well as Peggy Johnston and Muriel Triano, both for over 30 years of service to the Greater Niagara General Hospital ladies' auxiliary; also Rita Viscentin for 20 years of service.

For Niagara-on-the-Lake Community Palliative Care Services, recognized were Emma Adams, Nancy Bongard, Joe Eden, Joyce Loewen, Tom Marlan and Peggy Walker.

Approximately 400 people received awards. I wish I could make mention of each and every one of them as they all deserve recognition for their volunteer services to the public.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

ENVIRONMENTAL PROTECTION AMENDMENT ACT (INDUSTRIAL FACILITIES), 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LA PROTECTION DE L'ENVIRONNEMENT (INSTALLATIONS INDUSTRIELLES)

Mr Levac moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 202, An Act to amend the Environmental Protection Act to regulate industrial facilities that use, store or treat hazardous materials / Projet de loi 202, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la protection de l'environnement pour réglementer les installations industrielles où sont utilisés, entreposés ou traités des matériaux dangereux.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): In my riding we've had to endure an extremely serious problem with brownfield sites caused by hazardous materials in the past. The bill amends the Environmental Protection Act to fill up some loopholes that exist by requiring that industrial facilities which regularly use, store or treat significant amounts of hazardous materials prepare and submit an environmental report on their property every five years. The report will be available to the public, submitted to both the Ministry of the Environment and the Minister of Health. A facility that is ceasing operations is required to submit a final environmental report. Owners of the industrial facilities are responsible for any environmental damage that occurs on their land while under their care. Hopefully this will rid us of brownfields forever.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM AMENDMENT ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT LA LOI SUR LE PROGRAMME ONTARIEN DE SOUTIEN AUX PERSONNES HANDICAPÉES

Mr Parsons moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 203, An Act to amend the Ontario Disability Support Program Act, 1997 to empower the Integrity Commissioner to determine the level of income support / Projet de loi 203, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1997 sur le Programme ontarien de soutien aux personnes handicapées en vue de donner au commissaire à l'intégrité le pouvoir de déterminer le niveau de soutien du revenu.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): This is a bill that shouldn't have to be introduced, but it is an opportunity to let the government do the right thing. Unfortunately, it seems we have to embarrass him. At a time when cabinet ministers are living on publicly funded steaks, we have people on ODSP depending on food banks.

The Speaker: Could you please just stick to your bill and the explanation? Don't let's get political, please.

Mr Parsons: This bill amends the Ontario Disability Support Program Act, 1997, to empower the Integrity Commissioner to make recommendations concerning the level of income support to be set by the Lieutenant Governor in Council under the program and the time and manner of providing it. This is a bill that does not cause the Legislature to spend money but provides for recommendations to be made. Legal opinion that I have received indicates that this is acceptable.

NO FREEZING IN THE DARK ACT (ONTARIO ENERGY BOARD AMENDMENT), 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE MAINTIEN DE L'APPROVISIONNEMENT EN ÉLECTRICITÉ ET EN GAZ (MODIFICATION DE LA LOI SUR LA COMMISSION DE L'ÉNERGIE DE L'ONTARIO)

Mr Hampton moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 204, An Act to amend the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998 to protect residential consumers from the discontinuance of electricity and gas supplies during certain months / Projet de loi 204, Loi modifiant la Loi de 1998 sur la Commission de l'énergie de l'Ontario afin de protéger les consommateurs résidentiels contre l'interruption de l'approvisionnement en électricité et en gaz durant certains mois.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short explanation?

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): The bill amends the Ontario Energy Board Act, 1998, to provide that supplies of electricity and gas to residential consumers may not be discontinued without their consent during the period from October 1 to the following May 1 for any reason, including non-payment. The Ontario Energy Board is required to deal with complaints within 48 hours and to order reconnection if the distributor has contravened the no-discontinuance provision. The distributor is not permitted to charge a reconnection fee. Failure to comply with the reconnection order is an offence that may result in a fine of up to $1 million. The bill also amends the act to prohibit requiring security deposits from low-income residential consumers. "Low income" is defined by the regulation. The short title of this act is the No Freezing in the Dark Act.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I just want share with the House my thanks to the Minister of Community and Social Services for having fixed the problem of the young man, Mr Joannis, who was about to be discontinued from benefits while in hospital for a lung transplant. On behalf of the family and the people in our community, I want to thank her. We're very thankful.

ORAL QUESTIONS

ELECTRICITY SUPPLY AND DEMAND

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): My question is to the Minister of Energy and it concerns electricity supply in Ontario for the next few years. We've talked about the problems at Pickering A, Minister, but today I want to raise with you another part of the supply problem.

A few years ago Ontario Hydro and Hydro-Québec entered into an agreement—I thought, a good agreement—to improve the electricity connection between Ontario and Quebec, to make available to Ontario, by not later than the year 2004, an additional 1,250 megawatts of Hydro-Québec power. Late reports now suggest that that Hydro-Québec-Ontario Hydro transmission improvement in eastern Ontario and western Quebec is bogged down with some difficulty. Could you report to the Legislature, Minister of Energy, as to what you understand the difficulty to be and, more importantly, when you think the Ontario electricity market will actually get access to that 1,250 megawatts of Hydro-Québec power that we had been expecting not later than the year 2004?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I met with the chair of Hydro One just last week and again yesterday to discuss this important issue. It's important for the grid and it's certainly important for eastern Ontario and indeed for the entire province. In fact, all regulatory approvals are in place on our side of the border. This would use an existing corridor, which makes the project have obvious merits. Obviously, we'd like access to low-cost hydro-electric power from northern Quebec. I'm confident the project will be able to proceed. We're working quite hard with our colleagues in Quebec and we're hoping that they can get the necessary decisions on their proposed rates from their regulator.

Mr Conway: This is extremely important for all of the electricity consumers of Ontario, who are going to be experiencing a great deal of pain over the next number of months because, among other things, and perhaps centrally, the problem that we face in Ontario in the short and intermediate term, and by that I mean the next very few years, is that we've got too much domestic electricity demand chasing too little electricity supply provided by domestic generators. Add to that that the Ontario hydro company dominates our market to the tune of over 70%.

Minister, your plan, the Mike Harris-Ernie Eves plan, to get us through these very difficult years, 1999-2004, anticipated 2,060 megawatts of nuclear power at Pickering A coming back on stream about now and 1,250 megawatts of Hydro-Québec power being available to our domestic economy not later than 2004. Those two projects are in deep trouble and they are being delayed every bloody week. What is your plan to make up for the loss of 3,300 megawatts of domestic Canadian supply for the Ontario market at a time when consumers are being crucified with high prices, largely because we have a real and growing shortage of domestic supply?

Hon Mr Baird: Huron Wind will be opening up a new project next month. TransAlta will be opening up a plant in the Sarnia area early this coming year. We're optimistic that we can get three of the nuclear reactors which are down up and running in 2003, two at Bruce and one at Pickering A. We do need more inter-connection with our neighbouring jurisdictions; the member opposite is right in that assertion. In fact, in Hydro One's own licence with the Ontario Energy Board they're required to increase it by 2,000 megawatts. We certainly are underlining the importance of that for the entire province, whether it's for working families, small business or large industry.

Mr Conway: Minister, given the consumer pain that is out there now on the electricity front, a pain that particularly in Toronto is going to become infinitely more serious in a very few months' time, and given the growing supply problem we've got domestically because of the serious and prolonged delays at Pickering A and the emerging problems with the delay on the Hydro-Québec project which was to provide us with 1,250 megawatts within about 18 months of this very time, can you explain to me and the electricity consumers of Ontario why the people of Ontario should not at the earliest time get an independent examination of what is actually going on at Pickering A, what the real costs are going to be, how long the delays are going to be and what the price implications are going to be for all classes of Ontario electricity consumers, who are screaming now and are going to be yelling in decibels that you will not like very much in a very few weeks' time?

Hon Mr Baird: Should there be an independent examination with respect to the supply in the province of Ontario? It may come as some surprise to the member opposite that I completely concur. There should be, and there is. The Independent Market Operator on a regular basis updates what they deem to be an adequate supply for the province of Ontario, and they look at the demand.

Last summer we had a reactor of some 800 megawatts down at Bruce B. That will be on-line for next summer. We believe we can get one of the reactors up at Pickering A. That should be on-line for next year. There are two additional reactors at Bruce; we believe that'll get on-line.

The member opposite points to a report, and I'd like to quote. I assume this is the report he's holding. It's the 18-month outlook from the independent professional market operator. What do these independent people who do this 18-month forecast say? "The energy production capability is generally expected to be well above ... demand levels in each month of the outlook period ... No additional energy is expected to be needed to meet the Ontario forecast energy demand." In fact, in this forecast they're not counting the three nuclear projects which we hope to get on-line next year in the province of Ontario.

HYDRO ONE

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I follow up on Hydro One with the same minister. We have a document here that we received, indicating the process you plan to follow on the sale of the minority interest in Hydro One, which we are opposed to. It says here: "Hydro One equals 407 highway process. The transaction processes will follow the same processes as the 407 highway process."

The problem we have with that, Mr Minister, is that the 407 users got completely, totally ripped off on that process. It was all done behind closed doors. The lucky owners that bought it have seen their investment go up fourfold. SNC-Lavalin point out that they've put $175 million into it. It's now worth four times that. So they did all right, the buyers.

My question is this: why in the world would you want to follow the same process in selling Hydro One as you did for the 407?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I'd be pleased to have that question answered by the Minister of Finance.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): I'd like to assure the honourable member that the purpose of selling the minority ownership or the minority share of Hydro One is to make sure that it is being done in a way that brings market discipline to the day-to-day operations of that organization, and I think the honourable member would agree that we've certainly seen the need for that in recent weeks and months; secondly, that it is done in a way that protects consumers; and thirdly, that it is done in a way that ensures the necessary capital improvements to make sure that those transmission lines are working, that they're up to date, that they're strong, that they're bringing dependable electricity to our businesses and our families. We need that new investment, and this will allow us to do that.

The process is being done in a very ethical manner. The process is being done according to the advice of transaction advisers with expertise in this field who've been chosen through a competitive process. So it is a very above-board, very ethical—

Mr Phillips: Well, it's done all behind closed doors. Nothing is out in the public. You ripped off the 407 users. I remember Premier Eves, at the time the Minister of Finance, said "We have protections in." The owners say, "I can take the tolls up without limit." The owners of the 407 have ripped off the users. You did not protect the consumers, and you're going to follow exactly the same process here. The 407 winner helped to write the request for proposal, and you're going to allow that same thing to happen here again. I say to you, this isn't some little private Ernie Eves company, this is the public company. Will you agree to make this process public and not follow that secret little thing behind closed doors that you did on the 407?

Hon Mrs Ecker: When we put out a request for proposals, when we put out a request for expressions of interest, that's a public process. That goes out. The information is there for those that wish to be part of making a bid to do this. We have BMO Nesbitt Burns and CIBC World Markets. If the honourable member is asking this House to believe that there is something wrong with the integrity of those two companies, then he should stand up and say so. I'm sure they'd be very interested to know that the Liberal Party does not trust them to do an ethical job, does not trust them to provide expert advice to the government to move forward with maintaining the majority ownership in Hydro One but at the same time making sure there is private sector discipline, new investments to make sure those transmission lines do the job that Ontario families want them to do.

Mr Phillips: This gets more scary, because if you think the 407 process was open, you don't understand it. We're still in court trying to find out what in the world happened on tolls. The 407 owners said, "We're not going to give you that because that went into the request for proposal." Nothing could be further from the truth than that was open. It's still in court trying to inform the public of how in the world they can take tolls up without limit.

I say to you again, Minister, you're wrong on this one. This isn't some cozy little Bay Street deal where two companies are exchanging companies. This is the public's business. Will you agree to scrap that 407 process and make this a public process? If you're so determined to proceed with this sale, the public have a right to see it. Will you make this a public process, start to finish?

Hon Mrs Ecker: If the honourable member believes that the way to request advice, that the way to do contracts is to have a public debate about competitively sensitive information, again I'm sure the people in business whom they go out and ask for money would be really interested to know that is the consideration they give to a process that makes sure it is ethical, up front, above-board and is done in the best interests of taxpayers. That is indeed the process this government is following and will follow as we seek to get private sector discipline and new investments into the Hydro One organization.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of Energy. Today I tabled a bill called the No Freezing in the Dark Act. It would stop hydro companies from cutting off someone's hydro during the cold winter. Clarissa Higgins, a single parent with two children who is disabled and trying to live on a fixed and limited income, had her hydro cut off earlier this fall. Only extraordinary efforts by my colleague Michael Prue persuaded social assistance to pay her hydro bill so the lights would come on again. This is a problem across this province, where people living on fixed and limited incomes are having their hydro cut off because their hydro bill doubled as a result of hydro deregulation and privatization. We must help these people during a cold winter. Will you pass my bill today?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I certainly share the concern that the member opposite raises. Electricity is an important commodity in people's everyday lives. I know in my community in eastern Ontario we went through the ice storm. You never realize the importance of even a small amount of electricity to simply keep a furnace going, let alone to know the importance of it for electric heat.

The member opposite stood up in his place about two weeks ago, as I understood, and asked me, would I support his private members bill? I made a very honest offer to the member opposite that if he'd give me a copy of it, we'd be happy to review it, as I know all members have. Some two weeks later I still haven't received a copy. I know he tabled it earlier today. I still haven't got a copy. If you'd like to send one over, I would be happy to read it, as I'm sure members on both sides of the House would.

Mr Hampton: Minister, I'll send you over a copy right now. It is really a very simple bill that says a residential customer cannot have their electricity or gas cut off between October 1 and May 1; in other words, during the winter months. That's what it says. Right now, seniors living on fixed incomes and people who are trying to live on disability pensions in many communities across this province are having their hydro cut off, and then they're being told that if they want to have it reconnected they have to pay a reconnection fee of $300, $400 or $500. That, on top of a hydro bill that's doubled as a result of hydro deregulation, is beyond their means.

It's a simple question, Minister: are you prepared to do something to help these people? Will you pass my private member's bill so that people will not have their hydro or gas disconnected during these cold winter months?

Hon Mr Baird: Over a period of a week or two weeks, for the fourth or fifth time, I have said to the member opposite, "May I see a copy of your bill? Could we have the opportunity to read it first?" I think that would be the responsible thing to do.

Mr Hampton: Minister, in Red Lake tonight it will be -15C; Thunder Bay, -7C; in Timmins-Kapuskasing, -15C; in Sudbury-North Bay, -10C. In Toronto tonight it will be -4C with a wind chill factor. What is it that you need to consider? You already know that people are having their hydro cut off because they cannot afford to pay hydro bills that have doubled. You know there are literally hundreds of thousands of apartments and other homes across this province that are heated electrically. If the hydro is shut off, they don't have heat and they don't have light.

We've seen you do incredible things to help your corporate friends, in terms of deregulated, privatized hydro. Will you pass my private member's bill to ensure that no one this winter freezes in the dark as a result of hydro bills that have gone through the roof?

Hon Mr Baird: Please send me a copy of your bill. You've just handed me something here, and do you know what it says: "Fourth question, racial profiling, asked by Michael Prue and Howard Hampton to the Deputy Premier," which I assume will going to the Minister of Public Safety and Security.

"Today, 30 groups delivered a letter to your Premier about the serious problem of racial profiling against the African-Canadian communities. They say 20 years of studies have repeated the same recommendations and the time for study is over and the time for action is now. Your government can be part of the solution, or it can stand in the way, fostering more fear and more mistrust of the police in the community."

Elizabeth, if you'd like to answer this right now, I'll just hand it over to you.

The Speaker: New question.

Mr Hampton: To the Minister of Energy, you have a copy of my private member's bill. This shows the seriousness that your government takes of the issue of people having their hydro shut off.

There's another problem with hydro privatization and deregulation. About 80% of the tenants across this province pay for their hydro through their rent. We are already seeing cases where the landlord is applying for an extraordinary increase in rent to cover the hydro bill. But under your rebate scheme, when the rebate is paid out it will not go to the tenant, who has in effect paid the hydro bill through higher rent. The rebate will go to the landlord. This means that the tenant gets hit paying the hydro bill through the rent, but when the so-called rebate comes through, it never goes to the tenant.

Minister, what are you going to do to fix this obviously very unfair situation?

Hon Mr Baird: I want to thank the member opposite in respect to the prelude of his question. I finally did get a copy of his bill, and I will read it. I understand the seriousness with which the member raises it. I wish I had had it two weeks ago when he first raised the issue; I wish I had had it 10 minutes ago when he raised the issue. I will certainly give it consideration.

The leader of the third party raises an issue with respect to people in Ontario who have electricity as part of their rent. It is certainly an issue I'd be pleased to take back to discuss with my colleague the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, and look at whether that should be on a gross or a net basis.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): Minister, across this province, your deregulation and privatization is obviously being seen as a scam. Some people are becoming very wealthy, other people are having their hydro cut off and other people are seeing their hydro bills raised so high, they have no idea how they're going to pay them in the long term. It seems to me that there's an obvious unfairness here.

What I want from you is a commitment right now that, where tenants have to pay for the hydro bill through their rent and the rent is increased substantially to cover the hydro bill, should there ever be some kind of hydro-electricity rebate, it will go to the tenants, not to the landlord. Will you make that commitment hard and firm here today, that some people will not continue to profit off hydro deregulation and privatization while other people continue to pay through the nose—in other words, tenants across this province?

Hon Mr Baird: I think the issue the leader of the third party brings to the House today, whether it's with respect to a gross or a net electricity bill with respect to rent increases, which are regulated in the province of Ontario, is one that should be looked at. I'm certainly committed to discussing the issue with my colleague the Minister of Housing.

HYDRO ONE

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): My question is to the Minister of Energy. It is about this truly frightening "Hydro One equals 407 process" memo, which has got to be the hydro Halloween horror story of the day, with the government tricking and treating consumers to another Hydro One nightmare. One of the goblins at the fire sale, Minister, is the same company that is gouging Highway 407 users, and that is pretty scary to the consumers of Ontario. You are the shareholder of Hydro One, and you now have before you evidence that consumers are yet again going to be left in the dark. As the shareholder of this company, one of the most valuable assets that the province owns, what exactly are you doing to protect consumers in the midst of this Hydro One fire sale?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I'll refer this to the Minister of Finance.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): One of the important considerations for consumers is to make sure that when they turn the light switch on, the electricity is there. If we do not have new investment into the Hydro One transmission lines, that will not occur. This step will allow us to do that. We have laid that out as one of the reasons we are pursuing this course. It will enable consumers to make sure that those transmission lines have the latest technology, the latest way to proceed. That is why we are doing this. I think consumers would appreciate knowing that those lines are going to do the job families expect them to do when they turn on those light switches.

Mr Bryant: What consumers do not appreciate is a fire sale to pay off your election promises but which is not in the long-term interests of Ontario consumers. What consumers would appreciate is that the electricity transmission highway not be sold. Why? Amongst other things, you are adding even more volatility to an already chaotic electricity competition marketplace. That is something the shareholder for Hydro One, the Minister of Energy, has got to answer to.

The problem with using the Hydro-407 model to sell off Hydro One is quite simply that it's going to mean that just as the tolls went through the roof, so too will the transmission part of people's hydro bills. This is a nightmare for consumers. I say again to the Minister of Energy, you're the shareholder, and yet again you're asleep at the switch in the midst of the sell-off of Hydro One. You wasted millions of dollars on the IPO in brokers' fees, in legal fees—millions, for nothing. Now you're back to the Hydro-407 process as a model. What are you doing, Minister of Energy, to protect consumers, as the shareholder of Hydro One?

Hon Mrs Ecker: The Liberal Party loves to stand up and quote the auditor. They think that the auditor's opinion is very valuable. Well, on the 407 process that the honourable member across there is saying was so bad, Mr Peters, the auditor, has stated publicly that the sale of Highway 407 was really very well handled.

FIREFIGHTERS

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): My question is for the Minister of Public Safety and Security. The minister knows that my private member's Bill 30, the Volunteer Firefighters Employment Protection Act, has received the support of this House in principle, and passed second reading on June 6.

Bill 30 protects double-hatter firefighters. Double-hatters are usually full-time firefighters who work for a city department, but also serve as volunteer firefighters in their off-hours in their home communities. The professional firefighters' union has been threatening these firefighters with the loss of their full-time jobs if they refuse to quit as volunteers. If they're forced to quit and their expertise is lost, that loss would severely weaken Ontario's volunteer forces and their ability to respond to emergencies.

Bill 30 had public hearings before the standing committee on justice and social policy this month. I heard strong support there. In fact, of all the witnesses who made presentations, only union representatives were opposed to the bill. Last Wednesday, the committee chair reported back to this House, and members of the opposition parties voted against receiving back the amended bill. Had they been successful, they would have killed Bill 30. I have brought the solution to this problem forward as far as I can, and now it is in the hands of the government. My question to the minister is this: will he support Bill 30?

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): I thank the member for the question. I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the member from Waterloo-Wellington on his outstanding work, in the finest tradition of private members' initiatives in this assembly.

The concern embodied in his legislation is a legitimate concern held by many municipalities across this province, and certainly amongst volunteer firefighters in Ontario, many of whom are two-hatters who work as professional firefighters and also volunteer in their home communities.

Early on in my tenure of six months, I asked the fire marshal to conduct consultations with all of the stakeholders to see if we could arrive at a remedy at the table, rather than looking at a legislative solution. Unfortunately, that has not been achieved. I indicated some time ago that if we cannot achieve a resolution through discussion, through consultation, I am quite prepared to consider a legislative solution.

Mr Arnott: I appreciate the work that the minister is doing and his understanding of the significance of this issue for communities right across the province. I didn't hear him say he supported the bill, but I'm hoping to give him an opportunity in the supplementary to say so.

Bill 30 has the strong support of the Fire Fighters Association of Ontario, which represents the volunteer firefighters, many of whom are here today in the gallery.

Applause.

Mr Arnott: They do deserve our support and our appreciation.

The Association of Municipalities of Ontario has written each government MPP this week asking for support for my bill. There is growing and broad-based support for Bill 30, but time is of the essence because more double-hatters are under pressure to resign. In an ominous threat, the firefighters' union says it plans to phase out all double-hatters, and on October 1 they lifted their moratorium on charges against double-hatters for their volunteer service, effectively declaring open season on the double-hatters.

Here is what Ontario Fire Marshal Bernard Moyle had to say about the union leadership's decision at the hearings on Bill 30: "The sudden or phased-out withdrawal of two-hatters from communities dependent on volunteer fire departments could significantly impact on their ability to provide an adequate level of fire protection and may in some cases pose a potential serious threat to public safety." The fire marshal went on to explain how losing double-hatters would weaken the volunteer forces, and he concluded that legislation to protect them is needed. Will the minister protect public safety in Ontario by encouraging the government to take a position in support of my bill, and will he support having it called for third-reading debate immediately?

Hon Mr Runciman: I want to echo the member's comments with respect to volunteers in this province. Volunteer firefighters do an enormous job in so many communities across this province, and are so important to many of us in this assembly and in the constituencies we represent, including mine.

What the member is talking about I think is essentially a House management issue. I have, as well as the member, discussed this with the House leader. I think the member also appreciates that I have a number of stakeholders whose views I have to represent around the government tables. I don't think it would be appropriate for me to take a public position at this time.

NATURAL GAS RATES

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): I have a question for the Minister of Energy. In August of this year, as you know, the Ontario Energy Board approved a retroactive rate increase for Union Gas. Subsequent to that, Union Gas sent around to every school board in the province a breakdown of what the retroactive charge would be for them. I have a letter in my hand from the Windsor-Essex Catholic District School Board saying that the impact of that decision will be $144,000 on this year's budget. Subsequent to that, the Premier said he found the decision unacceptable. You have commenced a review of OEB policies and procedures and written to members and others. Minister, what do you propose to tell school boards who, in this letter and right across the province, say that their budgets do not contemplate this, and second, have said to us that in fact they'll have to take the money out of operating budgets for schools—that is, money away from textbooks and everything else in the classroom? What do you say to those, in light of the fact that your review does not appear to address this very serious issue?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I'll refer the supplementary to my colleague the Minister of Education, who wants to talk about school boards.

I can say—two issues with respect to the whole issue of retroactivity. I'm a consumer like everyone else and I don't think anyone in Ontario likes retroactive charges. The Premier was concerned, on the whole issue of retroactivity, about how the mandate of the Ontario Energy Board has perhaps grown faster than it could. I do believe there are a substantial number of issues we could look at to improve the board's ability to discharge its responsibilities. We're conducting a complete review of the board and hope to be able to report back to cabinet within 100 days of that review. We've put out a discussion paper of late to solicit views, including school boards, including other consumers of energy in the province, to get their ideas and their insights on what is an important issue.

Mr Duncan: In fact, Minister, right now under the Ontario Energy Board Act, section 34(1), cabinet has the power to order the OEB to review any decision related to this. There are certain conditions, and those conditions have been met by two organizations: the Ontario Association of School Business Officials and the Ontario Public School Boards' Association, who have filed with the clerk of cabinet petitions to cabinet to order the Ontario Energy Board to have another hearing on this matter, hopefully with an eye to overturning it.

In light of the impact of this on school boards, hospitals, colleges, universities, and in light of the context of what we know is coming down the path in terms of hydroelectric prices and hydroelectric concerns, will you as a cabinet, as per your own act, as per the petition presented to the secretary of cabinet with respect to this issue, order the Ontario Energy Board to review their decision and to hold another hearing?

The other thing you should know, Minister: there was no public notification of these hearings—no opportunities for anybody to participate in this decision-making outside of Union Gas and the Ontario Energy Board. Will you use the powers now available to you?

Hon Mr Baird: The member opposite wrote my leader and the Premier on October 16, saying that the government in fact had "the power to overturn the approval," and he stands in his place and suggests we have the power simply to review. I've got section 34 here and I've got section 27. If he reads section 28 and section 34 and the entire Ontario Energy Board Act with respect to these issues, then he'll know that not only does a decision have to be made but an order has to be issued. We do have a decision in this case, but no order has been issued. We're awaiting that. We expect it at some time in the near future, perhaps within a one-month period. Then that's an opportunity when we'll be able to consider the appeal, which I've certainly seen and am keenly aware of.

The Premier did take this issue tremendously seriously. He didn't want just a review of this particular issue but indeed of the whole board because we do treat these issues with great concern.

ELDER ABUSE

Mrs Julia Munro (York North): My question is for the minister responsible for seniors. Representatives from my community recently came to Toronto to meet with colleagues from across Ontario interested in addressing elder abuse. Elder abuse is an urgent community matter that concerns all citizens and compromises the well-being of countless older adults, their families and communities. Can you tell me how this meeting was connected to Ontario's strategy to combat elder abuse?

Hon Carl DeFaria (Minister of Citizenship, minister responsible for seniors): I thank my colleague for the question. Our government's $4.3-million strategy to combat elder abuse announced in March 2002 will build on the excellent work already being done in communities across Ontario. My ministry, along with the Ontario Network for the Prevention of Elder Abuse and the Ministry of the Attorney General, recently organized two networking meetings for community groups and individuals interested in addressing elder abuse. Over 100 participants came from across Ontario to share information and best practices and explore new partnerships. They have created a new network to help implement the three priorities of the elder abuse strategy: coordination of local services, training of front-line staff from various professions, and public education to raise awareness of elder abuse.

Mrs Munro: I thank the minister for his response. I understand that as part of Ontario's strategy to combat elder abuse, an elder abuse conference is being held in November of this year. Elder abuse is a very serious matter that has also recently gained growing awareness as a worldwide phenomenon. Research, education and training are important in addressing this issue. Minister, can you elaborate on the purpose of this conference?

Hon Mr DeFaria: I'll be pleased to do so. We have been working with our partners to plan a conference called Sharing Solutions: Defining the Future. The conference will be held in Toronto between November 18 and 20 of this year. It will bring together experts from across Ontario, Canada and around the world to share their knowledge and the new ways people are responding to elder abuse.

Along with myself and my colleague the Attorney General, we are pleased to welcome some very exciting keynote speakers and international experts who will share with us their expertise and knowledge in this field. The conference will allow seniors and professionals to exchange ideas and learn about best practices on this issue.

The government is listening to Ontarians who have asked us to respond to this serious growing problem. We have taken action and will continue to do so to implement those strategies to combat elder abuse with inputs from communities across Ontario.

COCHLEAR IMPLANTS

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a question to the Minister of Health. Micheline Maginsky is in the gallery today. She's a 37-year-old mother of four. She began to lose her hearing as a child. She was profoundly deaf by her mid-twenties. She is a candidate for cochlear implant surgery, which will change her life by finally allowing her to hear her children's voices.

Doctors at the Sunnybrook cochlear implant program have told us that due to dramatic advances in technology, the number of candidates for surgery has skyrocketed, and that is why they made a request to you to increase their quota of cochlear implants from 35 to 50 this year to reduce the waiting list down to one year.

You provided some funding, but Micheline must wait until February 2004 to hear again, a total wait of over three years. Minister, will you expand Sunnybrook's cochlear implant program so patients like Micheline will hear again next year?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I thank the honourable member for bringing this particular case to my attention. Although I will not comment on a particular case, I can say generally that we have been increasing year over year the funding for cochlear implants. If I have to be stood corrected, I will correct the record, but I believe this year the funding increase is for between 25 and 32 new operations. That has been the record to date. We have been increasing it year on year. Certainly when we review budgets over the next few months, I will take the honourable member's advice into consideration, as well as the situation that she describes. Of course we want as much access as possible, given the level of demand for this particular type of service, as we can possibly get.

Ms Martel: Minister, if I might, Micheline is not the only one here in the gallery today who is affected. We've got a number of other patients: Vatsala Shetty Bojara, David Zimmerman, Michael Godin, Gary McCarthy, Eileen Bell, their families, and the families of Frances Mezei and Erelene Cardella. All of them will have to wait three to four years just to hear again with the Sunnybrook program.

You know that 70% of all of the transplants in Ontario are done at Sunnybrook. Anglophone patients from the north as well come to Sunnybrook for transplants. You also know that it is not an option for these patients to go to one of the other two adult centres, because they have their own waiting lists and their own quotas.

Increasing the number of implant surgeries is going to dramatically change the life of these patients, their families and all the others who are on the waiting list at Sunnybrook. I ask you again, will you expand the program at Sunnybrook to allow these people to hear again next year?

Hon Mr Clement: I want to assure this House that we have expanded the program, we are expanding the program. The program has received increased funding. It has been a priority of ours since the technology has come into existence to ensure that it received as much funding as possible, given the level of expertise that we have to continue to find and so forth.

I want to assure the honourable member and, through her, those who are interested in this particular issue that our government, the Ernie Eves government, does support this particular type of procedure. We want to see more procedures done in our province. We certainly have been putting our money where our mouth is, if I can use that phrase, in the past and will continue to do so in the future.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Steve Peters (Elgin-Middlesex-London): My question is for the Minister of Energy. Minister, I'd like to cite for you some local examples of your hydro mess. Mrs Shirley Bechard, central Elgin, has watched her bill rise from $200 to $900. Frank Suras, a west Elgin farmer, has seen his bill rise from $3,000 to $4,000. John Walker Jr, a Malahide farmer, has seen his bill rise from $2,600 to $4,000.

Minister, your policies are causing real hurt. People are flocking to my constituency office truly worried that they can't pay their bills. Farmers, who we all know are already struggling in this province, cannot afford to have this added burden placed on them.

Brownouts, service delays and rip-offs on billing charges were all part of the discussions at a recent Ontario Federation of Agriculture directors' meeting. Bill Mailloux, OFA vice-president, said, "I just about blew a fuse when I got our bill."

Minister, I urge you to speak to your Minister of Agriculture so you hear what's going on out there. Speak to the minister of rural affairs and find out what's happening out there.

What do you have to say to rural residents, my constituents, who cannot afford to pay their hydro bills?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I share the concern the concern for working families, for small businesses, for farm operators and for large industry with respect to the uncertainty surrounding electricity prices in the province of Ontario. There are a number of factors which have led to higher prices with which no one in the province of Ontario is comfortable. I won't spend all the time rhyming them off to the honourable member, because I'm sure he's heard me rhyme them off before.

As part of the market opening, there is a requirement that Ontario Power Generation provide a rebate to consumers, on a scale depending on if the rate was over 3.8 cents per kilowatt hour. That is certainly something that the Premier has asked me to look at and to report back to him on in short order.

I know the Minister of Agriculture and the minister of rural affairs are concerned. I represent a riding that has a significant part of it that's rural, and I certainly take the issue seriously myself.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Supplementary?

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Anita Murphy, who lives in St Ola in my riding, contacted my office, very angry about this hydro issue. She is a single mom who has invested her savings to build a small bed and breakfast on her property. She has three sleeping cabins, but before the cabins are even wired, Ontario Hydro has required her to pay $2,200 in an administrative fee. That has nothing to do with the market opening. Before she even runs wires to the cabins, this is what she must pay. She is absolutely distraught, because she can't afford this fee and she is out of business even before she has opened her doors.

Another single parent in Bath, with an average monthly bill of about $200, saw his most recent catch-up bill skyrocket to $2,454.

Minister, constituents in my riding are outraged about hydro. When constituents have called the toll-free number that your government has provided in this brochure to deal with hydro complaints, they are told, "Call your MPP."

Minister, my question is, what are you going to do for Anita? What are you going to do for the man with the $2,400 bill? What are you going to do for all Ontarians who are victims of your total incompetence on this file?

Hon Mr Baird: As I said to her colleague, the first member who asked the question, we are tremendously concerned about the effects this will have on working families, on farm operators and on small businesses. We're looking at the rebate program and hope to have something forward.

We are concerned about life in rural Ontario on this side of the House. That's why this member's constituents will want to know why she blocked attempts to try to help double-hatters, those volunteer firefighters who work so hard in our communities, that she personally tried to stop this government when we acted.

They will also ask her why, when this government and this Minister of Agriculture were trying to stop efforts to unionize the family farm, this member stood in her place and tried to stop that. Her constituents are awfully concerned about those issues. I wish she was as well.

FLU IMMUNIZATION

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): My question is for the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. I want to start off by thanking you for participating in the groundbreaking ceremony for the Hellenic Home for the Aged, a new long-term-care facility in my great riding of Scarborough Centre. I believe that goes to demonstrate yet another example of the commitment this government has to ensure the best quality of care for our seniors and our diverse communities and of course for the people of Ontario.

I understand that for the third year in a row Ontario's free universal influenza immunization program—try saying that in a hurry—is up and running all across the province. I know that for the previous two years the program has experienced great success, with more than nine million Ontarians having been vaccinated. As a result of the flu shot program, Ontario has experienced a sharp drop in the number of flu cases reported across Canada.

I was wondering if the Minister of Health could inform my constituents and this House about this year's flu immunization program.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): If I can say to the honourable member as well, it was certainly a pleasure to join with her in the groundbreaking ceremony for the Hellenic Home for the Aged yesterday. Indeed, that is another example of long-term care being delivered by the Ernie Eves government to this province.

When that facility is built and occupied, those residents will be welcome and indeed urged to take part in the universal flu vaccination program. It has been a great success to date, and we plan on building on that accomplishment. This year, the Ernie Eves government has committed $21.5 million to purchase more than five million doses of vaccine. This is part of our ongoing commitment to health promotion and disease prevention.

I would like to take this opportunity, Mr Speaker, to urge you and, through you, the people of Ontario to take your flu shot and include your co-workers, your family and your friends.

Why should we have the flu shot? Here are some facts about the flu. Anyone, regardless of age, is at risk of becoming infected. The flu spreads easily and can be picked up through coughing, sneezing or by touching contaminated objects.

Again, I ask all Ontarians to get a flu shot. It's the healthy choice to take.

Ms Mushinski: I really appreciate that response, Minister, and again thank you for being in my riding yesterday for such an important announcement.

I know my constituents in Scarborough Centre are happy to know that the free flu shot program is being continued again this year. Most of us at one time or another have suffered from the flu. Believe me, I know it's not a very pleasant experience. I'm sure most people don't wish to experience the illness again, nor do they wish to pass the flu on to their friends and loved ones. In fact, the feedback I've received from my constituents has been nothing but positive about this program.

Could the minister please inform the House how effective the flu shot is in preventing the illness, and could he please inform my constituents where and when in Scarborough they can receive the flu shot.

Hon Mr Clement: First of all, I want to dispel a myth, that the flu shot is somehow not effective. Among healthy adults who are immunized, the flu shot is effective at reducing their infection by the flu by between 70% and 90%.

The free vaccine is available through a number of sources. People can receive the flu shot at doctors' offices, local health unit clinics, employer-sponsored clinics and at community health centres. We're all in favour of them as well. If anyone has any questions about the flu shot or would like information about a clinic where they live, they can phone the flu hotline at 1-866-FLU-N-YOU Which is 1-866-358-6968. In Scarborough they can phone 416-392-1250 or visit clinics such as the one at Scarborough Town Centre on November 8, 9, 14, 15 and 16.

I challenge all members of the House not only to get their flu shot themselves but to ask their staff to be immunized. I have already had my flu shot and my staff will be immunized tomorrow. Let's keep Ontario healthy.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Thank you to the brave minister.

SCHOOL BOARDS

Mr Gerard Kennedy (Parkdale-High Park): I have a question for the Minister of Education. Minister, I want to ask you about what some people are starting to recognize is a potential hoax being perpetrated in your name in Hamilton. It came out as a school's budget. Your supervisor, and you're the elected official to whom that person responds, came out and said that there would be no cuts to classrooms. That same person said there would be no closures of schools—widely reported in the Hamilton area. Yet yesterday that same supervisor held a closed-door meeting with the trustees whose powers you've taken away and said that four schools would be closed and, further, that there would be 42 classroom positions not filled.

Minister, you're the only elected official to whom the children can look to take responsibility for their well-being. Will you tell the House today what studies you have done to guarantee that the decisions made by your supervisors are not going to harm children? Because the cuts are certainly taking place.

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): It's absolutely unbelievable how somebody can take a good-news story that invests more in students, teachers and infrastructure and try to twist it. The budget that was balanced by Mr Murray includes increases for classroom teachers and consultants, up $4.2

million; supply teachers, up $1.2 million; classroom support staff, up $650,000; textbooks and instructional supplies, up $942,000; transportation, up $137,000; school renewal maintenance pupil places, up $1.14 million. Not only that: he had a surplus of $514,000 and there were 7.2 new special education—

Interjections.

Mr Kennedy: We're just trying to figure out whether the person that wrote that budget was the $6,000-a-month public relations person that you approved or maybe an accountant that used to work for Enron, Minister, because you know full well there is $4 million less in classroom teaching than the basic budget put forward by the board, $4 million less in janitors, $700,000 less in support for the classroom. If you're so confident that the decisions made by your supervisor are in the best interests of Hamilton kids, the 42 positions that won't be put forward, then stand in this House today and guarantee, as you should—you're the only elected official in a position to do it—that no one will be harmed in their educational attainment in Hamilton this year because of what your supervisor's done. Make that assurance here today.

Hon Mrs Witmer: This is unbelievable. Here we have a good-news budget: we have more special education teachers, we have more consultants, we have more money for supply teachers. Look, this is unbelievable. Here is a supervisor who came in and looked at the budget that had been put forward by the staff of the Hamilton District School Board. He put students first. He was able to balance the budget. He had a surplus, and where did he reinvest it? He reinvested it in the students and in the teachers and in infrastructure. He did a great job.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The members for Hamilton East and Parkdale-High Park come to order. You've asked your question. We're on to the next member.

CHILD AND FAMILY SERVICES

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. I've been hearing from some of my constituents in the great riding, as you know, of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale that more and more family members are being called upon to take care of other family members' children. An example would be grandparents caring for their grandchildren. What is the government doing to support family members like grandparents who are put in the position of caring for their own grandchildren?

Interjections.

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): Oh, shut up.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'd ask the member for Hamilton East to withdraw that.

Mr Agostino: Withdraw.

The Speaker: All members, we're getting down to the very end of question period, so let's cool it a little bit. The member is wrapping up. Sorry to interrupt you.

Mr Gill: Let me repeat my question. What is the government doing to support family members like grandparents who are put in the position of caring for their own grandchildren?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague from Gore-Malton-Springdale for the question. A few days ago I had the opportunity to stand in the House and say thank you to all the foster parents who have come forward to care for children in Ontario. Indeed, we do see grandparents, and aunts and uncles and other family members caring for children in Ontario. We respect the care they provide, we appreciate it and we offer support.

Essentially, there are four avenues of support: through the foster care program; if there's an issue of child safety, the children's aid society is involved and care is provided very directly in support; adoption is an option, in which case child tax benefits are given to grandparents or to aunts and uncles, like all parents would receive. In very difficult circumstances, of course, a grandparent could sue for custody. But we also provide a program called the temporary care assistance program. This is a program that is available to all grandparents, aunts and uncles and other family members who provide that care, because it's important to us, we appreciate it and we do indeed—

The Speaker: I thank the minister.

Mr Gill: I want to thank the minister for that response. If I understood you correctly, you called it the temporary care assistance program. How long can these families qualify for assistance?

Hon Mrs Elliott: This program is provided when a child is in financial need and is living with an adult not legally obligated to support the child. This program is available until the child reaches the age of 18. It provides things like prescription drugs, dental and vision care, back to school allowances, winter clothing allowances, as well as monthly support in the amount of $214, or in the case of additional children, $174 for each child.

This is a very direct program to provide very direct assistance because it matters to us that people care enough about these children to take them, as family members, to care for them, to provide for them, for shelter, food, clothing and of course, most importantly, for love. The Ernie Eves government supports them in this endeavour, and has this very particular program to assist.

RACIAL PROFILING

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): I don't think the subject of my question should come as any surprise to the members opposite. Deputy Premier, 30 community groups were present today, downstairs, at a press conference. The Liberals were there to comment on that press conference, as was I, on behalf of the New Democratic Party, but there was no one from your caucus there, no one to speak about what Conservatives are going to do.

When they went upstairs to see the Premier after that, they were met by an assistant. No political person was there to speak to them. These groups do not know where you stand on very, very vital issues to their community. They don't know where you stand on community violence and your plans to stem that violence. They don't know where you stand on racial profiling, and quite frankly, neither do we.

Those questions remain unanswered. You have had three days since we first posed these questions in the Legislature to your colleague Minister Runciman. What are you going to do to stop the racial profiling and what are you going to do to stop and stem the rising tide of violence in this city?

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): I'm going to refer it to the Minister of Public Safety, but the member opposite needs to know that we take this issue very seriously.

Hon Robert W. Runciman (Minister of Public Safety and Security): Right off the top I want to clarify, as I've said on a number of occasions, that this government does not support racial profiling by police services in Ontario. I think the member's other comments were unfair with respect to presence at the press conference. Both the Attorney General and I had scheduled a press conference on DNA legislation some time ago and were committed to that. If we could have been in attendance, we certainly would have had a representative there. We take these concerns very seriously. I've indicated in this House that I've spoken with both Chief Fantino and the Honourable Lincoln Alexander. We're working to achieve solutions and we want to work together with all members of this assembly.

Mr Prue: I meant no umbrage to the minister, but there are 57 members of your caucus and you have a parliamentary assistant. Surely someone from the Conservative Party should have been there.

For my supplementary question, I would like to go back to the Deputy Premier. In the audience today we have a young woman who is young but wise beyond her years, Tanya Jeffers. She said she has had enough of the false promises, she has had enough of the broken promises of this government. Quite frankly, I can understand her frustration.

One of the first acts of the Harris government in the first mandate was to scrape the independent body to review complaints against police. The first community demand today and the primary demand today is that this body be reinstated. Much of the Harris agenda you have agreed, as a caucus over there, to undo. You have agreed to undo the hydro sale down to half. You've agreed to review school funding. You've agreed to postpone tax cuts. You've agreed to postpone funding of private schools. Will you agree to undo what was a very bad action five years ago and to reinstate an independent body so that citizens can go to the police and know they're going to get a good answer?

Hon Mr Runciman: I appreciate the member taking a position on these issues, but I have to say that I hope his party and others in this House will not try to politicize this issue.

If you take a look, there's a graph of what police oversight looked like in 1994; a true maze, which no one in the public could understand or appreciate. I think we have simplified the process and made it more accessible. We've improved the turnaround times in a significant fashion. We have an independent oversight body in the Ontario Civilian Commission on Police Services.

For the party opposite to suggest that we have not done significant things to improve race relations and policing in this province is totally incorrect. We have significantly improved training for correctional officers, probation and parole officers, and police officers. The training now includes strong anti-racism and anti-discrimination components. It's now mandatory for correctional officers, probation and parole officers, and police officers to receive this anti-racism training. More than 7,700 correctional officers have received specific training through our anti-discrimination and anti-racism course. We have instituted very positive measures to prevent barriers to recruitment, hiring and promotion of racial minorities—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up. I thank him.

BUSINESS OF THE HOUSE

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I have in my hand the business of the House for next week.

Pursuant to standing order 55, I have a statement of business for next week.

Monday afternoon we will resume debate on Bill 175, which is the environment bill. On Monday evening we will continue debate on Bill 195, which is an environment bill.

Tuesday afternoon we will debate Bill 148, which is the emergency preparedness bill. Tuesday evening we will continue debate on Bill 180.

Wednesday afternoon we will debate Bill 180 again, which is the consumer protection bill. Wednesday evening's business is still to be determined.

Thursday morning during private members' business we will be discussing ballot item 67 standing in the name of Mrs McLeod, and ballot item 68 standing in the name of none other than Mr Ruprecht. Thursday afternoon we will begin debate on Bill 198, which is the new budget bill. Thursday evening's business is still to be determined. We will get back to you on that one.

VISITOR

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I wonder if I might introduce a visitor in the gallery from South Africa, Mr Doug Jackson, who is here to encourage trade between Canada and Ontario and South Africa. He also happens to be the president of Coca-Cola, but he's here in a different role. I might also thank Minister Flaherty, who has agreed to meet with him on very short notice. I appreciate that, and I'm sure he does as well.

WATER EXTRACTION

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas we, the residents and cottagers of Bob's Lake, strenuously object to the permit issued by the Ministry of the Environment to OMYA Inc to remove 1.5 million litres of water per day from the Tay River, without adequate assessment of the consequences and without adequate consultation with the public and those people and groups who have expertise and interest; and

"Whereas it is our belief that this water taking will drastically impact the environment and seriously affect the water levels in Bob's and Christie lakes. This in turn would affect fish spawning beds as well as habitat. It would also affect the wildlife in and around the lakes;

"Whereas Bob's Lake and the Tay River watershed are already highly stressed by the historic responsibility of Parks Canada to use Bob's Lake as a reservoir for the Rideau Canal; and

"Whereas the movement of water from the lake through the watershed for navigation purposes in the canal provides sufficient stress and problems for the lake. This water taking permit will only compound the stresses on the waterway;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"We request that this permit be rescinded until a comprehensive evaluation of the impact of water taking by OMYA Inc on the environment, the water levels and the water needs of these communities is complete. An independent non-partisan body should undertake this evaluation."

I will sign this petition because I am in favour of it. I will ask Michelle, the page, to take it to the table for me.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): It's nice to see a woman in the chair again.

I have more petitions on adoption disclosure reform. They read as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas in Ontario, adopted adults are denied a right available to all non-adoptees, that is, the unrestricted right to identifying information concerning their family of origin;

"Whereas Canada has ratified standards of civil and human rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the UN Declaration of Human Rights and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child;

"Whereas these rights are denied to persons affected by the secrecy provisions in the adoption sections of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts of the province of Ontario;

"Whereas research in other jurisdictions has demonstrated that disclosure does not cause harm, that access to such information is beneficial to adult adoptees, adoptive parents and birth parents, and that birth parents rarely requested or were promised anonymity;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to enact revision of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts to permit adult adoptees unrestricted access to full personal identifying birth information; permit birth parents, grandparents and siblings access to the adopted person's amended birth certificate when the adopted person reaches age 18; permit adoptive parents unrestricted access to identifying birth information of their minor children; allow adopted persons and birth relatives to file a contact veto restricting contact by the searching party; and replace mandatory reunion counselling with optional counselling."

I will affix my signature to this petition.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Mushinski): The member for Hamilton—Hastings-Frontenac. Sorry.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

I will affix my signature to this petition because I am wholeheartedly in agreement. I will pass it to Matthew, who will take it to the table for me.

The Acting Speaker (Ms Marilyn Mushinski): Thank you, and I do apologize to the member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have yet again another petition dealing with adoption disclosure reform. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas in Ontario, adopted adults are denied a right available to all non-adoptees, that is, the unrestricted right to identifying information concerning their family of origin;

"Whereas Canada has ratified standards of civil and human rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the UN Declaration of Human Rights and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child;

"Whereas these rights are denied to persons affected by the secrecy provisions in the adoption sections of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts of the province of Ontario;

"Whereas research in other jurisdictions has demonstrated that disclosure does not cause harm, that access to such information is beneficial to adult adoptees, adoptive parents and birth parents, and that birth parents rarely requested or were promised anonymity;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to enact revision of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts to permit adult adoptees unrestricted access to full personal identifying birth information; permit birth parents, grandparents and siblings access to the adopted person's amended birth certificate when the adopted person reaches age 18; permit adoptive parents unrestricted access to identifying birth information of their minor children; allow adopted persons and birth relatives to file a contact veto restricting contact by the searching party; replace mandatory reunion counselling with optional counselling."

Again I will affix my signature to this petition because, as you know, I am fully in agreement.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the funding for school boards is now based on the student-focused funding legislative grants;

"Whereas the Hastings and Prince Edward District School Board is in a period of declining enrolment, a trend that is projected to continue over the next five years;

"Whereas application of the student-focused funding model for 2001-02 does not allow sufficient funding to the Hastings and Prince Edward District School Board for secretarial support in schools, principals and vice-principals, transportation or school operations;

"Whereas costs in these areas cannot be reduced at the same rate as the enrolment declines;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"To reassess the student-focused funding formula for the 2002-03 school year to provide additional funding for those areas where funding is insufficient and to adjust future student-focused funding formulas to address the situation of declining enrolments faced by the Hastings and Prince Edward District School Board and other boards in Ontario."

I'm very pleased to affix my signature to this petition. I will hand it to Kalaneet, who will take it to the table for me.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): What an opportunity today to present petitions. I have a petition from the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, and it reads:

"To the Ontario Legislature:

"Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion from public education over the past seven years;

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students;

"Whereas district school boards around the province have had to cut needed programs and services, including library, music, physical education and special education;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carlton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors;

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned elected leaders of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carlton and Toronto district school boards."

I am pleased to affix my signature to this petition, because I fully support it.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I have petitions that read as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% over three years or $3.02 per diem in the first year and $2 in the second year and $2 in the third year effective September 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month after three years; and

"Whereas this increase is above rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario for 2002; and

"Whereas, according to the government's own funded study, Ontario will still rank last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live out their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce the 15% increase over three years in accommodation costs to no more than the cost of living increase annually and that the provincial government provide adequate funding for nursing and personal care to a level that is at least at the average standard for nursing and personal care in those 10 jurisdictions included in the government's own study."

I affix my signature. I am in complete agreement.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): This is a petition addressed to the government of Ontario.

"We, the undersigned residents of Ontario, recognize that,

"(1) Electricity rates in deregulated, private, for-profit markets such as Alberta and California fluctuate wildly in supply and price and are much higher-priced than in comparable public power systems;

"(2) Deregulation in California caused more blackouts than Ontario has suffered from ice storms or other natural disasters while public power has protected us from market fluctuations in supply as well as price;

"(3) At-cost electricity has helped build and support Ontario's economy, while deregulation would destabilize the economy, with soaring rates, reduced reliability and increased production costs leading to plant closures, job loss and economic decline;

"(4) Soaring electricity rates would put a significant burden on school boards, hospitals, public transit and other public services which cannot afford to pay double for their electricity;

"(5) Seniors and other members of our communities on fixed incomes would be hard-hit by increasing rates, and the living standards of millions of Ontarians will be harmed;

"(6) Privatization will trigger NAFTA provisions, making it practically impossible to reverse this dangerous experiment and would cost us Canadian control over electricity;

"(7) Privatization, deregulation and loss of sovereignty would close the door on public accountability of the industry in regard to environmental safety and energy security concerns; and

"(8) An alternative exists in the form of a truly accountable, transparent and affordable publicly owned and controlled system operated at cost for the benefit of all Ontarians;

"Therefore, we demand that the Ontario government immediately halt the planned privatization, sell-off and deregulation of the public electricity system."

Linda Firth, along with so many others from down Welland and Niagara way, has signed that. I give this to Hin-Hey to deliver to the table.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

CONSUMER PROTECTION STATUTE
LAW AMENDMENT ACT, 2002LOI DE 2002 MODIFIANT DES LOIS
EN CE QUI CONCERNE

LA PROTECTION DU CONSOMMATEUR

Resuming the adjourned debate on the motion for second reading of Bill 180, An Act to enact, amend or revise various Acts related to consumer protection / Projet de loi 180, Loi édictant, modifiant ou révisant diverses lois portant sur la protection du consommateur.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): You may recall that we had stood down the leadoff time for the NDP, I believe. Mr Prue had completed his debate and is present, so we would move on from there in rotation to questions and comments. I will look to my right to the government benches.

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I'm very pleased to rise today and to offer my words of support to—

Interjection.

Hon Mrs Elliott: Oh, we're on questions and comments? I apologize, Mr Speaker. I was prepared to—

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): You're not supporting me?

Hon Mrs Elliott: I will rise in support. I understand that this bill is being very well received by all sides in the House and—

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): I'm speaking next.

Hon Mrs Elliott: Mr Kormos informs me that he has views opposite—but that is my understanding to date. Certainly it's a bill that I believe my constituents in Guelph-Wellington are going to receive very favourably. It's one of the more substantial bills we've had in the House in some time. I'm looking at it; it's 162 pages, very comprehensive, on behalf of the minister bringing forward his ideas. I think my colleagues who have been speaking here in the House will agree he is working very hard to try to protect consumers, who have a lot of different issues on their minds. This bill is comprehensive.

There are a number of topics that I think we would like to continue to debate later on this afternoon.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): I know that one of the concerns the member must have about legislation of this kind, even though the government explained to a certain extent that this was contained in other legislation, is the lack of protection for people in terms of energy costs. As we see people coming into our offices, as we listen to them on the phone and as we get letters, faxes and e-mails from them, we find out that many were duped by door-to-door people—

Mr Kormos: Conned.

Mr Bradley: Conned, says the member for Niagara Centre, by those who have come door to door to try to sell them a bill of goods, in other words, explaining that the cost of their energy, whether it was for natural gas or, most latterly, for electricity—that they were supposed to get a break if only they would sign this contract.

We have had members of this Legislature who have themselves been fraudulently dealt with. The member for Glengarry-Prescott-Russell had somebody forge his signature on one of these contracts.

Clearly this legislation does not deal with what people are talking about most today, and that is the fraud going on as it relates to electricity prices in this province. My colleague the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke raised issues in the House yesterday about where the rebate is going to go. Yet again today, the issue was raised about people who are in a rental position and who will have their rents increase as a result of the increase in electrical costs and yet the rebate will not go back to them, the rebate will go to the landlord.

These are all issues that are simply not dealt with in this piece of legislation. People are concerned that this government has left them out in the cold, so to speak, when it comes to energy costs and their protection.

Mr Kormos: I listened carefully to the speech of the member for Beaches-East York, Mr Prue, and I want to tell you that once again he's hit the nail right on the head. I am concerned that the minister who just spoke in response to Mr Prue's extremely capable analysis of this bill may well not have listened as carefully as I did, because Mr Prue was far from uncritical of this legislation. Mr Prue, in his analysis—and he focused on but two specific areas—pointed out again the incredible weakness of this legislation and its inability to really do what the minister who sponsors the bill would purport that it does.

There are anti-fraud provisions in the bill, but where is the real fraud here? Are the people being conned? Are they being taken? I am worried that in fact what is being passed off as consumer protection legislation is nothing more—and quite frankly, having read the bill, I find it to be little more—than a modest tinkering with the existing law. In fact, a great deal of the existing law is merely restated in this legislation. Think about it, friends. Take a look. There's a whole lot of this that is hardly new at all: same old, same old. Mr Prue doesn't think that's adequate, I don't think that's adequate. Fair-minded people across this province know it's not good enough.

I am going to have a chance to speak to this later this afternoon—Mr Christopherson has graced me with his one-hour leadoff—and I've got some things to tell you about this bill, its gross shortcomings, the inadequacies, indeed what I put to you as a betrayal of hard-working folks in this province, the kind of people I live with down in Niagara Centre, folks in Welland, Thorold, Pelham South, St Catharines who, by God, are being scammed once again.

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): Although, I have to tell you, I never heard the comments the other day from the member from Beaches-East York, I look forward to debate later this afternoon on this piece of legislation. I'll be speaking as part of the Progressive Conservative caucus's rotation here later this afternoon and look forward to discussing this very, very important piece of legislation.

I congratulate Minister Hudak for bringing forth this piece. It is important to consumers here in our province. I look forward to more comments surrounding some of the things that Mr Bradley, the member from St Catharines, said earlier.

I guess on a daily basis we're trying to figure out where the Liberals stand on hydro deregulation. They're flopping all over the place. I guess it's on an hourly basis now. It's like the IMO, the Independent Market Operator, checking the prices. One second they're talking about deregulation and all the wonderful things about it, then they're against privatization.

One thing I've got to tell you, Mr Prue, from our perspective in this caucus, is that we know where the New Democratic Party stands on hydro deregulation. Although we don't always agree with everything you say, at least I applaud you for taking a stand and staying firm in your commitment.

Again, I look forward to the debate as we go on this afternoon, and I appreciate the opportunity to make a few comments at this time.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Beaches-East York has two minutes to respond.

Mr Prue: I thank the minister, the member from Guelph-Wellington, and the members from St Catharines, Niagara Centre and Simcoe North. I wish that some of them had heard a little more of my speech the other day, but I do understand that after several days members opposite may not have been in the House that day. Just to go over what I did talk about, I briefly alluded to the hydro scams that were out there, but, in the 20 minutes available to me, went on to talk about two things that I do not believe this bill contains and that the minister should have a very good look at. If we're going to talk about consumer protection, there are two very real places where a huge number of consumers are being ripped off on a daily basis.

One of them has to do with the white ABM machines, those machines you find that are not part of a chartered bank in Canada, that are simply set up sometimes in shopping malls or that are set up independently in ordinary stores. They charge what is considered by many to be usurious rates to access them. I gave the example, and my colleague Gilles Bisson was sitting beside me, of the time in Moosonee where I was with him and he needed $100 and it cost $7 to take $100 out of the machine. Quite literally that, to me, seems usurious. That is the only machine that is in Moosonee and that entire community has only that one access. Seven dollars every time you need money from a bank machine is quite disgraceful.

The second thing I talked about was all of those cheque-cashing places where poor people have to go to cash their cheque or to get an advance, some of which charge up to 500% interest per year on the basis of fees and interest. The minister ought to look at putting those in.

I have no objections to what is contained in the bill. What I did speak about are those things that are not contained in the bill that should be there. I hope the minister was listening, and I thank everyone for their comments.

The Deputy Speaker: Before the member for Beaches-East York goes off, would you please stand in your place and open your jacket so we can see that Halloween tie?

Applause.

Mr Prue: Isn't that a great one?

Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Prue: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Perhaps if I could lend it to the member from Niagara Centre, it could be the first time he's ever worn a tie in this House.

The Deputy Speaker: That's not a point of order, but I'm sure it's agreeable with everybody.

We will continue with debate on Bill 180 and I'm looking in rotation to my right to the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services from Guelph.

Hon Mrs Elliott: I'm very pleased to be able to rise and speak to this bill this afternoon. I think my colleague from Simcoe North and my colleague from Nipissing are going to speak as well this afternoon on this very important bill.

As I mentioned in my remarks, this is a very substantial piece of legislation of 162 pages that our minister has brought before the House. It has been brought forward because there have been many long-standing issues raised by consumers, and it's our government under Minister Hudak that has come forward with the Consumer Protection Statute Law Amendment Act, or Bill 180.

Before I came to this place, I was a small business person. Although in my small business I had never really had much experience with fraudulent activities—certainly not as a direct result of my own business being involved in any situations of fraud—it was only really as an MPP that I began to have personal experiences with individuals who from time to time had been involved in fraudulent activity or, most importantly, had been a victim.

I think the majority of us would probably anticipate that victims would mainly be seniors, and that's in fact the case, but I was also surprised to learn how many students had been victims of fraud and, in many situations, people of low income who perhaps may not have been educated or felt bold enough to complain when things had gone awry.

I am told that the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services probably receives about 40,000 complaints a year from consumers who feel in some way or other they've been victimized by fraud, whether it's some sort of phoney charity or some sort of contract that never materialized, promises of wonderful things. Of course, the old adage is always true: if it sounds too good to be true, it probably isn't true. Nevertheless, people always want to believe in others. They are always hopeful that good things are going to happen to them in this life, and people do indeed fall victim to scams.

The top five most common scams we hear about are: advanced-fee loans scams, where a loan broker asks for an upfront fee before providing a loan; credit repair, where someone promises they'll fix your credit rating for a fee; home repairs, especially through door-to-door soliciting; motor vehicle repairs; and movers who may hold your possessions hostage for a fee.

I'm sorry. I'm finding it very difficult to concentrate because my colleague across the way from Welland has actually put on a tie in the Legislature. I think in the seven years I've been here, that's probably the first time I've ever seen him appropriately dressed in the Legislature. Congratulations. I hope it feels great and it becomes a pattern. At any rate, now that I've got that out of my system, I'll be able to concentrate.

Scams do a couple of things. They shake the confidence of consumers who, for the most part, deal with wonderful business people who try very hard to provide good services and goods. But when people have a bad experience, it tends to colour their thinking about how the world really works, and this is most unfortunate. It's kind of the same as when people hear of break-ins and that sort of thing: they begin to feel less secure in their neighbourhoods, and that is not what we want in the province of Ontario. As much as we want people to feel safe and secure in their homes and on their streets and in their neighbourhoods, we want them to feel secure in their business relationships with the various people they purchase goods from in their communities.

As I said, we are concerned about seniors and students, but the other, I guess if you will, victim in scenarios of scam or fraud are businesses that are very legitimate businesses and work very hard to keep their reputation strong and vital. Many businesses in my community of Guelph-Wellington spend a great deal of time on community efforts, contributing to charities and so on and going above and beyond the everyday duties of running a business and selling products or services. When they see fraudulent activities occur, when their clients or their customers have these things happen to them, it casts a bit of a pall upon everybody. So if we can take actions to prevent fraud or, if it occurs, allow venues for citizens to seek redress as soon as possible, then that is exactly what government should be doing and I know that is the minister's intent in introducing this very comprehensive legislation.

Now, top of mind, most of us would probably think of fraud particularly in relation to telemarketing. I don't know about your household, Speaker, but certainly in my household, it's not uncommon for calls to be received, generally it seems around supertime, with people offering one service or another, and quite often they're very straightforward. It's a food service or it's a roofing service or it's a window service, but not necessarily so. Perhaps the more sophisticated the line, the more dangerous the situation is. This legislation, we believe, will help people from being taken advantage of in a number of situations like that, allowing them to be more informed by giving them information about the kinds of things to ask, the kinds of things to watch out for so they're not so susceptible and giving consumers the ability to cancel contracts more readily if they have an uneasy feeling. Quite often, what happens with seniors is they make a decision and they think it's the right thing, but they get talking to their sons or their daughters, who say, "Gee mom, gee dad, I don't know if that was the right thing to do. Let me have a look at that contract. Tell me more about that call, that decision you made." This legislation will improve the opportunities for those consumers to get those contracts cancelled.

Of course, the other part of this is clearer laws for consumers and for businesses to know what their rights and obligations are. This also gives more enforcement powers to the ministry, so when scam artists are discovered, we can shut them down.

We're very pleased to introduce this legislation as part of the Ernie Eves government. The most recent legislation passed along this topic was in the 1960s and 1970s and I know that the Minister, when he introduced it in September, referenced the fact that the Internet didn't even exist, televisions were relatively new luxury items and that the world has really changed a lot over the last while, and that is so very true. We're supposed to live, I think, in a paperless society, but it seems to me that we live in a time when there's even more information coming at us, whether it's on television or in print, and consumers are offered more and more. Our society is becoming more and more affluent, thanks of course to the sound economic climate we've been able to establish here in the province of Ontario under former Premier Harris and Premier Eves. So we have more disposable income to spend on various services, and it's only appropriate that we make sure we make laws that are as timely and as effective as we possibly can.

In my own riding of Guelph-Wellington, time and time again I've met with real estate brokers who have really hoped that our government would introduce changes to the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act. I want to just mention the fact that we have indeed done that. We've taken a very responsible approach by revising the act, continuing with the office of the registrar and the director, requiring that persons trading be registered. The registrar is going to be permitted to deal with complaints made about registrants, and the power to inspect and investigate will be continued and modified. A discipline committee has been established. Brokerages are required to maintain trust accounts and unclaimed funds passed on to the administrative authority. There are provisions to prevent conflicts of interest, unethical behaviour, and general provisions to do with secrecy and to protect consumers.

I had an experience not so very long ago myself when I saw first-hand a situation in real estate where it wasn't actually a situation where a law was broken, but it was certainly bent. The one agent involved explained to me that what had occurred was not all that uncommon; disappointing, yes, but not all that uncommon.

Our minister has been conscientious enough to bring this forward, and I know that the real estate brokers in my riding of Guelph-Wellington—and here's the minister in the House here today. Congratulations, Minister, for introducing this.

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): You're speaking very well.

Hon Mrs Elliott: They were really thrilled to see this included because it's their profession that is tarnished when individual brokers or individual agents make errors. Particularly in the case of a house or someone is buying a condominium or something of that sort where they're putting a huge amount of their personal investment into a property like that, probably the largest investment they're going to make in any single thing in their lifetime, when things go awry or the deal is clouded or upset, the worries are great and the potential financial loss of course is tremendous. So security in this area is particularly important.

In this bill, the minister took a very close look at things that were most important to our constituents: housing—obviously very, very important, and he's spoken directly to that issue in the act; vehicles; and travel. Over the last few years since we've been here, and before, every now and again we would see in the newspaper article after article where something would have gone terribly awry with an agency and those travelling would have been left holding the bag, wondering. Story after story would say, "How are they going to get home? How are they ever going to be reimbursed for this?" The minister has addressed that and worked very hard to try to solve that problem that, again, is expensive and leaves people in a very vulnerable position, particularly to do with travel, when their expectations were high for a very positive experience. In vehicles—very similar to what I just described in housing.

There are a few key principles that this bill has tried to address—for instance, extending consumer protections to services as well as goods. We often think in terms of someone buying something. Certainly the constituent who came to my office shortly after we were elected in 1995 was talking about a good. A very slick salesman had managed to sweet-talk his way into this lovely old gentleman's house, sold him a vacuum cleaner—the classic story. This gentleman, whose son had come and said, "Oh, gee, Dad, I think we're in a bit of a problem here," came to my constituency office for help.

Generally it is goods that people are concerned about. But it goes beyond the things we normally think about. It could be cable or cell phone, or lawn service, or home repair. This was one thing my aunt had great worries about—

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't believe there's a quorum. Could you check for quorum, please?

The Deputy Speaker: Would you check and see if there is a quorum present?

Clerk at the Table (Ms Lisa Freedman): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk at the Table: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you. The Chair recognizes the minister from Guelph.

Hon Mrs Elliott: Thank you, Speaker. I was speaking about home repairs and I was about to tell a story about my aunt, who, after her husband died, found it quite a challenge to begin to look after her home when she was widowed, because every time something needed serious repair, whether it was roofing or concrete work around the steps and so on, she was always suspicious of repairmen or companies that would come to give her assistance. The changes here in the legislation, whether she would know it or not, would give her comfort in that these companies will now—this legislation hopefully will be passed before too very long—be held more accountable.

This legislation also extends protections to leases. It used to be in days past the business of business arrangements. Now, though, it can be anything, like cars or computers. So consumers will now know the true costs of the lease—clear disclosure—allowing people to have the opportunity to read and understand the fine print and deal with it, if in fact they sign up for something that they weren't anticipating they were signing up for. Because there's also a re-emphasis on the ability for consumers to revisit a decision through the 10-day cooling-off period which we introduced a couple of years ago. This is enhanced through this bill.

The other piece that I thought was very interesting and timely—as I said, some of these pieces of legislation haven't been looked at or revised for 30 to 40 years—is that the minister has extended protections to the Internet. Almost everyone, it seems, is using the Internet and has decided to make purchases. There is a suspicion as to whether their transaction will be secure. I think perhaps that has probably inhibited Internet transactions, because people are a little bit worried about it. It appears that the ministry is receiving about 250 complaints a year, so clearly this is something that's going to grow. I think the minister and the ministry are being very wise in stepping forward now and looking for the areas of concern that are going to erupt—

Interjection: As they always do.

Hon Mrs Elliott: —as they always do, and making sure that there will be safety and security as best we are able to provide in on-line shopping.

Of course, this is not only for the consumer, but this is also for business in Ontario. This is a very interesting way for business to expand and have a piece of the worldwide market they were not able to be part of before. It's actually a very exciting way of doing business. Before I came to this place I had a business. In addition to my regular storefront, I also had a mail-order business. I can tell you that in our small little shop I was amazed at how quickly the word would spread just through print. We did business in the Yukon. People would call us from the States. We had people call from Europe because we were offering products that were very unique and that no one else could get. If we had had an Internet site, I can't imagine how much business would have increased. Perhaps I wouldn't be here. I think he's being very wise in adding that.

Hon Mr Hudak: We waited till after you were here, though.

Hon Mrs Elliott: Thank you.

There was one point that I did want to mention which I thought was worth noting for listeners who might be wondering about all of the different parts of this bill. This bill would actually invalidate negative option billing. This is something that has bothered an awful lot of people over some time, where a business sends a mailer or includes something that implies that business will continue unless you say no. So monies can be taken from a bank account. Even though it's something you didn't request and don't particularly want, the law was such that this could continue and the onus would have been on the consumer, whereas now, if this bill is passed, it will in fact change that dramatically so that consumers who might have accidentally paid for something or find themselves entangled in an obligation or appear to be in an obligation to send money for something they don't particularly want, never wanted in the first place and didn't even know they were signing up for, will be protected through this legislation.

Again, not only from a consumer's perspective will we see wonderful results but also from a business perspective, because every time a company—a shady company, quite frankly—undertakes some sort of activity that puts consumers in a jam, treats them fraudulently, essentially steals their money in some way, shape or form, that casts a pall on other businesses and creates suspicion in the minds of people that people involved in business might all be shady, or that they have to be extra cautious. We should all be cautious. There's a famous Latin phrase, "Caveat emptor." One should always be very cautious every time they are undertaking an activity. But I think there is a very great role for government in ensuring that the laws are fair, that people are protected, and that if something does go amiss, there is a form of redress. I think in this very comprehensive piece of legislation the minister has worked hard to do that.

I am not going to go into any more details on this particular bill. As I said, it is very comprehensive, addressing the key areas that people have expressed concerns on over the years. I know that when we are coming forward in my Ministry of Community, Family and Children's Services to bring forward a change in policy or legislation, we look back through letters and correspondence and talk to stakeholders' groups to make sure we are remembering and have a listing of all the things people have said: "When you get around to changing this, add this to the list." "This is a problem. This needs to be revised." "This is out of date." "This is working very well, but it now needs a slight addition to it." That is how good legislation is built.

I look forward to hearing debate from my colleagues here in the House on this matter. I know the minister will be very pleased if the opposition, hoping to support consumers who are looking for protection, will see fit to support the Conservative government in bringing forward amended and improved consumer protection legislation.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): Just to respond to the minister's comments, first of all, it's probably one of the few times I'll say a couple of nice things about this government. Certainly there is a lot of good legislation here and there's a lot of stuff that is long overdue in regard to consumer protection.

What I would have loved to see, though, is for this to be expanded. There are areas that are not in the bill that are of concern to us.

There's no consumer protection from gasoline prices. There was a task force three years ago that made a number of recommendations, and none of those have been implemented. Anybody who looks at the gouging that's occurring at the pumps today, the price fixing, would agree that there should be, in this consumer protection legislation, something dealing with that.

There is absolutely nothing in here that deals with hydro companies. We in this House have seen the horrors of the rip-off artists and the scam artists and the rip-offs that are occurring as people are selling hydro contracts. There's nothing in this bill that protects those consumers. There's nothing that protects them from shoddy billing practices, again in regard to hydro. People have been duped into signing contracts. There are a lot of operators out there who are running scams, and there's nothing in this bill that protects us from that. The same would apply to the Ontario Energy Board and Union Gas, with decisions that are made to charge customers $120, and now your constituents and mine are concerned about those decisions.

As much as this legislation covers those areas that are important and need to be updated, I would hope the government will look to amend this legislation through committee to cover those areas that we talked about: gasoline prices, hydro rates, billing practices, Union Gas and the Ontario Energy Board. Mr Speaker, if you talk to most Ontarians, as I know you do to your constituents, the number one issue they are dealing with in most cases today is hydro. This legislation does absolutely nothing to protect consumers from what is happening with the rip-offs with hydro.

So a lot of good stuff, and lots more needs to be added.

Mr Kormos: I regret that the minister won't be able to respond to the praise contained in the comments and questions put to her speech.

I do note, however, and this is remarkable—I commend the minister who is the sponsor of this bill for being with this bill. It happens so rarely any more. It used to be a tradition here that either the minister or the parliamentary assistant escorted the bill, if you will, through its debate process. It has become the exception now, and we're noting it in its exception today. But my goodness, there are one, two, three, four, five cabinet ministers here and three government backbenchers. It's either an indication of the high regard the sponsor's fellow cabinet ministers have for the bill—and one of them is even part of the inner circle—

Mr Agostino: Which one?

Mr Kormos: She speaks for herself by her presence.

But I suspect it's more likely the difficulty in getting backbenchers to do House duty on Thursday afternoon. Their response is, as I can well imagine, "Oh, stuff it. You want House duty? You're making the big bucks. Do it yourself." We're seeing that happen, in fact. I regret that cabinet ministers, who are all incredibly busy and have schedules of their own that are incredibly demanding, are in here doing but House duty. On behalf of the government whip, I prevail upon the government backbenchers to please give their cabinet ministers a break. These cabinet ministers, while they make a few more bucks than you, work a heck of a lot harder than you backbenchers. They know it. They tell me every opportunity they can about how much harder they, as cabinet ministers, work than you backbenchers. But it's your job as backbenchers to support your ministers and do House duty, to give them the time they need to attend to their duties. Don't be calling upon cabinet ministers to do House duty. They've got far more important things to do. As I say, they'll tell you that if you give them the chance.

Hon Frank Klees (Minister of Tourism and Recreation): I just want to take this opportunity to compliment my colleague for bringing forward this important legislation.

The member from Niagara Centre mused about why cabinet ministers would be here in force to support our colleague. It really is for two reasons. One is that we have very high regard for the minister and for the work he has done. We know how much consultation took place over an extended period of time with stakeholders to ensure that this legislation would protect consumers, which is ultimately a responsibility of his ministry, and at the same time keep in place a level and a fair playing field for industry.

I was very much involved in a number of those consultations. I want to compliment the minister on making changes to this legislation that on first rollout would have in fact caused some concern to a number of industries that were affected by it. It's to the minister's credit, to the credit of his staff and in fact of all the members of the House who got engaged in this process.

At the end of the day, what is important is that when this legislation is passed, we trust with the support of the opposition, Ontario will be a much safer place in which to do business, and frankly it will be much more profitable for businesses who engage in these fair practices. I believe it will be one of the things my colleague the Minister of Consumer and Business Services will look back on in his career and take great pride in.

Mr Monte Kwinter (York Centre): I am pleased to add some comments. As a former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, I have a great affinity to this act, and I commend the government for it.

I have a few concerns, but I just want to share with you a situation I had, and it had to do with an unsolicited credit card. I received one, and in it was a bill for, I think, $175. I called the credit card company and said, "I don't want this card, and I'm certainly not paying this fee for it." They said, "No problem. We'll reverse it." I said, "Fine." Next month I got another bill, and it had 23 cents' interest for the amount of time the $175 was not paid. I called them back and said, "Why would I possibly pay the interest when I did not ask for the card?" "Oh, don't worry about that. We'll reverse that. No problem." The next month I got another bill, and it said, "Your credit is going to be seriously impaired unless you pay this 23 cents." I called back and said, "You know, this is getting ridiculous. I've already talked to you for three months." They said, "Well, don't worry. We'll change it." The next month the interest had gone to 27 cents. I called them back and said, "You know, this is really, really bad." So the last thing I did was speak to a representative, and they said, "I can assure you this will be reversed, but it may take a couple of months." The next day I got a letter from their credit collection department telling me that unless I paid this amount, I was going to be in serious trouble. When I finally called someone else, they said, "We have to apologize because this is all done on computer. There are no people involved and this is the standard procedure." It would seem to me it would be a good idea if somewhere along the line there could be some provisions that we actually deal with real people and not computers, so that things like this don't happen.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate? I'm looking in rotation clockwise, and we're going from the government side to my left and to the official opposition.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): I'm here today to speak to Bill 180. Going through this bill in the last couple of days, I want to say there has been a lot of work done on it. There's been a lot of research. It is quite a complex piece of legislation, with all kinds of amendments to existing legislation, to existing bodies, everything from real estate to time-share purchases to the Loan Brokers Act.

I think it is an important piece of legislation that deserves a lot of scrutiny. I'm glad we have an opportunity to raise some issues in regard to Bill 180. Maybe the government will be able to make a better bill by our comments. Maybe the public and the stakeholders who are going to be affected by this bill will be able to have some time. Hopefully there will be some hearings where people will be able to make comments and perhaps recommend amendments.

As I've said, these are sophisticated regulations that are being put forward. There are changes that will affect people's livelihood, not to mention the economic well-being of a lot of our citizens in Ontario. The bill is Bill 180. I hope a lot of people get an opportunity to have input in it and that the stakeholders will not be afraid to come forward and make suggestions. That will make for a better bill, and I think that's what we're here for.

Some of the areas it covers are areas of very chronic, constant consumer complaints. I will start with this whole area of time-sharing. This is quite a unique area of real estate, whereby people, in essence, don't buy a piece of land or don't buy the condo; they buy part of a structure for their own personal use for a certain number of days a year.

As you know, traditionally these have been rocked with problems. There are so many other conditions in terms of when they can use it, who pays for cleanup, who pays to use it at prime times and so forth. I'm glad that at least there is in this bill a 10-day cooling off period. The one thing I guess it doesn't cover is the poor visitors. If you go off-shore, whether it's Florida or whatever, you get accosted by people trying to sell you these time-share provisions. They ask you out to lunch and so forth.

I'm not quite sure if that is going to be protected, as a lot of these companies are not based in Ontario. I guess it's based on the type of real estate transaction that is happening in places like Collingwood, some of the new recreational areas where people are not buying a recreation property for all of the year, but for half the year or for the one season they prefer.

I am happy to see the 10-day cooling off period, because sometimes these can be much more complicated than they appear to be for the ordinary person who is signing such a contract for the first time.

There are some provisions in terms of Internet transactions. That is an area we are just entering into. There are so many things sold on the Internet, whether it be through Amazon.ca or Indigo or eBay and so forth, and there are so many complications there that I would hope this bill will at least monitor this growing area and perhaps report back on ways we can protect consumers as they do more and more purchases of goods and services on the Internet. It is wrought with pitfalls for the ordinary consumer who is doing this for the first time.

I've talked to people who speak very highly of eBay, for instance. I've never used it but there are people who have used it. They've had the goods delivered, the price is as is, the product is as is, and there are some guarantees offered to people. But I hope the provisions in this act will continue to monitor Internet purchases, which are becoming more and more commonplace, and the security of using your credit card to acquire goods and services on-line. That is becoming more and more acceptable to people as time goes on.

One other area I'd like to talk to you about is leasing. The largest area for leasing commercially that concerns people's biggest investment is automobile leasing. That is one area that is still fraught with all kinds of complications, and that is because one of the things that occurs with automobile leasing, which I remember asking Minister Tsubouchi at the time to try to do something about, is the fine-print ads. You've all seen them. They're in the daily newspapers, where they say it's $299 for a Ford Edsel. For $299 a month you can have the Ford Edsel. But when you read the fine print you realize that the $299 doesn't include the taxes; it doesn't include the inspection and delivery charges; it doesn't include a big fat down payment of $5,000; it doesn't include the fact that the $299 is for your standard automobile, without automatic transmission; it doesn't include the fact that the automobile just has vinyl or cloth seats or whatever it is.

That is still too common in the print media, for sure, day after day. I really think those ads are misleading. They don't give the true story or the true price of that automobile. They tend to give people a false impression of what the costs are. What is wrong with putting the full cost of that automobile up front, as big as the $299?

That continues to happen. I don't see that type of restriction about the false advertising that this bill deals with, about leasing especially, that this bill is supposed to try and correct. It does not prohibit that small-print advertising, which obviously works, because on a daily basis in the major newspapers in Ontario the automobile dealers or manufacturers must spend literally millions of dollars a day advertising in that fashion.

It's still going on and I don't think there is anything in Bill 180—maybe the minister, when he speaks to it, could correct that if I'm wrong. That's one thing I would like to get an explanation of. It's something I remember talking to Minister Tsubouchi about it at the time, and he said they were going to try to do something about it, but it's still very prevalent so I would hope there would be some way of doing that in the regulations or whatever it is, just to put the full price of that car more up front and have the explanations.

I think people are mature enough and smart enough to understand that cars generally are still a pretty good bargain in Canada. They're a good deal. Most manufacturers and car dealers have become more reputable over the years. So let's be more forthright with our advertising with the leasing or purchase of automobiles. So that's one of my pet peeves when it comes to advertising for automobiles, that is, next to your home, the largest purchase most of us will make in our lives.

Also, there are requirements for the registrar to take direct action if there is false advertising. If we reflect back—I was trying to think of the last time I recall the provincial registrar, whoever's in charge of false advertising, ever fining someone or putting someone to task for false advertising. It's a pretty rare occurrence. Either the advertisers are very above-board people who never engage in false advertising or we're not sufficiently involved in supervising and monitoring the advertising that goes on in the province.

I would hope that with the strengthening that is supposed to go on in Bill 180, we'll finally see some examples of where false advertisers are taken to task and fined for false advertising, because that in essence is the consumer's link with the purchase of products: the advertising. We rely so much on television advertising, print advertising and radio advertising; that is our link with the quality that we attach to a good or service. It is so important for consumers to have that faith and trust in advertising. Generally speaking, people in North America find it part of everyday life to respond to advertising. I guess we're conditioned that way. We can't basically move without advertising, whether it's billboard advertising or whether it's media, radio—it's constant.

So I would be looking forward in the near future, if this bill is passed and goes through royal assent, to starting to see some cases of false advertising brought forward by this legislation. I'll be looking for that, because again, in recent years I've seen very few cases of false advertising, which you would think would be in the paper to warn people that they should not believe everything they read.

The other thing that is very important is in regard to motor vehicles. There's another area where traditionally there have been a lot of problems in terms of people getting their automobile repaired and then, for what they pay for the parts or the service, do they have any way of knowing they were given a good deal or weren't given a good deal? As you know, sometimes for a brake job now you can pay over $1,000. We're not talking about the old days when you could get your brake drums and so forth, everything, done for $200 to $300. Now you're talking about a major outlay of money for someone who has his or her brakes done or has body repairs done. It's very expensive. I think it's very important that there be protection for consumers in terms of the money they spend for parts and for labour in regard to motor vehicle repairs.

Here there's supposed to be a minimum of 90 days, sort of a warranty, or 5,000 kilometres for a repair. I know that's not very much. It wouldn't take long, because in many cases we've seen where people essentially get a part or a repair job that will just last that long. Especially at this time of year, as you know, Mr Speaker, there are so many people who are, for instance, sold batteries they don't need. They're given tune-ups and the automobile doesn't even require a tune-up.

So I think it's important that the government be a protector of people who aren't experts in mechanics and aren't experts in electronics, which you have to be in automobiles now. I think that's one area where we want to see some government supervision of this field, because it's extremely expensive. You know, we're spending $1,000, $1,200, $2,000 for major car repairs, and as I said, repairs to the body of a car can run up to $2,000, $3,000, $4,000 or $5,000. So it's critically important that there be some protections there.

In the whole area of real estate and the brokers and the professionalism of brokers, I think that's also improved over the years, but it doesn't mean there can't be protections there for people who invest their life savings in buying a home or a condominium or investing in one of these. I would like to see more stringent requirements ensuring that trust accounts, in this case here, are certainly not abused, as they have been in some cases. There have been a couple of celebrated cases of people acting as lawyers who have misused money in trust accounts. This act is trying to do that. I hope it's stringent enough to ensure this protection takes place.

There are a number of other areas. I notice that the minister is here. I would just ask him if maybe in some amendments or in some future bill, because it seems they're, generally speaking, not interested in our amendments, but we have to at least propose them—I mentioned the fine-print advertising, which I think should be prohibited, but I'm not sure what the minister's response is to that.

Also, the whole area of consumer protection for the purchase of gasoline fuel for your car is another area that consumers over the last number of years have been very, very apprehensive about. In essence, if you ask most consumers of gasoline for their automobiles, they think there is price fixing and price gouging. They constantly ask me why there is no competition out there, why all the prices go up the same and all go up in unison, with very little variation between the retailers of gasoline products in the city.

As you know, we used to have that phenomenon every Friday of a long weekend: all the prices would go up four or five cents, and then when the long weekend was over the price would go down. Now they've gotten a little shrewder there. What they do now is that a lot of them sort of put the price up on the Sunday you come back rather than putting it up on the Friday, because they were getting caught in the act. At that time, a couple of years ago, I tried to get the government to pass the gasoline price watchdog bill, where we would get someone in government who would at least be able to look at the books of the gasoline/petroleum retailers and wholesalers just to see that they weren't fixing their prices and that they weren't gouging motorists and that the increase in price was caused by something that happened in Saudi Arabia or something that happened in the Gulf war. They would use any excuse to raise the price of gas. Saddam Hussein would say something and, boom, the price went up 10 cents. Ralph Klein would say something in Alberta—another 10 cents.

The public, to this day, is very cynical and skeptical about gasoline prices. It's not so much even the cost. They're not saying that the 72 cents or 73 cents per litre, and if you're buying premium it's up to 80 cents or so, is what they're complaining against; they're saying it's just the manipulation of the consumer by the three or four members of the oligopoly that controls all our petroleum and fuel products in Canada. They felt, and they still feel, used, manipulated by the oil giants.

I don't see anything in Bill 180 that gives any protection to consumers to ensure that there isn't price fixing, that there isn't this manipulation of prices, and also things like notification of price increases that are coming. We've always got to think, "Well, it's all in the system and they had to do it instantly." But this is fuel that they probably had in their reservoirs here for months.

Anyway, there's nothing in this bill that protects people from gouging at the pump, and that was something that was promised. I remember we raised such awareness about this issue, we even forced the government to appoint some task force they had running around. They made these recommendations and nothing's ever happened; they're not in this bill at all. Even the government's own weak recommendations are not. But it would be nice to have a person appointed by the Minister of Consumer and Business Relations whose job it was to be the watchdog for gasoline pricing, because I don't think there's anybody who feels that everything is basically above-board when it comes to gasoline pricing in this province. So there is one suggestion we have, that there should be some more protections.

I know the member from Essex, Bruce Crozier, has also recommended some legislation in this area whereby there would be more protection for people who were purchasing gasoline for their automobile.

The other area I'd like to go into is protection from the systemic, almost door-to-door abuse that takes place, has been taking place in this province with the gasoline marketers and now the hydroelectricity marketers. I think it's been one of the most shameful examples of government not doing its job. There have been cases I'm sure in all our constituencies, on both sides of the House, where these people have given door-to-door salespeople a bad name.

The Deputy Speaker: The member's time has expired.

Mr Colle: I'm sorry I couldn't get further into that but I appreciate the opportunity.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Mr Kormos: In a few minutes Ms Churley from Broadview-Greenwood is going to be—

Ms Churley: Toronto-Danforth, it's called now.

Mr Kormos: Ms Churley used to represent Broadview-Greenwood and now it's called Toronto-Danforth. It wasn't her choice to change the historic name of that great part of Toronto. Some Ottawa serving Liberal who clearly was out of touch with his own folks imposed that on them without consultation with those people, and Ms Churley simply rolls with it now.

Look, we're going to have a chance. It's going to be around 5:15 that I'm going to be able to start my one-hour leadoff on this, and I very much want to talk about fraud, about scams, about rip-offs, about deceit, about dishonesty. I want to talk about attacks on hard-working folks like the folks from Niagara Centre. I want to talk about betrayal; I want to talk about abuse of consumers and voters and taxpayers and citizens and all sorts of residents. I want to talk about an abandonment of the kinds of folks who live down where I come from and who I'm sure live in every other part of this province and how they're suffering as a result of it and the complete failure of this government and this bill, or quite frankly any other, to protect those same folks, be they senior citizens lining up on long waiting lists for long-term care, be they folks in our hospitals with growing deficits, be they kids who are being denied some of the most modest and basic educational resources and tools, be they young families who are burdened with higher and higher user fees and municipal and regional property taxes because of the downloading.

We're going to talk about fraud. Oh yes, just wait till about 5:15; we're going to talk about lots of it. In the interim, Ms Churley will have a chance to put her two minutes' worth in as well.

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): I listened closely when the member from Eglinton-Lawrence spoke and I am pleased to join in the debate on Bill 180. Our Minister Hudak, the hard-working member from Erie-Lincoln, worked very hard on this bill and I know it is of great interest to the people of Ontario.

I think of my great riding of Nipissing and I think of an individual, a hard-working individual. He owns his own business; he owns a backhoe. I was speaking to him today, Minister, and I was saying that I was speaking on this bill and that it was a bill to protect consumers. Here's an individual who works night and day just trying to get things across. His name is Bob Poeta, and I told him about this piece of legislation. He didn't fully understand what we were trying to do but he did appreciate that the government was taking an effort to protect him in his dealings when he really doesn't have the expertise. He has to depend on other organizations or individuals to help him through buying a house or buying a car. I was explaining what this legislation did, that it put in guidelines that help protect him when he goes forth to complete a transaction that, really, he doesn't fully understand. I can tell you that he really appreciated your efforts, Minister Hudak, to put this bill before the Legislature to at least give him peace of mind that when he's working all day and all night and he has to depend on other individuals, there's some protection for him, that his hard-earned money isn't just going to disappear on him.

Minister Hudak, I want to congratulate you on an excellent piece of legislation and I'm proud to support it.

Mr Agostino: I want to commend my colleague from Eglinton-Lawrence for those remarks. I know that Mr Colle has been an advocate of consumers' rights throughout his whole career here in the Legislature and certainly in the past has introduced a number of bills along those lines. I sure respect his expertise in this area.

He touched upon a couple of very important points that I touched upon earlier about what is missing in this legislation. Again, he talked about gasoline prices and the protection there. Most Ontarians see it; it happens on long weekends: the next thing you know it's six, eight, 10 cents more, and by coincidence every single gas station across the province just happens to be increasing its prices the same way. It must be some magic spike that they run into in prices simply before the long weekend and then it goes down—instead of the 10 cents it went up, maybe it goes down four cents, so we all feel better about it and think, "Oh my God, it's not as bad as it was a week ago." But it's still six cents more than it was the previous week.

This legislation gives absolutely no protection. If you're really serious, if you want to be a hero, Minister—there's some good stuff in here, but if the minister really wants to be a hero to all Ontarians, I would suggest he bring in some very tough legislation on controlling gasoline prices. I think anyone can relate to that. Anyone who drives a car understands what they go through, understands the rip-offs, the monopoly, that gasoline companies come together and collectively decide that they're going to rip off Ontarians and Canadians every weekday and weekend, literally every day you're driving a car.

Prices are basically skyrocketing, and I would think it would be welcomed by all Ontarians if this government brought in legislation that would protect consumers from one of the biggest rip-off and scam artists in the world, the oil companies and gasoline companies across this province and this country.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions? The Chair recognizes the member for Toronto-Danforth.

Ms Churley: Toronto-Danforth, not Broadview-Greenwood. I haven't changed my sign yet.

As the former Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations, as it was then called, I have to say I'm quite surprised to see the lack of real consultation that took place with some very knowledgeable people in the province. When I was at that ministry and we were doing some consumer updates, we consulted quite widely with experts across the province. There's one professor from U of T we dealt with because he is one of the best experts not only in Toronto and Ontario but in the country. His name is Jacob Ziegel. I remember talking to him on numerous occasions about changes and updates we were making.

He has written you a letter; you may be aware of this. He said that a colleague at Osgoode Hall Law School drew his attention to the bill—he hadn't even been informed about it—that his colleague had downloaded it from a Web site. He says, "Although I have taught, written on and generally involved myself in both federal and provincial consumer matters for many years, this is the first time I've heard of the bill." He goes on to say, "This troubles me"—and that of course he would like to have some input in this. I hope the minister will listen to this.

We're calling for hearings, but he's urging the minister to convene a round-table meeting of Ontario consumer law teachers for this purpose and to be able to provide some comments to the minister. Sometimes, as I learned, changing consumer laws can have serious legal implications as well. I remember Professor Ziegel was a very valuable asset, and I would recommend to the minister that he indeed hold that kind of round table before we pass this bill.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Eglinton-Lawrence has two minutes to respond.

Mr Colle: I want to thank everybody on this Thursday afternoon for taking the time to comment—and listen, hopefully.

The most amazing thing I guess in listening to everyone is the juxtaposition of this consumer bill with the unprecedented consumer almost revolt we see across Ontario. I don't think in all my years have I seen so many angry, anxious, upset people of all political parties who are just at their wits' end, trying to figure out who is protecting them when it comes to hydro and their utilities.

I'm sure it's the same in your offices all across Ontario: the phones are ringing off the hook. People are walking in off the street with their bills. It is non-stop. I just think of the government now that is proceeding with this bill, yet for the last year it has essentially allowed this to happen and taken all the wrong steps and no protective steps for consumers when it comes to hydro. It is probably the most botched consumer issue I've ever seen. I think if you ask people like the member from Renfrew, he'll tell you he's never seen a consumer issue that has affected so many Ontarians and so many Ontarians who feel so vulnerable, and the government is not protecting them.

So that's the question I have for this government: how can you, day after day, listen to these true-life horror stories about ordinary Ontarians who are trying to make a living and being assaulted by this total disaster called hydro? I don't know how the government can live with itself day after day with this going on.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate? Looking to my right, the Chair recognizes the member for Nipissing.

Mr McDonald: I'm pleased to join in the debate and speak in support of Bill 180, the proposed Consumer Protection Statute Law Amendment Act, 2002.

Bill 180 was introduced by the Minister of Consumer and Business Services on September 26, and we look forward to its speedy passage.

This proposed legislation combines six pieces of consumer protection legislation and three sector-specific statutes into one modern legislative framework.

The three sector statutes are the Motor Vehicle Dealers Act, the Real Estate and Business Brokers Act and the Travel Industry Act.

These sectors are regulated by the Minister and the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services because they represent some of the most significant purchases most people ever make, which include homes, vehicles and travel.

Bill 180 proposes to update and modernize the legislation regarding each of these sectors.

I would like to spend some time this afternoon speaking about the proposed Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, 2002.

Real estate is an enormous investment for any consumer. The real estate industry is thriving. It is vital that this proposed legislation come into force, as more and more resale homes are bought and sold in Ontario.

Real estate is booming in Ontario. The Toronto Real Estate Board reported the most sales ever in the month of September. In the Toronto area alone, 5,846 homes were sold through the Multiple Listing Service in just one month, and that's up 16% from last year.

I know that I made a call to the North Bay Real Estate Board, and they had told me the numbers are similar, that they were up substantially. Last September they sold 906 homes, versus 841 the year before. The capable individual, Evelyn Reid, who brought me all these statistics confirmed that even in northern Ontario, and specifically in North Bay, real estate is booming as well.

It was a very different situation back in 1995 when our government took office. The situation was grim. Housing starts were down, prices were down and people were waiting longer and longer before buying. Today we're enjoying the most sustained boom in the housing industry that has ever been seen. This turnaround happened because our government cut taxes some 200 times, leaving more money in the pockets of hard-working Ontarians that they could put toward big purchases like real estate and buying their own homes. We created over 900,000 jobs, giving more Ontarians a paycheque and a chance at owning their own home.

All the signs show that the real estate industry will continue to thrive. Projections tell us that by 2022 the population of the GTA alone will increase from 5.3 million to seven million people. That's an incredible growth. We also know that Ontario's population is getting older. In this quarter-century, it is estimated the number of people aged 65 and over will double from one million in 2000 to two million in 2026. Taken together, these facts tell us that a lot of existing homes are going to be bought and sold as consumers' needs and wants change over time.

Part of the reason for pursuing this proposed legislation is that our government wants to ensure the high standards of the real estate industry so that Ontario consumers will continue to live in homes they enjoy and the neighbourhoods where they feel comfortable and safe. Modernizing Ontario's real estate legislation to meet the needs of the people of Ontario is part of the government's plan for ongoing development of this vital industry and the continuation of the tradition of excellence in providing protection for Ontario consumers.

I know in my riding there is a young couple by the name of Scott and Cheryl Clark. They have two small children. Their names are Benjamin and Makayla. I know that they struggle, like the rest of us, to pay mortgages and credit card bills and to put gas in their vehicles. They understand, like most young families in Ontario, that this legislation will help protect them in the long run as they continue with the worthwhile goals of raising their young family, putting them through school and making sure they get to hockey or ballet or whatever they might want to put them in. This young couple—I'm thinking of Scott and Cheryl—who really are community leaders and volunteer a lot of their time in the community, need this type of legislation so that they can continue on their daily lives and not have to worry that somebody is ripping them off. I think it is key to this legislation—Bill 180 that we're speaking to tonight—that it pass through the House with all members of this Legislature agreeing that this legislation helps protect the average hard-working individual, whether they live in northern or southern Ontario. This helps all the people of Ontario.

In the development of this bill, the government has worked with consumers and entrepreneurs in real estate to help us develop this legislation. We've talked to entrepreneurs, individuals and hard-working families. Minister Hudak has shown his leadership in this ministry. He's shown that he understands how hard-working families need to be protected in all these different sectors, but specifically in the real estate sector. Even the real estate entrepreneurs say that there are needed legislative guidelines that they may follow, because they're very proud of what they do and they're very proud that they help hard-working young families buy their first house or move into a bigger house as their family grows. I think it's key that we all recognize that this piece of legislation will help all these families go on about their normal lives and not have to worry that something untoward is going to happen.

Consideration of the new real estate and broker legislation began about the same time as the day-to-day responsibility for administering the act was delegated to a private, non-profit corporation established for the purpose called the Real Estate Council of Ontario, or RECO, in 1997.

RECO was created to protect consumers and to administer the regulatory requirements of the real estate sales industry as established by the government. Under a 12-member board of governors, RECO delivers services in four key areas: registration of real estate sales persons and brokers; consumer protection, including the establishment of mechanisms to protect the consumer from financial harm; compliance, including the inspection, investigation and enforcement of the legislation; and professional standards, including the development and promotion of professional development, accomplished through mandatory continuing education programs.

In terms of consumer protection, a report commissioned by the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services to evaluate the success of RECO said, "The implementation of more stringent registration requirements illustrates RECO's dedication to maintaining high standards in enhancing consumer protection."

Throughout the development of the proposed new Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, RECO has offered ongoing expert recommendations and advice for which the government is appreciative.

How was the proposed legislation developed, you might ask? In the autumn of 2000 the ministry held a series of consultations to seek the opinions of consumers and businesses on our proposals for this legislation. More than 400 submissions offering insightful and constructive comments were received. Then the ministry sent out consultation draft legislation last summer. Once again, helpful comments and suggestions from real estate and business brokers and other professionals, as well as consumers and consumer organizations, helped to improve and finalize the real estate portion of Ontario's proposed consumer protection legislation, Bill 180.

The bill before this House today reflects considerable input. It would strengthen consumer protection in a new century, encourage the development of a level playing field for businesses and create the flexibility to respond quickly to changes in the real estate sales market.

Advertising: this proposed legislation would help provide increased protection for consumers through a number of features, including the introduction of new stringent advertising provisions. If the registrar believes, on reasonable grounds, that a real estate professional is making a false, misleading or deceptive statement in advertising, the registrar could not only order the use of the material to be stopped, but could also order the statement to be retracted and/or for a correction of equal prominence to the original to be made.

The correction could be placed in the newspaper or other publication, including, by the way, the new and popular virtual home tours offered on the Internet.

When we speak about specialists, another benefit to the consumers in Bill 180 is that, if passed, it would allow for the recognition of specialists to let consumers know more about the qualifications of their real estate professional. This would be made possible through a proposed new provision that would allow areas of specialization to be recognized. Under this proposed new REBBA, the salesperson or broker would have to be certified as a specialist in a particular area in order to advertise themselves as such.

In fact, you may have heard some discussion in the legal community around this requirement. Many lawyers, including many lawyers I know in my riding of Nipissing, are involved in real estate transactions in the normal course of their practice. I understand that the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services heard from lawyers who were concerned that this bill would mean they would only be allowed to perform these real estate duties if they were a real estate broker or a salesperson. This is absolutely not the case at all. There is a simple clarification in the bill that when a solicitor conducts a real estate transaction, it must be in the course of his or her duties as a lawyer.

You might want to ask what the definition of an "interested person" means. Another important consumer protection advantage of Bill 180 is the introduction of the concept of an "interested person." Although it's not common in the real estate industry, I'm sure all of us have heard of a business gone bad. Sometimes, due to the conduct of a person who makes false statements in their application for registration, who may be financially unstable or whose treatment of consumers is terrible, the registrar of the REBBA has to decide that this person may not participate in an Ontario real estate sales business.

Our proposed new legislation would give the registrar the authority to take into account the influence that such an unregistered person could have upon another family member or a business acquaintance. For example, such an unregistered person could persuade a spouse or a friend to open a business and to become a frontperson—a frontman or frontwoman—so that the person could continue to engage in behaviour behind the scenes.

Our proposed legislation would protect against this. I believe this legislation would make this type of situation impossible. That's one of the reasons I stand up and believe in this legislation so strongly, that it will protect the hard-working men and women of Ontario. These individuals, who may be young families, need protection. I ask every member in this Legislature to support this act that will help protect the hard-working men and women, the young families, of this province.

You might ask about enforcement. I know Minister Hudak was very concerned, that he had to put some teeth into this legislation, and I think we should stop and talk about enforcement for a moment.

Consumer protection in the area of real estate would also be improved through the increase of maximum penalties applied through the courts, in situations where an individual is convicted of an offence, to $50,000 from the current $25,000 fine. Minister, that's quite an increase. The terms of imprisonment would increase to a maximum of two years less a day from the current one year maximum. Those are pretty tough penalties.

Practitioners convicted of an offence under the proposed act could also be required to pay court-ordered restitution to consumers. I think that's important, that these young families trying to raise their children and put them through hockey and school and ballet be able to recover should this situation happen. In other cases, the discipline committee and appeals committee established under the proposed new REBBA could require the payment of fines of up to $25,000.

If the proposed legislation is passed, and I am hoping all members of this Legislature agree, the assets or trust funds of registrants and former registrants might also be frozen, if it were advisable for the protection of the clients.

Among the advantages Bill 180 proposes to offer the typical honest Ontario real estate brokerage are provisions to prevent conflicts of interest, including provisions prohibiting the employment of unregistered persons, provisions against salespersons and brokers acting for brokerages other than the one they work for, and provisions against inducing someone to break an agreement of a purchase or sale for the purpose of entering into another agreement of purchase or sale.

Also, the proposed new REBBA would address a problem that strikes at confidence in the real estate sales market. It would forbid real estate brokers or salespersons from falsifying or assisting in the falsification of information on mortgage applications or other documents relating to trades. Sometimes consumers are so anxious to own their dream home that they may decide to make their financial positions look rosier than they are in reality. While it may be taken as an act of sympathy, if a broker or salesperson helps a client to falsify an application the result is usually that the consumers may win the purchase but soon lose their new home when they can't make the mortgage payments. This behaviour hurts the reputations of real estate professionals in Ontario and would be expressly prohibited under Bill 180.

Bill 180 helps to achieve our goal of making a good law better for real estate professionals and for the consumers of Ontario. This proposed legislation, like all of the consumer protection initiatives currently undertaken by the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services, is based on three key objectives: fairness for the consumer, responsiveness to the needs of both consumers and businesses, and the creation of a more flexible regulatory framework, capable of providing a level playing field for businesses and adapting to the needs of the future marketplace.

The Deputy Speaker: Comments and questions?

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): There are a couple of things in the two minutes I have that I wanted to speak to in response to this speech. Firstly, there is some effort to address issues of consumers trying to use the courts in order to seek justice that they could not otherwise get. This bill might have considered—it might still consider—the opportunity presented through this Legislature with a private member's bill that I introduced on contingency fees, which permits consumers to turn to counsel, to lawyers, who would operate on a basis on which the legal fees would only have to be paid if there was success. Far too many Ontarians have absolutely no access to our brutally expensive justice system and, as a result of that, they aren't able to turn to it. If, of course, they can pay their legal fees after collecting a damage award, then that is good news for the consumer. I look forward to continuing to press the government to move forward, either through this bill or the Attorney General's own or by supporting and bringing through a private member's bill that I have now had pass second reading, for the sake of consumers who right now simply can't afford to access our justice system.

There's a second thing I would say is too bad it has not been tackled by this government, and that is this mandatory loansharking practice that exists whereby consumers have to pay interest rates on an account in their Toronto Hydro bill, and there are other utilities where that exists as well. Many people, just as negative option billing was very offensive to them, find this incredibly offensive and incredibly problematic. They don't like to get a Visa bill and not be able to pay the whole matter off. I look forward to hearing more about this from the government and solutions that they're going to bring forward for the sake of consumers in Ontario.

Ms Churley: I listened closely, some of the time anyway, to the member for Nipissing. I just found it weird that he had to start his whole speech with going through the litany of what he perceives or what he's told to say about all the sins of the previous government and all the great things they've done when we're talking about this consumer bill today. There are some very important aspects of this bill which we should be discussing, and I will be later, not today, but on another occasion. But he had to get into the whole litany that "The previous government ran up the debt, and there was this problem and that problem," before he got into his discussion about the bill. I listened to him stand there and actually say this with a straight face, that this government, their government, not only paid down the deficit—but he didn't say they borrowed money to give tax cuts to the wealthy and ran up the debt.

Mr Dunlop: Marilyn, get it right.

Ms Churley: I heard him. He said that under their government there's more housing starts than ever before. In a climate where we have more and more homeless people, we have no more affordable housing being built, we've got people's hydro bills going through the roof, we've got gas bills going up, he stands there and has to set the table for his speech about consumer protection by bragging about his government. In fact, it's collapsing all around you right now. The chickens are coming home to roost.

Mr Bryant: Seven lost years.

Ms Churley: Talk about seven lost years. That's what you're going to be hearing more and more of, because a lot of those cuts, and cuts may I say, to the ministry of what was—I call it still—the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, which this bill has amended and has made better, won't be worth the paper it's printed on unless you put the resources back in the ministry to enforce it.

Mr Dunlop: I really appreciate listening to the comments from the member for Nipissing, a great friend of mine and someone who is doing an excellent job in the riding of Nipissing.

I have to take exception Ms Churley's comments. "The chickens are coming home to roost." Is that what I just heard her say? Minister Ecker just announced the September job creation for our country: 40,000 new jobs—that's what I gathered; I think I can count that well—and 32,000 of them were created here in the province of Ontario. That sounds to me like something that's fairly successful. That sounds to me like our economic policies are working, especially when I listen to the comments from the finance minister of the federal government and he claims we have a northern tiger here in our country. The jobs are all being created here in the province of Ontario, the economic engine of Canada. Even our own federal finance minister realizes this. To hear her say that the chickens have come home to roost with a poor economy etc is simply false and simply wrong.

We can talk all day about this because we're all going to be making further comments on this particular piece of legislation in a few minutes, but I think the member did an excellent job. I appreciate the brilliant comments he made. It was a great speech and I commend him for that.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): We have a bill that talks about consumer protection. Who could be opposed to that?

I was listening to the byplay about who created how many jobs. I've been around awhile, and the last time I checked Ontario had about 12 million people. By my reckoning of federal and provincial finance departments, we must have 40 million jobs in the province, because every time I turn around somebody's standing up, regardless of party, to say they've created more jobs than there appear to be people in the province and that's a good thing, because apparently finance departments, nobody—no chancellor of the exchequer ever wants to say there are fewer jobs.

I think consumer protection is a really good thing. I want to say two things.

The bill is good, I think, in some respects around the minister and others providing helpful and timely information to consumers. I hate to be like a broken record, but I'm going to tell you—and we did it. We, on the retailing of electricity contracts, allowed a bunch of bad actors to run around Listowel, Pembroke, Etobicoke and Port Colborne and misrepresent themselves, misrepresent government companies and rip off particularly old people. We did it. We did it at two levels: our company did it, and we, with knowledge aforesight, allowed it to happen when we were warned not to do it. Now, of course, we are going to pay a price.

The second thing I want to say is how government in other ways has a conflict of interest. I shouldn't confess this. You know, I get the occasional speeding ticket. It's too bad my friend the Attorney General is not here. You know what enrages me? To get a victim assistance charge on a speeding ticket. Boy, as a consumer it's nice to see my provincial government rip me off one day and stand up in the nearest pulpit the next day and say, "We, your government, are here to protect you against bad consumer practice."

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Nipissing has two minutes to respond.

Mr McDonald: I'd like to thank the members from St Paul's, Toronto-Danforth, Simcoe North and Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke for their comments. I must say the people of the riding of Simcoe North are very well represented by a hard-working member. They're extremely lucky they have Mr Dunlop representing them. I can tell you how hard he works down here at Queen's Park, but you probably know that.

My partner Wendy Abdallah drove all the way from North Bay. She was very excited to hear about this legislation. Minister Hudak, she was excited because she has sisters and brothers who see this legislation as a way of protecting their young families and she was very appreciative of the fact that you've worked so hard to bring this great legislation forward. I can tell you she was a bit shocked that the members, or a couple of them over there anyway, because that's all who are here, are not supporting this. She finds it hard to believe, and I find it hard to believe, that they're not wanting to protect the hard-working young families in Ontario when they purchase probably the biggest investment they make as a family: their first home. These individuals who are not supporting this: shame on you. These individuals work hard. They're trying to put their kids through school. They're taking them to hockey, ballet, through school, and you know what? They're not supporting this.

Minister Hudak, you know there's an old saying that just because people say, "You can't do it, you can't do it"—I am glad that you're showing leadership. You're showing that you're protecting the hard-working men and women, the young families of Ontario and I'm very proud of you.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Gerry Phillips (Scarborough-Agincourt): I'm pleased to continue the debate. I'll start by saying that one of the things that we in the Legislature have to do a lot more work on is finding ways that government can keep up with the speed of business. My background is business, as is that of many of the other legislators here.

I've always felt that governments of all political stripes have not seized the initiative in finding ways that we change legislation at the pace that business changes.

I have been one who has supported omnibus legislation here of this nature, omnibus legislation which is designed to help us change legislation quickly on matters that are frankly non-controversial but require quick change. I've always supported legislation that will allow us to adapt and change our laws as quickly as possible, so I would encourage the government to find ways so that we respond much more quickly to changing technology and changing business practices. All of us met two days ago with the chiefs of police from across the province, who were urging us—they had three or four messages for us. One, by the way, was urging the government to get on with the integrated information system in the justice system.

They were also urging us to change legislation quickly to allow them to more quickly adapt and use technology. I think I've said this before in the legislature. I was one who had difficulties with photo radar when it was first introduced. But if we accept that our police organizations do not have the resources to do some of the jobs that historically they might have done because they are very much dealing with major crime, with serious crime issues, we do need to adopt technology. What we here in the Legislature need to do is make sure that our laws change at the right pace. So I'm one who supports government bringing in legislation that allows us to change our laws as quickly as possible. I make the one proviso that if there are provisions in a bill that truly do require substantive debate, those things should not be part of an omnibus piece of legislation.

I will say two or three things: one is that while this talks about consumer protection it does not provide, in my opinion, protection in some areas that the people I represent have been extremely angry about.

I want to start with one of them: the 407. The government said, when the 407 was sold, that they had a provision that would ensure that tolls could not be raised beyond, I think they said, the rate of inflation over 15 years. What they said was that after 15 years tolls might go up three cents a kilometre. That's essentially what the contract with the public was, and I think the public took the government at face value and accepted that as what was going to happen.

We now find that it appears that something different happened, and the owners of the 407 are now saying, "No, no. When we bought this, the deal was that we could take the tolls up without limit." As a matter of fact, the 407 owners invested initially about $700 million of equity investment. That's now worth four times that. SNC-Lavalin, one of the major owners, invested $175 million; it now is worth $700 million. After three years, actually, it went up that much.

The reason I'm raising it here for consumer protection is that on the one hand the people of Ontario were told by their government, "Here's the deal. We've got controls on this road that will ensure that tolls cannot go up more than three cents a kilometre after 15 years.” Well, in many cases within three years—in one case the tolls have gone from four cents a kilometre to 11.5 cents a kilometre. The reason I raise that is, where’s the protection for the public in perhaps the area that I think they have the most right to expect protection, and that is protection from their own government? Again, the reason I raise it is that this bill doesn’t deal with it.

It’s particularly germane because today we found out that it is the plan of the Eves government to sell a very major part of something called Hydro One, using the same process we saw in the 407. So here we find now that the people of Ontario are faced with hydro bills that all of us are getting calls about—dozens, if not hundreds, of calls about rapidly rising hydro bills. Yet the government is proceeding behind the scenes to sell off a major part of Hydro One, which is the company that runs the wires that get the power from the generating plants to the local utilities or directly to your home, sell it off, using exactly the same process as the 407.

I would just say to the public, here was the process: the request for proposals on the 407 was private; the people who were bidding on it helped to write the request for proposals, and we in the Liberal caucus have been spending the last three years trying to get made public something called the “tolling agreement,” which is the agreement that sets the rates for tolls. We’ve been denied that. Why? Because the government signed a deal with the owner that allowed them to keep it private.

Where does that lead us on consumer protection? The average user of the 407 right now is paying $2,500 a year in tolls. That’s an amazing statistic when you realize that if you happen to be unfortunate enough to have bought your home somewhere along the 407 and need to use it to go to work, you’re paying $2,500 a year—for most working people that’s after-tax dollars—and somebody who happened to buy a home along the 403, the 410, the 401 is paying zero. There was no consumer protection in that deal the government signed that would allow for some oversight of the tolls.

That’s why the companies that own the 407 are thrilled with it. The 407 is regarded as the most lucrative toll road in the entire world. It’s the only privately owned toll road in the world where there are no controls on tolls. The lease is a 99-year lease—most leases on private toll roads are 30 to 40 years—and that’s why the toll road owners are so thrilled with it.

Again, I go back: this bill does not provide for what may be regarded as the most fundamental rights of the consumers, and that is that when their government sells one of their assets to the private sector, they have a right to understand the terms and conditions under which that’s sold and what it’s going to mean to them. I say to us here in the Legislature that the Minister of Finance today said, “Yes, we are going to use the 407 process because we’re very proud of it.” That process allows the government to do all the negotiation in private. In the end, if they use the 407 model, they will sign a confidentiality agreement so that selling the Hydro One assets will prohibit us, the public, from finding out what is in that deal. That’s one piece that’s not in here: protection for the public when their government decides to take an asset that used to be publicly owned and sells it off.

The second point I want to make, and my colleague Mr Conway alluded to it, is the lack of consumer protection there has been for consumers who have signed contracts dealing with hydro. We here in the Legislature have been debating this issue for months. We regard ourselves, I think, as comparatively knowledgeable about this issue. I say “comparatively” because I think very few people, myself included, understand it completely, but we’re comparatively knowledgeable. Frankly, I would be surprised if there’s anyone in this Legislature who can make a determination on whether it is best to be signing on to a fixed contract or to simply let the rates flow. I don’t know the answer to that.

I think the average person would have an enormous problem in determining whether it’s a good or bad deal. I have no doubt that the companies running it have got it figured out, because it’s at least hundreds of millions of dollars that they’re prepared to invest in this adventure. They no doubt have figured out how they’re going to make sure they don’t in the end get caught holding the bag. But I don’t think the average consumer can in any way figure this out.

We’ve unleashed a process out there where people are knocking on doors, and frankly we’ve exacerbated it because anybody who’s paying attention to hydro, and I think it’s virtually everybody in the province now, is frightened. They’re wondering what is going to happen. So people, in my opinion, are being almost frightened into signing these fixed contracts, but they’ve no idea where it will lead. It’s not going to be enough to say simply, “Well, it’s just buyer beware, and if you can’t figure out the details of this complex agreement, that’s too bad for you.” So we’re to blame. We’ve unleashed this huge issue of hydro prices. We’ve thrown the people of Ontario to the wolves and, rightly so, they don’t know what to do, but I can assure you they’re signing long-term contracts with substantial financial implications to themselves.

Furthermore, as my colleague Mr Conway pointed out, at least many people in the province thought, “Hydro One is coming around to sell me this thing, and I’ve always trusted Ontario Hydro. We own it, so I assume that if we, the taxpayers, own it, if they mistreat me, somehow or other I’m going to have some recourse.” But what happened to all those people who signed the fixed contracts with Hydro One, the successor to Ontario Hydro? Suddenly they found that their contract was sold to another company, a completely different company from another province. That’s quite all right, quite legal, but I think people are now waking up, as Mr Conway has said many times, and saying, “Firstly, I’ve signed this thing. Part of the deal looks like I might be getting a rebate. I’ve signed the rebate away. I’ve signed on to a fixed long-term contract. I don't know what I signed. Furthermore, Ontario Hydro or Hydro One has sold it off."

As we look at this bill designed to update some legislation, that's very good and we need to do more of that. We need to find ways that the Legislature proceed much more quickly. It amends many statutes and it tries to bring these acts up to date with new technology.

I think the public is talking about two things that most directly impact them right now, namely the contracts they're signing on hydro and for many people in this area, Highway 407. The average daily number of people on there is about 400,000. It's not an insignificant amount, but it doesn't affect everybody in the province. But on both of those things—in the one case we've allowed a contract to go out that people are signing that you really have to be in the top—not the top 1% but one tenth of 1% of knowledgeable people on electricity to understand what you're getting into. On the other hand, on the 407 we've told the public one thing about tolls and we've allowed the 407 company to do something quite different. They both can't be right. The 407 company can't be right in saying, "We can take tolls without limit," and the government can't be right in saying, "When we sold this thing, we put in place a mechanism that would prevent tolls from being increased beyond the rate of inflation." There's no consumer protection for those two things in the bill.

I'll touch briefly on one last point because it was raised during the previous speaker's debate, and that is the importance in the Ontario economy of our trade with the US. Ontario is now the most export-oriented jurisdiction in the world. Nobody has a higher percentage of gross domestic product represented by exports to other countries than Ontario. About 10 years ago, it used to be 29%; it's about 55% now. While all governments like to take credit for the economy, jobs and whatnot, I don't think there's anybody, or at least very few people, who would dispute that the major reason for our economic growth in the last 10 years in Ontario has been the growth of exports. That's the major reason. It's not the only reason, but the major reason.

It's a testament to Ontario's business community that we've been able to do that. We've competed enormously successfully with the US. My only personal regret is that we haven't developed as much business outside of the US as well. I love the business in the US, but I wish we'd also be able to see that same sort of growth in other countries. Nonetheless, we're successful in the US.

The point I'm making here is that just as the government now, in setting tax policy, purports to compare taxes in Ontario much more to the US states than to other provinces in the country, we need to make sure that our consumer protection recognizes the international aspect of trade. It happens that this bill deals with the Loan Brokers Act. I'm proud to say that was a private member's bill that I developed, I might add, in conjunction with a reporter from the Sun, Linda Leatherdale, who really was the driving force behind it. But I was the person here in the Legislature who developed it, who put the bill together. It went a long way to stamping out the abuse by loan brokers here in the province of Ontario, and I'm very proud of that. But guess what happened? These companies continue to operate in Ontario, but now they're doing the bulk of their business in the US. They're located here, but they are gouging people in the US. The purpose of raising this point is that we now need to make sure that we recognize the global nature of our businesses and our trading. Perhaps I didn't write that Loan Brokers Act perfectly and perhaps there were some steps I could have taken in drafting the bill that would have closed those kinds of loopholes.

As I say, I don't believe the things that are front and centre right now, I think, with the people of Ontario are addressed by the bill; and those are the enormous concerns people have—and by the way, those concerns will be really highlighted in the months ahead, particularly when the electricity rebate is announced and those 20% or 25% of people who are now on fixed contracts realize that they're not going to participate in it.

So yes, we need to change our legislation. We need to find ways to change it much more quickly. Yes, we need to change our legislation to reflect the rapidly changing technology and the international basis on which all of our businesses are now conducted.

As I say, I think we've missed at least two: consumer protection from their own government action and consumer protection in the area of electricity.

Mr Kormos: I appreciate the comments of the member. I'm going to have the floor in around eight or 10 minutes' time.

Tonight we're debating the Safe Drinking Water Act. It is Halloween night. It's Thursday night. It was an interesting thing because the government approached me and indicated, "Oh, it's Halloween night, and our members don't want to be here." Well, that's fine, I understand, but we've got business to do. The government brought a motion to sit Thursday night. Now mind you, if there aren't enough government members around come 8 or 8:30, we may feel compelled simply to move adjournment of the debate. If they don't want to listen to it, then we can just move right along and set it over to the next day. As it is, there's hardly a member in here now. Mr Stockwell came to me and asked me if I'd agree, and I thought, "What would Ozzy Osbourne do?" I realized what Ozzy Osbourne would tell the government House leader, but that would be unparliamentary, so I just indicated, "No, I'm not making any deals." It doesn't work that way. You can't have opposition members here speaking to an empty House.

We want safe drinking water to be debated this evening. We want as many people as possible to listen to it. So opposition members are going to be here debating it. I'm looking forward to seeing the government members here tonight too as we debate the Safe Drinking Water Act. Sauce for the goose, sauce for the gander; that's what Ozzy would have said.

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: What is that thing around the neck of the member there?

Mr Kormos: Well, that's the way it is. I'll be wearing the tie this evening too in celebration of Halloween.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I'd just like to say this is another indication of why it's impossible to meet with the third party House leader. You go to him with an off-the-record conversation, to discuss the business of the House to see if we can have an agreement. Because yes, it's true, some members have children. We have to work tonight, and we were seeing if we could make an agreement to allow them to go home and take their children out trick-or-treating, which may sound to some degree—

The Deputy Speaker: Excuse me. I think we're off topic. I think we're responding to the member for—

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm responding to the member for Scarborough-Agincourt. That's exactly what the member spoke about. I guess that's the trouble in dealing with you, because nothing is in confidence, nothing can be discussed without you standing up here and doing what you just did, which diminishes everything. I'm not going to apologize. Yes, some people who work as politicians have children. Yes, some people in this place have responsibilities. And if one of those small responsibilities they have is to go home, hopefully, on Halloween night to go out with their children trick-or-treating, I was hoping against hope that we could somehow get some collegiality here, an agreement.

The Deputy Speaker: I think we'll have to either get back to the—Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm doing my best, Mr Speaker. I can only suggest to you that that was what he spoke to. I'm not sure how I'm out of order and he was in order.

Now, Mr Speaker, in closing, to comment to the member for Scarborough-Agincourt, I know him to be an honourable member, and I know others to be honourable members. That simple token of appreciation for members of all caucuses who have children could have been helpful. It's once again an example of dealing with you, Mr Kormos: asking you in confidence and having a private discussion where you then stand up and make a pointed effort to diminish this place and diminish the hope that we could have any kind of relationship where any discussion can possibly be kept confidential. That's why, Mr Kormos, you are the House leader from hell.

The Deputy Speaker: I don't think that will help our deliberations here. I will ask all of you to bring your comments within the parliamentary system.

Hon Mr Stockwell: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to withdraw the comment that the member for Niagara Centre is the House leader from hell.

The Deputy Speaker: Thank you.

Mr Gerard Kennedy (Parkdale-High Park): I'd like to speak to the bill and I'd like to talk about the fact that the government has a pretty poor track record when it comes to consumer protection.

A number of years ago, they said they were going to improve protection in other areas in an omnibus bill similar to this one. Real estate, for example, they made self-regulating, and there were things like pressure devices, amusement devices and so on, and, people may not realize, the elevators they travel up and down in. For example, if you were in this building, you would have seen until about a month ago that the elevators hadn't been inspected for about a year. The reason they weren't inspected I guess was some technicality, but the fact is that if they were inspected, it was by an authority set up by the people who construct the elevators, the people who service the elevators.

I would say we'll find out that the government is always pulled away from the essential thing for consumer protection, which is the public interest. The government sets up a contrast for us time after time. The private interest and the public interest are put, like magnetic forces, in the same room, and inevitably the private forces win out. That's what we've seen with travel agency self-regulation in other jurisdictions and so on, and inevitably and invariably this government finds itself in that predicament.

We see that we don't have in this bill some of the urgent consumer issues, the ones concerning hydro, for example, the ones about gasoline prices where people would like to see the government at least take an active interest and stop their only active finger pointing. We see that on the billing practices, some of the door-to-door sales practices that people have been subject to over hydro. Throughout the piece, the government has taken a laissez-faire attitude. We believe government should be there when they are needed, as a referee.

We saw the government back out of one of the biggest consumer protection things with rent controls, not being there when things are out of balance.

There may be some merit to this bill, but what's missing is a fundamental commitment that the government can actually pull it off.

Ms Churley: I would say at the outset that we should all be home tonight shelling out candy and being with our children and grandchildren. It's too bad that not just Tory members can't get to go home—anyway, I'm here tonight to debate the Safe Drinking Water Act.

I want to say to the minister and to the government on this bill that in some ways it's easy to bring in bills that protect consumers from obvious scam artists. We've got some obvious scam artists going around right now who are ripping off consumers on their hydro bills. So I've got lots of problems with the bill, and Mr Kormos will be outlining some of those issues later. Some credit should go to the government on some of this as well, but it's very difficult to do that when you have a government that with one hand is helping out some consumers in some cases but with the other hand is hammering them with those skyrocketing hydro prices and the gas charge prices.

You talk about how this piece of legislation before us today is protecting consumers. We have been hammering you day after day after day, week after week after week, month after month after month now about what's happening to consumers out there when it comes to their protection with their hydro bills and the scam artists that have been at their door signing them up, the fact that you guys have let these people loose on the consumers of this province. We offered a consumer protection remedy. Howard Hampton offered another one today to keep their hydro from being turned off during the winter months. Those protections that are so critical to people right now, you are ignoring, and you are not doing something for those very people.

The Deputy Speaker: The member for Scarborough-Agincourt has two minutes to respond.

Mr Phillips: Just for the record, I never mentioned Halloween, so I was not involved in the Halloween issue. But I appreciate the comments from the members for Niagara Centre, Etobicoke Centre, Parkdale-High Park and Toronto-Danforth.

Just to say it once again, I think the public look to how we deal in legislation with the private sector, but they also have a right to say, "Well, how does the government itself handle consumer protection?" That's why I return again to the two major issues I raised in my comments.

One is that I don't think anyone in this Legislature can say with a straight face that the contracts that are being offered to the public out there on hydro are understandable and provide a basis for people to make an informed decision. I repeat: I honestly don't know which is the right decision to take, even now. Yet people are being asked to sign deals that will cost them perhaps hundreds, if not thousands, of dollars over the next few years.

The second issue I raised is that the government, when they sold the 407, told the public one thing, and the 407 owners have done something completely different. As I said earlier, the average driver on the 407 who commutes is spending $2,500 a year on tolls and there is no control on it.

So I wish this bill had addressed those issues in addition to the ones it did.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Mormos: I should explain at the very onset that I am, with great pleasure, subbing for our member from Hamilton West, David Christopherson, who is the critic in this area. David Christopherson had planned to be here and indeed would have been here doing the leadoff participation in this debate on behalf of the New Democratic Party. Unfortunately, he had to rush back to Hamilton because today Hamilton Health Sciences announced dramatic cuts in their services. As I understand, it's shutting down 148 beds without being sure as to where those patients are going to go, among other things because the government hasn't flowed the dollars that were promised in the last budget to cover hospital deficits. So Mr Christopherson would have been delivering this leadoff but for his responsibility to his constituents. The critical position that this government has put Hamilton and area and the Hamilton Health Sciences in as a result of this government's failure to deliver those health dollars to cover deficits has resulted in Hamilton Health Sciences putting at risk, serious risk, the welfare of a huge number of Hamilton and area residents. It's unfortunate. It's incredibly unfortunate.

I tell you that, however regrettable it is, what we witnessed in Hamilton this afternoon as a result of this government's underfunding of health care and hospitals is at risk, and I predict will, without speedy intervention, be repeated in municipalities and with health services across this province.

Look, it's been said, and I'll say it again, Bill 180—Ms Churley just a few minutes ago indicated—who's opposed? Nobody can be opposed to consumer protection. I suppose any enhancement of consumer protection is, in and of itself, a good thing.

I want to reiterate our regret about the lack of consultation. We've got a copy of the letter that Professor Ziegel sent to Mr Hudak, the minister. Professor Ziegel, who's known to many of us, certainly known to Ms Churley, known to myself, is an expert. He's over at the University of Toronto law school. He's an expert in the area of consumer protection and has made himself available for consultation free of charge. This is what I can't understand. I was shocked to read this recent letter from Professor Ziegel, wherein he wasn't even made aware of the legislation being drafted, never mind presented for first reading. He found out about it because a colleague up at Osgoode Hall Law School encountered Bill 180 on the Internet.

Professor Ziegel, in his letter to the minister—and he has provided other people with copies of it, not inappropriately—effectively not only offers up his services in terms of consultation, but calls upon the minister, "Please, let myself"—Professor Ziegel—"and other experts get involved."

I want to tell the minister that he would be incredibly ill-advised, and has been ill-advised if in fact it was the advice that was given to him, yes, to exclude Professor Ziegel and others of that calibre from a consultation process.

My fear, my suspicion, is that this bill won't go to committee, and if it does, it'll be for the briefest of times, one of those slam-bam committee processes where it's in committee, then at 4 o'clock all those questions that have to be called are deemed to be called and it's put to a vote so the government majority rams it through.

Is there anything in and of itself offensive in the bill? Well, at the end of the day, no, because I suppose one of the observations that's so readily made is that in so many respects there's not a whole lot new in the bill. This is not just a redrafting but simply a reassembling of a whole lot of existing common law, some existing statute law and some minor tweaking here and there.

I put to the minister, and I welcome his response in this regard: I want to talk about some of the scams that are performed on the folks down where I come from, where my constituency office gets involved and where I've been involved.

Let me tell you one of the biggest scams. I appreciate that it's not within provincial jurisdiction, but I'd be interested to hear what this minister has had to say to the federal government about the scams that the banks do on customers on a daily basis. In my own personal experience one of the biggest offenders is the Toronto-Dominion Bank, where they've actually stolen people's money. They nickel-and-dime accounts, drain accounts with charges. Maybe I go back too far and approach these things a little bit simply.

I had a Toronto-Dominion Bank account here in the city of Toronto. I've talked about it in the Legislature before. Yes, I guess it had acquired the status of a dormant account. The money just sat there. I figured the money was safe in the bank. The bank was enjoying the use of my money. You understand what I'm saying? The bank was enjoying the use of my money, but they nickel-and-dimed me out of several hundred dollars. By the time I finally went to that bank and said, "I'd like to withdraw a couple of hundred bucks," I was told that I owed the bank money. That's a scam.

There used to be a time way back in the 1920s, especially in the United States, when banks were going belly-up in the Depression, where people acquired a great distrust for banks. Now, with any number of insurance schemes and so on, people have been reassured of the confidence they can have in banks. But at the end of the day you've got banks still taking people left and right: new charges and nickel-and-diming people with but savings accounts. I would urge people, if they've got money in the Toronto-Dominion Bank, to pull it out as quickly as possible before the Toronto-Dominion Bank does to them what they did to me. I don't trust the Toronto-Dominion Bank. I've got no reason to and I've got every reason not to.

In fact, I'm a fan of credit unions. This last weekend I was down at the 50th anniversary of the Canal City credit union in Welland, formerly Page-Hersey employees' credit union. If you want to avoid bank scams, if you want to avoid banks ripping you off, if you want to avoid banks nickel-and-diming you, then the real consumer protection there is to get people into credit unions. I appreciate that the matter of banking is a federal matter and the minister couldn't have included that in this legislation even if he had wanted to. I'd be interested in knowing whether or not he wanted to and whether his confidence in banks is somewhat greater than mine. But maybe he's never had a bank rob his money; maybe he's never had a bank steal money from him. I've never had that done to me by a credit union, not by a long shot.

The other area of consumer protection that of course can't be canvassed here because it's a matter of federal jurisdiction is cable television. You've heard me talk about that before too. How those bandits get away with what they're doing just rots my socks. It is incomprehensible. Cable television operators persist in this province in underservicing the province; in other words, there's nowhere near a guarantee of 100% coverage, not 90% coverage, probably not even 80% coverage. They deliver an incredibly poor quality signal and yet they charge a literal arm and a leg for their so-called services.

Try getting hold of a cable company when you've had a breakdown or a lapse in cable provision to your home. You get put on hold and on wait and you've got voice mail and electronic voices and mechanical voices and "Press button 1" and "Press button 2" and you wait forever. Then you're told to stay home during a workday, as if you could be there, because the fact that you work and try to eke out a few bucks a week is what enables you to pay for the cable. I'd dearly love to see somebody get tough with the cable companies in terms of some basic consumer protection.

The other thing that really ticks me off about cable—and I've had calls in my constituency office and Jim Bradley has raised it any number of times here, as have I—is when the cable company, Cogeco, down in Niagara, put the legislative channel up into the high numbers so that a whole lot of people with the old television tuners that don't go all the way up to number 59, or whatever the heck it is, literally can't access it. I appreciate it's not in the minister's bailiwick, not in his jurisdiction, but I'd like to hear the minister at least talk tough about the cable companies. I'd like to hear John Tory. John Tory apparently is going to be a potential candidate for the leadership of the federal Conservative Party. I'd like to hear John Tory campaigning, among other things, on a plan to get tough with cable companies. Do you think John Tory is capable of it? Boy, he'd show his stuff were he to do that.

Yet, one more area of consumer protection is very much related to this bill. Reference has already been made to the fine print elements of both advertising and contracts. I'd like the minister to tell us where in this bill there is some protection for consumers against the hyper-fine print. It's not as if Bell telephone has got anything good to say about it, because what they've done is reduce the size of the print in their phone books over the course of the last several years so that anybody who is over 40—not anybody, but the biggest chunk of people over 40—has the hardest time finding numbers, never mind once you reach 50 or beyond. But it's that same sort of fine print that finds its way into any number of so-called otherwise legitimate consumer contracts. Take a look at the print and you'll notice that it's not written in hard black and white. It's usually printed in grey so that it becomes but a blur to most readers of it.

I'd be interested in seeing this go to committee because I'd be interested in seeing this government respond to a proposition around some amendments to literally eliminate the fine print. If it's good enough to be said or written, say it audibly or write it legibly so that consumers can read what they have an entitlement to read.

That takes us to yet another issue, and that's plain language, plain-language requirements. Plain-language legislation has advanced a long, long way. A whole lot of US jurisdictions have plain-language requirements. There are all sorts of readily available standards for the utilization of plain language; and plain language would go a long way toward giving the consumers power in their own right to determine what kind of agreements they are getting into.

I want to talk about some of the scams that I have encountered down where I come from. My concern is that this bill does not address what are prevalent scams down where I come from, down where the Minister comes from too—down where he's set up his new home, in a rather nice part of Niagara region, which may well become a part of the riding of Niagara Centre in due course. I have asked him already if he's going to be good for a sign location. He said he's undecided; he has to ask his spouse.

One of the scams that we've had to deal with, and I'm sure other constituency offices as well—and again, this is where the bill falls short because I don't see anything in the bill that is going to address this: the driveway paving operations. How many times has my constituency office had a call—and the interesting thing is that many—I'm about to say most, but I'll say at the very least many, and probably most, of the victims of these driveway paving scams are senior citizens. They are people who take great pride in the appearance of their house, in the conditions around their house. Their yards are much better kept than mine is over on Bald Street—

Interjection.

Mr Kormos: Well, they are. They're meticulous. The paint is always properly painted around the window frames and there's no blue boxes to be seen; not that they don't use blue boxes but the blue boxes are well hidden away in beautifully decorated containers in their own right.

These are people who take great pride in the appearance of their homes and their neighbourhoods. And you have the roaming door-to-door asphalt provider doing driveway installations. I suppose the first bit of advice, because this goes to yet another deficiency around this whole legislation, is access to consumer protection before the fact: access to hotlines giving people advice on how to deal with these things; access to written material in any number of languages that would enable people to do some basic homework and research; access to registries of bad operators.

So what happens—and it's usually an out-of-towner. They can come from any part of Ontario or even beyond; they can come from Quebec as well. They pull into town—a couple of dump trucks as a local asphalt provider, a flatbed with some heavy rollers—and go door to door marketing asphalt paving for drivers. And not all the time—I'm not going to suggest that everyone of them is a bad operator—but more often than not you end up with a job that is incredibly deficient. The foundation hasn't been properly laid; there hasn't been proper excavation and removal of the previous asphalt driveway, which has buckled and caved in and rotted away from water and gasoline and oil; there hasn't been sufficient or adequate preparation of the foundation or removal of the old asphalt driveway; and if that was done, the surface of asphalt that is laid down is far too thin to be effective for more than about a day or two. In fact, it is only effective for so long as that period of time that they ask you to keep your car off the asphalt, because the minute you start driving a car—and never mind a heavier vehicle, let's say an SUV or a full-size pickup—the asphalt literally starts giving away underneath the tires of that vehicle.

My office has dealt with those situations countless numbers of times. Can you sue the operator? Yes, if you can find him or her, or it if it's a corporation—and usually they are. Can you be successful? Yes, more often than not, because most of the time these operators merely default in terms of providing a statement of defence and let you get default judgment. But is the judgment, which has already cost you a few hundred bucks in court fees alone in Small Claims Court, worth the paper it's written on? Because when you try to execute or have it executed, that corporation either is inexigible or has folded and the operator has rolled the assets, usually the equipment itself, into another corporation; or if it's an individual, that individual is not just the defendant in your case and that individual is inexigible.

I don't see anything in this bill that protects my folks against the driveway paving scams that are perpetrated literally every summer, and there are things that could be done: a hot list of bad operators. We've supported this government's efforts to register, in some areas, areas of highly dangerous criminals. I see that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, as it once was called, could do an outstanding service if it had an accessible registry of bad operators.

One of the problems with the ministry, and it's interesting, because I'm sure when Ms Churley speaks to this bill she may also—

Ms Churley: If I get a chance, if it's not time-allocated.

Mr Kormos: If Ms Churley gets a chance, if it's not time-allocated and the opportunity to speak to it is stolen from her, Ms Churley has expertise and experience in this area from a whole pile of arenas, among other things her participation in the ministry for some significant period of time, much longer than myself.

One of the things Ms Churley has commented on, and I'm sure will do again if she's given a chance to speak to the bill, is the gutting of the ministry. All of us—I shouldn't say all of us. I know most of this caucus, the NDP caucus, has made efforts, for instance, to telephone the ministry to look up various enforcement branches either to obtain information or to report perceived infractions for the purpose of investigation. There's nobody left there. It's an empty building. The halls must ring with the footsteps of the one or two people who work in the ministry. There's no longer an effective enforcement branch. There's certainly no consumer protection branch from the point of view of preliminary protection.

A couple of times the constituency office down in Welland, and I'm sure others, be it here in Toronto at Broadview-Greenwood or Toronto-Danforth, has been successful in using, perhaps, the leverage of the press or commentary here in the Legislature to cajole or coerce a return of money by an operator, but that certainly doesn't do the job for subsequent victims of that operator's rip-off schemes or scams, does it?

I'm afraid this consumer protection act isn't going to do very much from my point of view, subject to what the minister may say to make me feel more comfortable, more at ease, for victims of driveway paving rip-offs. He can say, "Sue." I can say, "Sue what?" Because you can sue until the cows come home, but the goal should be to protect people before they get victimized. I say that the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations, and I think most people in this province would agree with me, ought to be out there protecting people against the scams in the first place, instead of standing by for them to get ripped off and then providing directions to the small claims court registry office, where you've got to start laying down a few hundred bucks even to get the whole thing proceeded with, commenced, initiated.

Scam number two: the vacuum cleaner scam. It's incredible that these scam artists are still working the streets. That's the inevitably out-of-town-based, and sometimes out-of-province-based, door-to-door retailer of ultra-high-priced vacuums. You check Consumer Reports magazine—again, people might want to go on the Web, consumerreports.org, and you can see any number of candid tests—unbiased; no commercial affiliation by that association—of vacuum cleaners. At the end of the day, those multi-thousand-dollar vacuum cleaners inevitably are not only not superior to any number of domestic North American or offshore-made vacuum cleaners, but are in fact inferior.

We've dealt with folks down in Niagara Centre who have been scammed, and of course the vacuum cleaner salesperson takes away the old vacuum as a trade-in and then it becomes even more difficult for that person because they argue, "Oh, no, that's gone off to the processor." Do you know what they do with the old vacuums? They throw them in the dump. It's all part of the scam, because you don't have a vacuum any more if you really insist on returning the rip-off vacuum you just bought, with some exotic name and a few straps of chrome around the same otherwise plastic body.

We've had some success in using any number of coercive tactics like using the press or the threat of speaking to the matter here in the Legislature in terms of getting people's money back, but the fact is a whole lot of people don't even bother reporting it because, quite frankly, they're embarrassed. It's usually older folks who get scammed because the salespeople around these things—shame on them—exploit many times the isolation of older people, very much exploit older folks' pride in their home, in the cleanliness of it and the orderliness of it—again, homes that are far cleaner and far more orderly than mine ever has been or ever will be.

I don't see anything here that protects consumers against the door-to-door vacuum cleaner scam. You see, the other problem is, be it the vacuum cleaner and most other consumer products that are sold door to door, the assignment of the paper, because these items are sold on time—first off, they're sold cash. Then you've got to tell your constituent, "Wow, that's even riskier because you paid cash up front." It's gone. Tracking those artists down is going to be a formidable task. But when your constituent tells you, "Oh, but I've got a time payment program; you know, $500 down, $200 a month for the rest of my life," there's a glimmer of hope and you say, "Oh, well, we'll default on the payment."

But what these operators inevitably do is sell the paper. They assign that credit note to a third party, who then has no relationship with the otherwise scammy product. Whether it's a finance company of the old school ilk—inevitably it's interest rates that start at 18% and go up to around 29.5% or more, or so much as the Criminal Code allows—you've got no rights as against the holder of that paper. So I would prevail upon the minister to start engaging in some programs that provide outright education to stop these scam artists in their tracks, protect people from the scam in the first place and ride the scam artists out of this province on a rail.

If you want to make reference to the tie I'm wearing, Speaker, it's very Halloweeny. Michael Prue had one just like it, you might have noticed.

Ms Churley: Yes, he did.

Mr Kormos: Michael Prue had a tie identical to mine and I want to commend his wife for buying him his.

Ms Churley: Who bought you yours?

Mr Kormos: The fact is, I have to have it back to the store by 10 o'clock tonight. But it's very in the Halloween spirit that I, with great pleasure, wear this gesture of goodwill toward so many youngsters tonight. Perhaps some of the children of the members of this assembly will be out there with their folks—except, well, we are sitting Thursday night. They're called evening sittings. It happens to be Halloween. I understand.

I'll tell you one more scam. This one's not really a scam; it's just half a scam. One of the problems I have is we get a whole lot of complaints about overselling—and the minister might want to respond to this. Again, as often as not, it's senior citizens who have become a little bit isolated from time to time and certainly are regarded and seen as prey by the perpetrators.

One is the steel roof scam. There's nothing wrong with steel roofs—nothing whatsoever. They're incredibly expensive. They have an incredible lifespan. But I've got folks who called me up—I had one just a year ago. They're 75 years old and they've got something like a $15,000 tab to pay for a steel roof when an asphalt shingle roof would have cost them maybe $2,500. They've rethought it and said, "Well, maybe we can't afford to spend that." With an asphalt shingle roof you can get a 25-year warranty or a 30-year warranty but, they were explaining, they bought the steel roof because it had a 50-year warranty. I said, "But you're 75 years old." What is somebody doing selling you a $15,000 steel roof and using as the selling point that it's got a 50-year warranty? My friends, trust me, you'll do fine with a 30-year shingle at a fraction of the price.

Is there anything illegal about that conduct? No. Is there something unsavoury about that type of over-selling? Yes. Is there any protection in this legislation? Well, but for the cooling-off period, once again, no. Is the protection going to be contained in a statutory structure that merely provides penalties after the fact? I suggest not. I suggest that the protection is more significantly going to be contained in educational programs, in 1-800 lines that provide advice and counsel to consumers so they can protect themselves before the fact. An awareness on the part of consumers that there would be a hotline available at the Ministry of Consumer and Business Services to talk about roofing, driveway paving, basement waterproofing. Again, unlike the steel roofs, which as I say are merely unsavoury in terms of over-selling, because steel roofs do have incredibly long lifespans—and if you're 25 years old building a house, it may well be a suitable roofing application, or if you're in parts of Ontario where the climate is particularly tough on asphalt shingles, it may be a particularly wise investment.

You see, basement waterproofing is almost inevitably an out-and-out scam, because there's no such thing as waterproofing a basement without excavation. You can't waterproof a basement from the inside. You can dig a trench around the inside so that the water drains out, but there's no such thing as waterproofing a basement from the inside. The hydraulic pressure is simply too strong.

Ms Churley: I didn't know that. I bet lots of people don't know that.

Mr Kormos: That's right. But they get scammed: a coat of tar, some fancy tinfoil type of flashing glued to the inside of the wall of the basement. The water's coming from the outside. You've got to inhibit the water at the point of entry, not at the point of exit where it comes into the basement. So again, I want our Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to have programs available. Does this cost a few bucks? Yeah. But as a taxpayer I'm prepared to invest in these kinds of things, specifically in these kinds of things.

I want to get down to automobiles. Again, I've got no quarrel with the legislation, most of it recycled but somewhat tweaked, in terms of motor vehicle repair standards and controls. Is it adequate to protect people against scams? I say no. There's all sorts of good car repair places across this province, I have no doubt about it. Regrettably, the privately owned garage service station is becoming an increasing rarity, yet at the same time, historically, it was one of the most reputable places for car repair. It's true. But because of the oil companies and how they operate gas stations versus service stations, and the gas bars, many of those mechanics are out of business. But I encourage people to develop a relationship with people like young Fralik up on Niagara Street in Welland. The Sunoco station up in Welland just before the 406, they're incredibly reputable people; or Lee's, again a similar Sunoco station over on Prince Charles Drive.

One of the places, not the only place in town, to get competent, trustworthy, reliable repair work—I use a unionized shop, David Chev Olds. Its mechanics are members of the Canadian Auto Workers. They're unionized and that provides me, quite frankly, with a level of comfort, not only knowing that they provide very good and reliable service and wouldn't scam you if their lives depended on it; I know that as unionized workers those mechanics are paid well. They don't have to do piecework, they don't have to rush jobs through because they're on flat rate, so I take comfort in the fact that a unionized shop is a safe place to get your car repaired. And that's not to say it has to be unionized, because obviously most of the smaller, independently run service station garages aren't unionized because its owner-operator. So Fralik on Niagara Street, Lee's Sunoco and any number of other places are going to serve people just fine.

I'd like to see some educational material from the ministry. I know that from time to time—and more often it's the newspapers, it's the Toronto Star car section that does it before the ministry does, goes out there doing stings, testing car repair operators to see how effective the diagnosis is and whether it constitutes an outright rip-off or merely lack of knowledge on the part of the mechanic. But I tell you, one of the most important things I think this ministry could be doing would be to educate people about how to identify a competent, reliable repair shop, how to find one and how to maintain a relationship with one.

One of the resources that I use, quite frankly, in view of how this government—and I trust it still does, I could be corrected—the Consumers' Association of Canada is a pretty toothless consumer protection organization, and quite frankly will do the government's bidding as long as the government continues to fund it. But a group like the Automobile Protection Association here in Toronto, which is independent of the government or of any other retailer, does an excellent job of giving people advice around car rip-offs or on where to get your car repaired. They're the people that referred me to Krown Rust Control. It was the Automobile Protection Association that referred me to Krown Rust Control, which I've used for all my vehicles for a good chunk of time. Krown Rust Control, in my view, merits the high approval rating that the Automobile Protection Association gives it. I encourage people to call the Automobile Protection Association. Another one is the Automobile Consumer Coalition, which is a similar, parallel organization. So the Automobile Protection Association, the APA, and the Automobile Consumer Coalition—my good friend Mohamed operates that. Both of those places will provide people with outstanding advice in terms of where to get good repairs, excellent advice on how to avoid scams, excellent advice on where to get the best rustproofing for your car. One thing people have to avoid is the dealer-provided rustproofing. That's a scam. I'm sorry; that's a scam.

It's like when you go to the haberdasher, as some of my colleagues are inclined to do, and they sell you a suit, but then they want you to buy the tie, the belt and the shirts to match. They don't make the money on the suit as much as they do on the tie, the belt and the shoes.

Automobile dealers do the same thing. Nobody in their right mind should get rustproofing, when they buy a new car, from the automobile dealer. It's overpriced and quite frankly most dealers don't have the facilities to properly apply it. Call the Automobile Protection Association, call the Automobile Consumer Coalition; they'll send you to Krown Rust Control, where you have a product that works and a service that is definitely not a scam.

I'd like to see the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations giving people some of the same counsel and advice. I'm not sure the Automobile Protection Association or the Automobile Consumer Coalition would like to see the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations subsidize them to the same point that they have, at least historically, subsidized the Consumer Association of Canada, because the APA, the Automobile Protection Association, and the Automobile Consumer Coalition provide a whole lot more consumer services for car owners vis-à-vis used purchases, new purchases, repairs and rustproofing than the Consumer Association of Canada ever has for consumers at any point in its history.

I tell you that this ministry could be proactive in the area of consumer protection. I tell you that this ministry and this minister could be telling us about restoring the level of staffing, especially in terms of investigative staff, because even when that ministry was fully staffed, the investigative staff were hard-pressed to undertake the investigations and subsequent prosecutions that they were called upon to do. Now that it's gutted, it's not just hard-pressed, it's impossible for the Ministry of Consumer and Commercial Relations to conduct investigations and provide meaningful, hands-on consumer protection.

I'm far more interested in protecting consumers before the fact from scams and rip-offs than I am in providing them with an expensive and complex courtroom remedy after the fact, or in providing the province with statutes and infractions that the province is ill-equipped to prosecute because it doesn't have the investigative and prosecutorial staff and because we've got a province where this government has created a reputation more for plea bargaining and letting people off the hook, whether it's Ministry of Labour prosecutions, whether it's Ministry of the Environment prosecutions or others.

The Deputy Speaker: It being 6 o'clock, this House stands adjourned until 6:45.

The House adjourned at 1759.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT, 2002 LOI DE 2002 SUR LA SALUBRITÉ DE L'EAU POTABLE

Mr Stockwell moved second reading of the following bill:

Bill 195, An Act respecting safe drinking water /
Projet de loi 195, Loi ayant trait à la salubrité de l'eau potable.

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I don't believe we have a quorum.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Would the Clerk please check for a quorum.

Clerk Assistant (Ms Deborah Deller): A quorum is not present, Speaker.

The Speaker ordered the bells rung.

Clerk Assistant: A quorum is now present, Speaker.

The Speaker: The Minister of the Environment.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I will be splitting my time with the members for Haldimand-Norfolk, Brampton-Gore-Malton-Springdale, and I believe Niagara Falls as well.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): Durham.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Not Durham. Specifically not Durham. If he tries to get up, we're not splitting our time. I know Mr Bradley will be splitting his time with himself.

It's kind of a pleasure—it's more than kind of a pleasure; it is a pleasure to speak today on a bill that I take great pride in, the Safe Drinking Water Act. It's been a long time in the making and, in my opinion, it does many things to implement Justice O'Connor's report and resolve many outstanding issues that needed to be resolved that led to the terrible tragedy in Walkerton.

Being the Minister of the Environment who brings this bill into the House is truly an honour. I suppose in a lot of ways it's an honour with some very sad background to it.

I expect to hear tonight from the member from St Catharines for the Liberal Party and the member for Toronto-Danforth for the NDP. I'm going to listen very intently and carefully to the opposition members, because I take very seriously their input into this bill. I believe it's a non-partisan bill. It's a bill that I think will build a better system to make our water safer, and I can't honestly believe that anyone would think that isn't a goal of every member in this House.

We're here tonight to begin the first round of second reading debate on our proposed Safe Drinking Water Act. In my opinion, this is a solid legislation and one that was derived from exhaustive public consultation, started by Justice O'Connor and continued by the Ernie Eves government.

In May 2002, Justice O'Connor concluded his work with the Walkerton Inquiry with his part two report that made 93 recommendations on how this province could ensure the safe delivery of drinking water. I might add that 93 recommendations were adopted by this government.

Recommendation 67 states that, "The provincial government should enact a Safe Drinking Water Act to deal with matters related to the treatment and distribution of drinking water." This government is delivering on this recommendation and on 49 more through this proposed act, which obviously means that we're delivering on 50 of the 93 recommendations.

It is an act to provide for the protection of human health through the regulation and control of drinking water systems and drinking water testing. We are strongly committed, as you have heard time and again, to ensuring that the people of Ontario have safe drinking water and that all of Justice O'Connor's recommendations are implemented.

I might add that I will be interested in the voting of the opposition parties on this bill. It will be curious in my mind to see how they vote. I know they've said off the top in the introduction to this bill that there were some deficiencies with respect to source protection. It seems to me that that could be a criticism. I take the position that Justice O'Connor told us to separate these bills and in fact put them in place in an orderly fashion. The argument that we should have brought source protection in sooner would only have meant that we would have had to delay nutrient management, Bill 175 and the Safe Drinking Water Act.

The rationale, I suppose, is that you want source protection. We all want source protection, but I caution the members opposite with respect to source protection. This is a monumental task. It's a very large task and a very difficult task to manage source protection right across the entire province of Ontario. It will take time.

I've committed as best I can to see that a source protection bill comes into place by next spring. I hope members take me at my word, because that is as early as we could get it in, considering the situation we're faced with.

I understand the challenge that the members opposite are saying, "How long does it take?" I've got to tell you, it takes more than two years and it's not that simple a job. When you talk about source protection, you're talking about protection for the entire province—wellheads, streams etc, agriculture—all over the province and that cannot be done in a few short months. I would hasten to add that if it could have been done in a few short months, I would have expected that the governments previous to us would have done that. To be fair, you've got to understand that that couldn't be done in a few short months.

We are strongly committed, as you've heard time and again, to ensuring the people of Ontario have safe drinking water and that all of Justice O'Connor's recommendations are implemented. This is sweeping legislation that addresses several different aspects of the safe delivery of drinking water, and I'd like to take a moment to elaborate on a few.

There are seven parts to this bill, and I'll list them for those watching: (1) licensing and accreditation of laboratories; (2) standards, including an advisory council on standards; (3) certification and training of operators; (4) owner's licence for municipal water systems; (5) statutory standard of care for municipalities; (6) compliance and enforcement; and (7) the Minister of the Environment is the lead on safe drinking water. Ultimately the Ministry of the Environment is the lead. It says "minister"; it really isn't the minister. It's the Ministry of the Environment that's the lead on all water-related issues.

Let's talk about mandatory licensing and accreditation of labs that perform drinking water testing. We know full well that part of the problem in the Walkerton situation was that the lab had done the tests but hadn't broadly shared that information. The question became, how could that have happened? Obviously it was a situation that shouldn't have happened and needed to be corrected.

Now we're saying labs must have a licence to test drinking water. That's the first time. The lab must be accredited by the accreditation body. Licences will have an expiry date determined by regulation and these licences can be amended, suspended or revoked by the director. I'm working from memory, but I think licences will be for no more than five years. In the briefing with the two opposition members I attended, I think that was the year. If I'm wrong, I stand to be corrected, but I think it was no more than five years.

The Ministry of the Environment will have authority to inspect all labs performing drinking water tests. I'm not really sure who could be opposed to that. I look across the floor at my friends opposite, reasonable people all—most—and it would seem to me that no one would have any problem with that process of accreditation and licensing of laboratories and drinking water.

The second part is the requirement for all drinking water systems operators to be certified. There's no doubt—and I'm not trying to be partisan here, but it's going to sound partisan—that one of the fatal flaws that led to Walkerton, I think everyone would agree, reasonable people most, that probably the operators of the system in Walkerton shouldn't have been operating the system in Walkerton. Nobody through all administrations—the same brothers were operating the Walkerton system.

I look around and I know there are at least two ex-ministers of the environment here, Mr Bradley and myself. I know Ms Churley is very conscious of the environment. I don't think she held the portfolio for the NDP.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I was parliamentary assistant for a while.

Hon Mr Stockwell: She was the parliamentary assistant for the Ministry of the Environment, so she would know full well.

The problem was without doubt the Koebel brothers, who operated the Walkerton plant. I'm not trying to cast aspersions on either of these administrations but, clearly, when you grandfathered those people who operated those water plants from testing or from upgrading their skills, it was a very real slope to the problem. It was one of those things that created this issue and the deaths in Walkerton. Why? Because we withdrew the responsibility for those people who operate this system to be accredited, to be tested, to be brought up to speed on new technologies etc and, ultimately, by grandfathering them we took away all this ability we had to make sure that the people minding our water systems were doing a good job.

I know it sounds political, and it's not meant to be, but this was a problem, and that problem had nothing to do with this administration. These people were grandfathered in 1993. The last grandfathering took place right around the time Ms Churley was parliamentary assistant.

Ms Churley: Oh no, I was minister by then. I was Minister of Consumer Affairs.

Hon Mr Stockwell: OK, then it was the NDP government; I think she'd agree with that. It was the NDP government.

You know, in fairness to those administrations—and I want to be fair to the administrations of the NDP and the Liberals, when Mr Bradley was the environment minister—I honestly don't believe it ever crossed your minds that somebody would take water-testing samples and actually fraudulently submit incorrect samples of tests. Would it ever have crossed your minds that somebody would have done that when you were Minister of the Environment? Probably not. Would it ever have crossed your mind, I say to the member for St Catharines, that somebody would get a chlorinator for a pump or for a well and tell the people that they'd connected the chlorinator when they had actually never connected the chlorinator? I know it doesn't appear I'm getting a lot of attention from them, but I would say that it probably never would have crossed your minds. So it was a series of situations and issues that led to the Walkerton disaster.

I will also add that I know there's this push to the private sector, and I know my friend the member for St Catharines is vehemently opposed to seeing any public water utilities turned in any way, shape or form over to the private sector. But I caution my friend the member for St Catharines that we must remember—and I think this has somehow slipped through the cracks during this debate—Walkerton happened at a public utility employing public employees. This wasn't a private water operator. This was a public utility employing public employees. I don't know if they were unionized or not. I guess it really shouldn't matter, and it doesn't. But we should always be careful about what we're condemning the private sector for. I think we have to take a look at ourselves and the responsibility we have with respect to this horrendous situation in Walkerton and ask ourselves how we, as the government of Ontario, through all three administrations allowed this situation in Walkerton to continue, with a public utility, with public employees.

We also have a section with a requirement for all drinking water system operators to be certified, and this I think is very important. This is what I think would have caught the situation in Walkerton at best: no person shall operate a municipal drinking water system or a regulated non-municipal system without a valid operator's certificate.

We are reviewing the current training and certification requirements of drinking water operators under the Ontario Water Resources Act. Once they have been revised to support O'Connor's recommendation, they will be transferred to the Safe Drinking Water Act.

Here is a very important point. I want everyone to understand this and know this: grandparented operators must be certified within two years of a regulation being made. So I want to say to the members opposite that all those people you grandfathered—I don't know; is it "grandparented"? I don't want to be sexist or PC or whatever. All those people you grandfathered will now have to be certified in two years. That's going to be tough, I'm telling you right now. I look to my friends in rural Ontario—Haldimand-Norfolk is a good example, even the member who represents Gravenhurst and Huntsville and all those good ridings that way. There are a lot of operators up there who probably are not capable of writing a test and passing. It's not that they don't know their stuff; it's just been so long since they've performed written tests. So we're going to try and create a friendly test that can be done orally, visually, without being written, to ensure that as long as you have the capacity to understand what you're doing, we can certify you to operate the water filtration plants and so on around this province.

So it's going to be friendly, but it's going to be tough. If you're going to provide water to the people in your community, the people of your community should have a comfort level that you know what you're doing, and you're providing clean water. It's not just for them; it's for their children, their parents, grandparents and everyone. It seems amazing to me, and this is why, curiously, I don't honestly think either party is going to vote against this bill, because it makes so much sense: why would the person who is providing water, that we know can kill you if put in the wrong hands, not be properly trained and certified?

There will be a requirement for municipal water systems owners to meet all necessary conditions and obtain an owner's licence. All municipal owners of a water system must have a valid licence. That makes good sense. The licence involves a drinking water works permit, formerly a C of A; a permit to take water; an operational plan; a financial plan under another good bill that I think we brought in, Bill 175; and accredited operating authority. Directors may impose conditions, as well as revoke or suspend a licence. The Ministry of the Environment will issue licences and approve operational plans and permits to take water.

I will say this about it. I'm looking forward to some conversation with the municipalities on this one, because if I'm looking for amendments, it's here. Let me tell you why. I had a tough time putting this into the draft, because I thought to myself that municipalities are fairly sophisticated birds. It seems to me that if they can come up with a financial plan that really takes shape and shows a reasonable approach to providing water at cost, I don't know why we at the Ministry of the Environment would have to approve them all.

I look to the members opposite—the member for St Catharines is the critic, and the member for Toronto-Danforth—to see if they will have any advice in committee on amendments to that particular part of the bill. I'm not sure we need to be that prescriptive in the act. I put it in there, I thought it would be better that I put it in there, but if there's an idea you have that could be less prescriptive and allow the municipalities—I know municipalities. I sat on a municipal government and the two critics in either party sat on municipal governments as well. It seems to me that 99.999% of municipal governments are financially sound governments. We couldn't run debts. We couldn't run deficits. We never did. So I'm looking for some input from you with respect to that.

This will also strengthen compliance and enforcement provisions. Provincial officers can issue an order to any person for contravening the act. A director can issue orders to decommission or replace part of the system, appoint an interim operating authority or provide an alternative water supply. The minister can suspend a lab licence for up to 90 days or issue a directive to license labs on how tests should be carried out if public health is in danger.

Penalties for the most serious offences that result in drinking water health hazards are, and sit down for this: up to a $4-million fine for individuals on first conviction and $7 million for subsequent convictions—it seems steep, but it should be—a fine of up to $6 million for corporations on first conviction and up to $10 million for subsequent convictions.

New inspection powers include follow-up inspections for systems with deficiencies within one year and the power for provincial officers to inspect places where drinking water tests are conducted. We will also create the new position of chief inspector.

Let me just revisit that. The numbers seem astronomical, I agree. The reason they are astronomical is that you're dealing with large corporations in some instances—for instance, the city of Toronto. You have to make the fine so significant and so real that it would have an impact on the city of Toronto, and a $6-million to $10-million fine, in my opinion, will catch their attention. I will also add this: you're talking about the cost of water, and it's kind of interesting. These are just musings off the top of my head, I suppose, but it seems to me the average water bill—and I look to the members from Toronto: Mr Kwinter, Mr Phillips and Ms Churley. I don't know what your water bill is, but it seems like it's about $35 to $40 a month, roughly. I think that's about what mine is. It seems funny to me that we pay $35 to $40 a month for water, and there's some kicking and fussing about whether it should or will cost more, but we think nothing of spending 100 bucks for satellite television that gets you 796 stations.

Mr Kormos: Who does that?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Lots of people do that, I say to Mr Kormos; lots and lots and lots of people do that. It seems to me that if we're going to provide clean, safe drinking water and it's going to cost, instead of $38 to $40, maybe $45 or $47, it would be far better for our constituents to know that for that extra $4 or $5 a month, their water is truly clean and safe. I think we have to examine whether or not the cost of providing that water is properly being covered and, if it isn't, maybe it should be. I think also—and this stands to reason in my opinion—if people start thinking about water in a conservation way, they may use less, and I don't think that's such a bad idea either.

I know about the water-taking stuff. They'll be allowed to take water. I know I had a bit of a brouhaha in estimates with the member for Toronto-Danforth about water-taking. We had a curious crossfire there. The next day, I do admit, she came back and changed her position.

Ms Churley: No, you misinterpreted it.

Hon Mr Stockwell: No, I never did misinterpret your position.

Ms Churley: Yes, you did.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I did not. I looked up Hansard; I did not.

I say to the member for Halton, Mr Chudleigh, who was at that committee—

Ms Churley: The Hansard is not out yet, Chris.

Hon Mr Stockwell: It's out from committee.

Mr Chudleigh, who was there from Halton, will I think back up my position about the water-taking at estimates, where the NDP suggested that she would put a moratorium on any new—

Ms Churley: Until?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Yes, a moratorium on any new water-taking testing or permits in Ontario if they were in the government.

Ms Churley: Until? You're doing it again, Chris.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Until when?

Ms Churley: Until source protection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Right, until the source protection comes in.

Interjection: A couple of years?

Ms Churley: It shouldn't take that long.

Hon Mr Stockwell: That's right. It's going to take at least six months. So if you adopted that policy, you would be in the situation where farmers wouldn't be able to get water-taking permits to water their crops. But I will give her credit, she did come the next day and said, "OK, maybe that was a bit much. We'll have to analyze it a little more sophisticatedly than that." I do give her credit for coming back and reworking her policy position.

Ms Churley: That was a backhanded compliment.

Hon Mr Stockwell: That was an absolutely backhanded compliment, no doubt about it.

Statutory standard of care: the statutory standard of care is causing some municipalities a little concern. We will hold municipalities with oversight functions to a statutory standard of care. Now, listen carefully. I know AMO is out there asking about this one, but I want it to be clear. Municipal owners—and those are the municipalities that own the water plants, as most already do—must exercise a level of care, diligence and skill and act honestly, competently and with integrity to ensure the protection of safety of the users of their systems. A standard of care extends to directors and officers of the corporation and applies to those who exercise decision-making authority over a municipal system. Under the proposed act, we will establish a standards advisory council and provide authority to set standards for drinking-water treatment and distribution.

Why do we have that? Well, the other problem in the situation with respect to Walkerton is that there were fraudulently filed reports. I've said this before and I'll say it again: I'm not really sure the Ministry of the Environment could ever hire enough inspectors who could stand over every single report written in Ontario and make sure they wrote down the right number. I think everyone would agree you could never hire enough inspectors. So we put the standard of care in there because you have to check on your employees and ensure that your employees are actually doing what they're telling you they're doing.

You've got to go in there and test and do surprise visits to know that if they're actually writing out that 0.4 is the level of whatever, they're not writing 0.2 when it's actually 0.4. That really comes down to standard of care. This isn't out there to shock municipalities into fear—it's not. It's doing what it's supposed to be doing. It's holding them to a level of care, honesty, competence and integrity to ensure the protection of the supply of water.

Now, mistakes happen, but after the Safe Drinking Water Act, with the checks and balances we've put in place, the mistakes should be caught. But I think the members opposite would agree, you have to know that when someone submits a report that says they've tested the water and here are the results, they haven't made it up. And that happened: they just made it up, which is frightening.

In a lot of ways it's kind of scary that you put this into a bill, because in all my years of dealing with the municipal civil servants I knew, I can't imagine any of them ever just making stuff up and putting people's lives at risk when they make it up. So that's the statutory standard of care and it's a sad day when that's what you have to put in the law. You know what it comes down to? You could re-title this part of the bill so that it says, "You can't make stuff up." That's really what this statutory standard of care is, the "you can't make stuff up" part of the bill. It's in there because, frighteningly, seven people died because public employees in Walkerton made stuff up. I think that should be a sobering and chilling thought to anyone who sits in this place.

Miscellaneous—as always, there's a miscellaneous part of this bill. My friend from St Catharines left. My friend from St Catharines always says this is where all the hostages are held in all normal bills: the miscellaneous part. I will assure you, members opposite, there are no hostages in this bill. I will assure you there are no surprises. I will assure you as I speak today, this is what the bill does, and I will assure you, the briefing the ministry gave to both members a couple of days ago, all those positions and issues we brought forward were part of the bill and there are no hostages in this bill.

Miscellaneous: we will amend section 62 of the Health Protection and Promotion Act to address vacancies in the position of medical officer of health. Under the proposed act, the government will also be requiring to submit to the Legislature an annual "State of Ontario's Drinking Water" report.

With the adoption of this act and the regulations that will be input, we will no longer need regulation 459. So 459 will actually come out, and the new one we'll put in is more of a risk-management aversion approach to water.

This government will continue to be accountable for all promises and this report will provide a benchmark for doing that.

The proposed Safe Drinking Water Act has benefited from the ideas and comments put forward by stakeholders and members of the public alike. In addition to the extensive public process Commissioner O'Connor undertook through the Walkerton inquiry, this government has consulted broadly on technical details of the act. Further consultations will be held through upcoming legislative hearings and stakeholder meetings. I've met with a lot of stakeholders—what does "stakeholders" mean? I've met with a lot of people from various parts of the province who are interested in this bill.

The public is also encouraged to provide their comments through the Environmental Bill of Rights registry posting.

Safe drinking water remains a top priority of this government. We are committed to ensuring that Ontario has, and enforces, the best and toughest clean water policies in the world.

On a quieter note, I suppose, I want to also say there has been a lot of talk—and I remember very clearly in this House a couple of years ago when this story broke. At the time, there were a lot of allegations and charges—probably unreasonable allegations—made by some members of this House. Let me say very clearly, this could have happened to any one of the past administrations if they were in office. Case closed, end of discussion. It could have happened to any one of them. I know the members opposite are going to say no and they're going to make allegations about reductions and environmental cuts and so on.

Ms Churley: Justice O'Connor made those, not us.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I will tell you, the Koebel brothers were operating the filtration plant during our administration, during the NDP administration and during the Liberal administration. They were fraudulently fabricating numbers during our stop, during their stop and during the Liberals' stop and, to be fair, no one caught them. Nobody caught them. I appreciate the fact that this is strong language.

Ms Churley: Let me remind you of the report.

Hon Mr Stockwell: To the member from Toronto-Danforth, I think Justice O'Connor has done a wonderful job with those reports—

Ms Churley: He talked about more than just—

Hon Mr Stockwell: Can I just finish my thought? You're going to get to speak. I'd like to finish my thought. I appreciate the fact that this is very troubling for you, and I know it's troubling because it's difficult, but the fact is, any balanced individual who looks at this and any balanced municipal leader I spoke to has come to the same conclusion. The fact is simply this: we just believed that water was safe. We just believed the water that came out of our tap was safe drinking water, and we became lax.

People were operating water filtration plants. I know it frustrates the members opposite, but the reality is this, I say to the member for Toronto-Danforth: you and your administration grandfathered the Koebel brothers. I know she doesn't want to listen, but it's true. Your administration grandfathered the Koebel brothers. You gave them a permanent ability to operate incompetently in this system. I'm not blaming; I'm saying this is just how we managed our water system for the last 30 years. There was this belief that it was always going to be clean.

Are we blameless as a government? No. We're not blameless either, I say to the members opposite. Certainly there are some things we could have done and should have done and didn't. We should have done things and we didn't do them. But to be fair, in a non-partisan way, as long as these guys were operating in Walkerton, this could have happened to any one of us, and just by the grace of God it didn't, to the point that inspectors would go to Walkerton, provide the equipment and were told this equipment was hooked up when it was never hooked up. It's really difficult to comprehend, I know, but that is the fact. It was never hooked up. They would say they hooked up a chlorinator and never do it. They would say they did tests they never did. They would take tests and make them up, and they'd been doing it for 15 years. And that's why we need a Safe Drinking Water Act.

Could we have had a better approach? Yes. We should have had the private lab distribute those results more broadly, no doubt about it. No doubt about it. I'm not saying we shouldn't have, but ultimately, you know what it came down to—and I look to the members opposite. You believed your local municipality that was running your water system basically didn't make things up, that they actually did the tests. You believed that; I believed it. If you told me that at the city of Toronto they don't actually do the tests, they just make them up, I'd laugh at you. If anyone had told me that about a water plant anywhere around this province, I would have said, "You're out of your mind. You're telling me they don't do them, they just make them up? They tell you they hooked up chlorinators and they never did?" Nobody thought that. Nobody. There was no inspector before that I know of, in any administration, who would actually have said, "OK, did you hook the chlorinator up, sir?" and when he said yes, they'd actually go out to the wellhead and look to see if they hooked the chlorinator up. We never did those inspections, nor did you. That's how frightening this situation was.

We're investing more than half a billion dollars in the next two years on clean, safe drinking water for the people of Ontario. This year alone, we are providing $245 million, including investments to help municipalities upgrade and make improvements to their water systems to meet our tough new standards.

The proposed Safe Drinking Water Act is an environmental milestone for this province. I will say—and this is my opinion. I think others have said it; I know people in the ministry staff have said it: this is the toughest legislation in the world for safe drinking water—not Canada and not North America; it's the toughest legislation in the world. I was reading today—and I guess I don't have the quotes, but I think I read comments from British Columbia about the fact that the legislation introduced in Ontario is the toughest and best safe water legislation in the world, it was conceded. By passing it, we will make Ontario a world leader in drinking water protection and preservation.

Finally, just a note of caution, I say to the members opposite and to the member from St Catharines, who asked this in the briefing—you can operate a water filtration plant and privatize it.

Here's the quote, and this is a good one. It's from Broadcast News, from Keith Martin, an Alliance medical doctor: "A Vancouver Island MP is calling for national drinking water standards, based on the findings of the Walkerton inquiry. Alliance MP Keith Martin, a medical doctor, calls the Ontario report a useful document. He says the Ontario government took a leadership role by adopting its recommendations."

I say, yes, you can still go through the privatization route if you own the water filtration plant as a municipality, but you can't fob off your responsibilities. You still have the responsibility of assuring the water is safe. You can privatize it, contract it out, but the question will be, I suggest—and we suggest it will happen—that you better pay people on staff to insure that they're following those rules, because you can't give up your liability simply because you privatize it.

At the end, I'm just going to say in closing—I know I have three members who want to jump in—that we're proud of this bill. I am very proud of this government and the way they've handled this situation since that terrible tragedy in Walkerton. I've been to Walkerton, where we're building the centre for excellence, and I've talked to the people of Walkerton. I'm very proud of the fact that the local MPP, Bill Murdoch, has I think done an outstanding job in dealing with the issues in Walkerton and the people of his county.

I honestly believe that after review and debate—and I want healthy debate. I want to have committee time on this. I don't think it's a partisan issue. But I can't honestly believe that the opposition will vote against this bill. I think this is a great bill. The biggest complaint I can see from you is that it doesn't include source protection. I've said source protection will come in the spring. I would hate to think that an opposition party would vote against what I think is a really constructive and good piece of legislation because it didn't have some component that it wanted to see in there that they knew they were going to get in the spring.

I will challenge you at committee and I will challenge you in this House: if you find flaws as we debate the bill, tell me, because I want to hear it. I didn't draft this bill in a partisan way. I want to hear the flaws, and if we can fix them, we can.

Today there is a working group: Mr Murdoch is working with AMO to determine whether or not there are flaws in the regulations, to help draft the regulations to make sure they do what we think they should do.

So in closing, I'm going to be interested in hearing comments. I'll be interested in hearing your positions. But I want to also tip my hat to the Ministry of the Environment. It's been a ministry that has been bombarded and besieged in the last couple of years, probably a ministry that has had its fair share of debates and publicity. It's a heroic group of people who have stood up well to the constant demands of the people of this province and the newspapers and the politicians, and the opposition. I might add, as well. Some days we say things in here that I don't think we mean, and some days we've said some terrible things about the ministry staff that probably in hindsight we didn't believe. I think they have come a long way in the last two years and I'd also like to thank them as well.

I look forward to further debate, and I appreciate the chance to listen and hear your concerns.

The Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant): I'm pleased to contribute to this debate on the Safe Drinking Water Act, introduced very recently, October 29, by our Minister of the Environment. I think members are aware this proposed bill follows closely the recommendations of part two of Justice O'Connor's report. Premier Eves and our government are committed to act on these two reports, and I want to reiterate that all of the recommendations in them will be followed.

When Commissioner O'Connor's report was issued last May, our Minister of the Environment stated that the commissioner "offered his recommendations with one eye on Walkerton and one eye on the future, reflecting the balance that you would expect from someone skilled with the scales of justice."

It was encouraging to see that even as the report clearly called for change—and I point this out to the member opposite—it avoided condemnation. I'll quote Justice O'Connor: "My recommendations should not be viewed as a criticism of Ontario's current water quality standards. The current standards were established with great concern for the safety of the province's drinking water."

It is with this eye on the future that one of the prevailing themes evident in both parts one and two of the report has emerged in the proposed act: the theme of education and continuous learning. It's within this context that I will focus my comments with respect to mandatory training and certification requirements of operators of drinking water systems.

To start off on a positive note, I would like to refer all members' attention to some of the media coverage that our proposed legislation has received. I make reference to the Globe and Mail: Mr Bruce Davidson, vice-chair of the Concerned Walkerton Citizens Group, "praised the legislation that was introduced yesterday for 'ensuring that the people working in the water facilities are well trained' and for requiring that 'equipment has to be maintained and the appropriate equipment has to be in use.' A lack of training and lack of functioning equipment were among the causes of the Walkerton tragedy."

It is heartening to hear such encouraging words from people from Walkerton. Knowledgeable and capable operators are an essential element of safe drinking water, and this has been ably pointed out by our minister this evening. In both part one and part two, Commissioner O'Connor made several recommendations related to improving the quality and accessibility of training, as well as strengthening the licensing requirements for operators of municipal water works.

In part two, the recommendations state: "The Ministry of the Environment should continue to require the mandatory certification of persons who perform operational work in water treatment and distribution facilities." That's recommendation 59.

To continue, "The Ministry of the Environment should require water system operators who currently hold certificates obtained through the grandparenting process to become certified through examination within two years, and it should require operators to be recertified periodically" This is found in recommendation 60 and was addressed earlier by our minister.

To continue, "The Ministry of the Environment should require all applicants for an operator's license at the entry level to complete a training course that has a specific curriculum to ensure a basic minimum knowledge of principles in relevant subject areas," and I quote this from recommendation 61.

"The Ministry of the Environment should develop a comprehensive training curriculum for operators and should consolidate the current annual training requirement in Ontario regulation 435/93 and the proposed requirement of ministry-approved training into a single, integrated program approved by the Ministry of the Environment." This is recommendation 62.

If you'll bear with me, I'll also refer to recommendation 63: "The Ministry of the Environment should take measures to ensure that training courses are accessible to operators in small and remote communities and that the courses are tailored to meet the needs of the operators of these water systems." We all recognize that many of the water systems in rural areas do not need the kind of scrutiny and close approach that we're seeing in large urban areas.

"The Ministry of the Environment should meet with stakeholders to evaluate existing training courses and to determine the long-term training requirements of the waterworks industry. The ministry should play an active role in ensuring the availability of an array of courses on the subjects required to train operators." Again, this is from recommendation 64.

Operator training and certification ensures that municipal water system operators have the qualifications they need to perform their job and help protect the safety of drinking water in our province. It is this training that will really allow us to move from recommendation to reality.

The proposed act requires that all operators must have a valid operator's certificate in order to operate a drinking water system. This also includes all grandparented operators, who must be certified within two years of the regulations being made.

The regulations that would be made under this proposed act would recognize that there is really no substitute for education, examination and experience. All three are essential components of continuing to ensure competence in the system.

Those individuals who either own or operate a drinking water system will be required to conduct a training needs assessment of its operators and ensure that these operators have the skills they need to effectively carry out their responsibilities.

In the interests of clarity and to ensure that all operators understand what is expected of them, we are reviewing the current training and certification requirements for municipal drinking water operators. These are requirements found in the Ontario Water Resources Act, regulation 435/93, with the goal of making changes that will support Justice O'Connor's recommendations. Then the ministry would transfer them to a new regulation under the proposed Safe Drinking Water Act.

For example, the regulation would at a minimum require that all entry-level applicants successfully complete a training course to demonstrate a basic knowledge of water treatment and distribution principles, as well as the public health risk of contaminated water.

We have hired Georgian College to do a survey of current water treatment facility operators. This will provide us with more detail on essentially what is needed to certify these operators. We will hold meetings with knowledgeable stakeholders to discuss training and certification of operators, as well as the development of new curriculum that will provide operators with the latest information on developing the skills they need to meet these new requirements.

I should also mention that in response to Justice O'Connor's part one report, over the summer the Ministry of the Environment conducted a rigorous selection process in an effort to hire new staff. To date, the MOE has brought in 51 new drinking water inspectors and has hired 10 new supervisors.

Our commitment to bringing these people on indicates just how seriously the government is in dealing with safe drinking water.

Hand in hand with training and certification, operators of municipal waterworks need data and they need information in order to make knowledgeable and informed decisions.

The government will deliver on its budget commitment to establish the $50-million Clean Water Legacy Trust and the Clean Water Centre of Excellence to be located in Walkerton, again to provide access to the best scientific knowledge, research and technology and training in the management and monitoring of our safe drinking water.

Hand in hand with training and certification, operators of municipal waterworks need data and they need information in order to make knowledgeable and informed decisions.

A little closer to my part of Ontario, $365,500 was invested in the Norfolk county area, an agricultural area located on the Norfolk sand plain. The Norfolk study will produce information about groundwater at both the local and regional level. Regionally, the study will map sensitive groundwater areas, inventory potential sources of contamination and survey how groundwater is used within seven of the area's watersheds. At the local level, this Norfolk study will identify wellhead protection areas around municipal wells and potential contaminants. The information generated from this study will help the county, the conservation authority and other partners to better deal with some of these issues.

So there's a considerable amount of money presently being invested in studies to map sensitive groundwater areas, aquifers, to survey how groundwater is used and to identify wellhead protection areas around municipal wells. Again, the information generated by these studies clearly will help communities develop local source protection measures.

I've made my several points, and I would now like to turn this over to the member next door.

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): First of all, to people who might still have televisions on at home, who might be just about in the middle of trick-or-treating, I'm sure mothers and fathers at home keeping an eye on the safety of the children as they open the doors, I wish them a happy Halloween. I just want to assure them that their tax dollars are hard at work at Queen's Park, as are all of us, from each side. Members from every party are here.

Mr Kormos: There're only four over there.

Mr Gill: Yes, there are more here. Naturally we have more numbers because we were given that mandate, and there are many more things to be done for the next five years, as we all agree.

It is a pleasure this evening to be discussing and debating a very important bill, and that bill is our commitment to provide Ontarians the safest drinking water in the world. Now, that's a tall order. I know we're up to the job and will come through, as we have always come through, with our promises. So I am pleased.

I remind the viewers at home that we are today talking about the Safe Drinking Water Act, which was introduced a couple of days ago, on October 29.

As members are aware, part two of the Report of the Walkerton Inquiry was released last May. Judge O'Connor made 93 recommendations on how the province could ensure the safe delivery of drinking water, including a recommendation specifically addressing the need for the province to create a Safe Drinking Water Act.

In those recommendations, in recommendation 67 to be specific, Commissioner O'Connor stated, "The provincial government should enact a Safe Drinking Water Act to deal with matters related to the treatment and distribution of drinking water."

As the members know, this government is committed to implementing all the recommendations made by Commissioner O'Connor. Premier Eves has been very forthright, and as soon as the report came out, he agreed that we would be implementing all the recommendations. This includes the passage of the excellent piece of legislation introduced by the Minister of the Environment, the Honourable Chris Stockwell. He just finished speaking very passionately about this bill because he, as well as all of us, is committed to providing the safest drinking water in the world to our constituents and the people of Ontario.

The proposed bill includes a number of significant new components that will ensure the protection of drinking water in Ontario. As you know, when the bill was introduced the other day, the opposition mentioned that it doesn't do much about the wellheads and incoming water supplies. As the minister said very clearly, he is working on that and will have something forthcoming in early spring, I believe he said, so stay tuned. We want to make sure that, once again, we do the right thing.

During this debate, I will try and focus my comments on the new requirements for the licensing and accreditation of drinking water labs. An editorial in The Toronto Star earlier this week said, "There's a lot to like in the Ontario government's proposed Safe Drinking Water Act." That's the Toronto Star. Many times they're not very complimentary, for some strange reason; we just have to accept that as their editorial style. But in this case they've already said, "There's a lot to like in the Ontario government's proposed Safe Drinking Water Act. On the positive side, the act would force testing labs to be accredited and all operators of water systems to be licensed." Those words are positive. It is true that lab licensing and accreditation will play a significant role in the protection of our drinking water.

In part two of his report, Commissioner O'Connor made the following observations regarding Ontario's drinking water labs. I'm going to be quoting right from Commissioner O'Connor's substantial and important report:

"Environmental laboratories conduct a wide variety of tests for water providers, including chemical, physical, and microbiological tests of raw, treated and distributed water. Depending on the size and complexity of its system, a water provider might have anywhere from dozens to thousands of water tests conducted on a weekly basis....

"Laboratory testing plays a critical role in determining whether contaminants are present in the system.... The prompt and reliable reporting of test results by laboratories is especially important ... when dangerous contaminants have entered the distribution system."

From these observations, Commissioner O'Connor made three specific recommendations.

First, "The provincial government should phase in the mandatory accreditation of laboratories for all testing parameters, and all drinking water testing should be performed only by accredited facilities." If people at home want to check it out, it's recommendation 41.

Second, "The Ministry of the Environment should license and periodically inspect, as required, environmental laboratories that offer drinking water testing; as with water treatment operations, continuing accreditation should be a condition of license." Specifically, that is recommendation 42.

Third, "The results of laboratory accreditation audits should be provided to the Ministry of the Environment and should be publicly available." This is recommendation 43. This is so the people at home, through the Internet, can check the accreditation and see if the labs are still meeting what they are supposed to be meeting.

If passed, the proposed Safe Drinking Water Act will require all labs that test drinking water to be licensed by the Ministry of the Environment and accredited by a designated accreditation agency on behalf of the Ministry of the Environment. Only accredited testing methods implemented through Ministry regulations will be used and accepted. No other jurisdiction in Canada requires mandatory licensing and accreditation for labs. This is a first in terms of having accreditation in Ontario. Any and every lab has to be accredited.

There are also several conditions associated with obtaining these licences. These conditions are grounded in the principles of openness and accountability. This will help ensure the viability of the labs being accredited. For example, standard provisions of a Ministry of the Environment licence would include an expiry date with a specified renewal period to be defined by regulation and the ability on the part of the Ministry of the Environment to suspend or revoke a licence. It's not an open-ended licence. It is reviewed from time to time and can be revoked. And it should be revoked if labs are not meeting the standards. In addition, there will be offence provisions and an appeal process through the environmental review tribunal.

In deciding whether to issue or renew a licence, ministry officials will consider the following critical factors, which do not preclude any other grounds that may be prescribed by regulation in the future:

Is the lab able to meet notification and reporting requirements?

If this is an existing lab, has the lab operated in a competent manner, in accordance with the act and regulations?

If this is a new lab, ministry officials will make a similar assessment regarding its perceived competencies.

Does the lab have appropriate staff, resources, suitable premises and equipment?

Does the lab have the necessary record management capacity?

Last, but certainly not least, will the lab operate with honesty and integrity?

You can have all the rules and regulations in the world, but if people are not following those rules and regulations, I think we have a different problem, which is what happened, as I understand it, in the case of the Koebel brothers in Walkerton. They knew what had to be done, but they had not been doing that for I don't know how many years. As Minister Stockwell said, they had been doing the same thing when the Liberals and the NDP were there, and they certainly were doing the same thing when we were there, and they got caught.

The people of Ontario must have confidence that the answer to each of these questions is yes. The proposed Safe Drinking Water Act is designed to provide this confidence.

Once a licence has been obtained by a drinking water lab, the principle of ongoing accountability continues to be an important condition. The Ministry of the Environment will have the authority to inspect all labs performing drinking water tests. The ministry may also amend, revoke or renew a licence on the same grounds as set out for issuing a licence and based on the results of any inspections or audits.

The following scenario briefly outlines the conditions attached to every licence; they do not include other conditions that may be prescribed by regulation:

The lab shall only conduct drinking water tests for which it has been accredited by the designated agency.

The lab shall take all reasonable steps to keep its accreditation in good standing, including the payment of any fees for the accreditation program as the designated agency may require from time to time, and the lab shall submit to any audit by the designated accrediting agency.

In the spirit of openness, the results of lab audits will be provided to the Ministry of the Environment and will be made public. These labs must not only be doing the right thing, but must be seen as doing the right thing. False or misleading information regarding drinking water tests will be an offence. There will be zero tolerance for infractions.

As identified earlier, the Minister of the Environment may designate provincial officers with the power to inspect labs. As you are no doubt aware, we have already hired inspectors to carry out this very important function—51 inspectors, to be exact.

The powers of provincial officers to inspect labs are consistent with existing powers under the Environmental Protection Act and the Ontario Water Resources Act. In addition, offence provisions are also consistent with these two acts.

The proposed licensing and accreditation of drinking water labs sets high standards and expectations on those who will perform drinking water tests. We will expect those standards to be honoured consistently and 100% of the time. There is no margin for error. The public's trust and safety is at stake.

I would urge all members first of all to familiarize themselves with Bill 195. It is a hefty piece of legislation. A lot of care and thought has gone into it. It is in compliance and trying to meet all the requirements Justice O'Connor mentioned in both parts of his report on Walkerton.

It is important to have labs that, first of all, know what they're doing, and that have the personnel who know what they're doing and the tools. They must be accredited and they must keep their licence ongoing and active.

I urge all members of this House to have a speedy approval process of this bill. A lot of times when everybody agrees, we still want hours and hours of debate, and then they wonder why there is closure. Eventually one says that enough has been said. Justice O'Connor has said we must do the right thing. It's all spelled out. The bill is pretty clear about what has to be done. Let's do the right thing.

Once again, Mr Speaker, I wish you and everybody at home a happy Halloween.

The Speaker: Thank you. Questions and comments?

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): One of the questions I have, and perhaps the parliamentary assistant can assist me with this: there is the top person who will be the head of water or the water commissioner, shall we call that person. I'm wondering if someone on the government side can explain to whom that person will report.

For instance, if that person were to report only to the Minister of the Environment, I think it would be much less advantageous than if that person were to report instead to the Legislative Assembly. If you had an Environmental Commissioner who reported only to the government or only to the Minister of the Environment, that would be much less advantageous than his having a public forum, as he does now—he can report from time to time, have a press conference and be asked about these things. I was asked about that by someone and really don't know, and I'm wondering who the person reports to.

Second, some of the appointments I see here, in terms of advisory committees, are not order-in-council appointments; they're made, in this case, by the minister himself. I would think it might be better, if we look at it in perspective, to have order-in-council appointments, because those people have to go through the review process of the standing committee on government agencies. At that time, those people could be questioned by both members of the opposition and members of the government. Their resumés are put before us, and we get a better idea of the people who are going to be part of what I think is going to be a very important committee; that is, an advisory committee.

I don't see in this bill the kind of hostages you see in some government bills, the kind of item that would automatically make you oppose the bill. I want to commend that, but I do see some deficiencies that I'll discuss a little later on when I have an opportunity to speak at length.

Mr Kormos: In short order or, more precisely, in an hour and around eight minutes, Ms Churley, the member from Toronto-Danforth, is going to be speaking of the New Democratic Party with respect to this bill after Mr Bradley does the leadoff for his caucus. But I reflect on the comments made by the minister. During the course of his comments, the minister was prevailing upon people in this chamber: "Let's not be partisan about this." Yet during the course of his speech, which was in no small way textured, crafted, a speech clearly designed not to be listened to but read when it's published, and a speech, I put to you, very strategically—at least that's the government's limited capacity to be strategic—made in the absence of the press gallery, a speech that was very clearly very partisan and a naive attempt to somehow prevail upon opposition members, "Oh, let's not be partisan."

The fact of the matter is that nobody died drinking water in this province under either of the two governments that preceded this Conservative government of Mike Harris in 1995. The fact of the matter is that this matter can't be swept under the rug by pointing the finger solely at the Koebel brothers.

Ms Churley had a safe drinking water act before. This also received second reading, with support from all three parties—September 28—not 2001; September 28, 2000. It was an act that quite frankly was far more comprehensive than the legislation that this government, with some great nerve, puts before the Legislature today, so long after the fact.

I call upon people to consider the minister's comments very, very carefully and to regard them in the partisan style that in fact they were intended.

The Speaker: Further questions and comments?

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): I want to compliment the minister on his opening remarks as well as the members from Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant and Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale for their remarks.

It's an excellent bill. I know that the members opposite, at the end of the day, will vote in favour of the bill. As the minister said, we will have a lot of healthy debate. The minister has said that he looks forward to the input he will receive in debate and in public hearings, I believe, and the amendments that may come forward from all members of the Legislature on the bill.

I want to commend the minister. I know that he's worked extremely hard on this for the last little while, and he's had difficult grillings even from his own caucus members. He has come forward with an excellent bill.

His speech was also a terrific leadoff, and I think that most people will have a look at what he said. I think most people are aware of what happened at Walkerton. Not very many people have said what the minister said tonight, but I think a lot of people feel that way from what they read in the papers about the Walkerton incident.

Before I sit down, while I am not the PA, I do know some answers to the member from St Catharines' question. The member asked about the chief inspector. I just wanted him to know that indeed the chief inspector reports to the minister, but it is my understanding that report will be a public report in the years to come. Also, he should be reminded that under this proposed act, the government is required to submit to the Legislature an annual State of Ontario's Drinking Water report. I hope that clarifies that and will answer that concern.

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I had the opportunity to be in my office and listen very carefully to the opening remarks by the minister, the parliamentary assistant and the member from Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale. I was listening very carefully because I had the opportunity to speak with a water system manager from my riding this week, who was actually in this city being briefed on the contents of the bill. It was during that conversation with the water manager that he indicated to me—I asked initially what I should be looking for as a local member, what things would be important to a water manager to understand within the body of the legislation so he could do his job well in the community in my riding. The point he made to me and, I have to say very sadly, something I didn't hear in any of the opening remarks was the role, the commitment and the support the provincial government was going to have to ensure that communities did have safe drinking water.

In fact, the government is really quite silent in this bill in terms of what they are prepared to do to ensure that communities of all sizes, in all locations across Ontario, have access to safe drinking water.

I'm certainly encouraged to understand from the members who spoke this evening that the minister is inclined to listen very carefully during the course of debates on this important issue. I hope the minister understands that a lot of people in Ontario—I believe the minister will hear this if there are public consultations on it—want to know how the province is prepared to support communities to ensure we have safe drinking water in Ontario.

The Speaker: Response?

Mr Gill: First of all, I want to take this opportunity to thank every member—

Mr O'Toole: The member for Durham.

Mr Gill: —who spoke. I know the member for Durham did listen to my comments as well, and he did compliment me as soon as he came back into the House.

The member for St Catharines spoke. I want to thank the member because he commended the government for coming forward with such a great bill. He agreed and said there were no so-called hostages in this bill and no wedge issues; that everybody agrees it's a good bill and we must proceed with it quickly.

The member from Haldimand-Norfolk also spoke on this bill.

The minister certainly had a great leadoff and tried to cover all the angles to make sure that Ontarians have the best drinking water in the world.

The member for Niagara Centre spoke right after the member for St Catharines. The member for St Catharines commended the government; the member for Niagara Centre said it's a partisan thing. I'm not sure, but maybe he wasn't listening at that time, because it certainly is not partisan. It's just a good bill for the people of Ontario.

The member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington said she spoke to the water manager from her municipality. That is a good thing, because in the past we took things for granted and said, "Ontario water is safe." I don't think we ever sat down with the municipalities or the water managers to see what their concerns were, we just took things for granted.

I'm quite happy that with the proposed Bill 195 we are moving ahead in implementing Justice O'Connor's recommendations for the safest drinking water in the world right here in Ontario.

The Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Bradley: I was somewhat amused by listening to revisionist history this evening. My good friend the Minister of the Environment portrayed himself as non-partisan and then delivered essentially a partisan message. The reason you know that is, I have friends in the Conservative party and I know when they speak, they're speaking from the Tory notes that come out. They even send them out from time to time, so you know what the speaking notes are. You, as Speaker, wouldn't get them because you're non-partisan. In fact, you have a petition out in your constituency office which condemns the government for allowing those astounding increases in hydro rates.

I want to go back to why we are here this evening with this bill. I want to say again—and I think certainly the critic from the New Democratic Party would agree with me, and even, in their heart of hearts, many members of the government—had it not been for the Walkerton tragedy, we would not have this bill in this form before us this evening. Since Walkerton, a lot of what you see happening with this government they never in their wildest dreams had any intention of doing and, to this day, in their heart of hearts, still don't want to do. I think you have to remember that.

This government has some strengths. I don't consider this a particular strength, but if you're in favour of downsizing government, if you're in favour of characterizing government as an evil force, if you're interested in giving tax cuts to the wealthiest people in the province, then you would say that's what this government is about, and if you wanted to give them credit for that, you would do so. But when it comes to the environment, virtually everything they have done has been as a result of being dragged kicking and screaming into it, forced into it by a public that is sensitive to the environment.

I note that in the most recent poll available, the Green Party now registers some 6%, and about 8%, someone told me the other day, in the greater Toronto area. Plus, the opposition parties combined are substantially ahead of the government. What that indicates in this snapshot—because that's what polls are, a snapshot—is that there's a lot of concern about the environment.

I would have felt more comfortable—and I don't say this simply because she is here tonight—in terms of the defence of the environment if the Deputy Premier, now the Minister of Education, had been permitted to retain that role. She and I would have some disagreements, but I genuinely felt there would be somebody there to defend the environment.

If I can go to the Kyoto accord, for instance, the question I asked the other day is, who is speaking for the environment in the government? You expect that the Minister of Finance has a certain view on environmental issues, and that the minister of economic development or whatever the new name is—enterprise and innovation and things of that nature—and even the Minister of Energy—our former minister, Mr Stockwell, unfortunately was both—are going to take perhaps a view that isn't very sympathetic to the environment, but you hope that the Minister of the Environment is going to be the one with sharp elbows, persuasive arguments and a genuine commitment to putting forward the environmental view in the government.

Instead, what I witnessed at the federal-provincial conference was our Minister of the Environment being the anti-minister of the environment, aligning himself, along with the Premier of this province, with Ralph Klein and with the Minister of the Environment of Alberta. Again, if you want to ask has Mr Klein been successful in economic terms in the province, particularly with all the oil in the ground, the answer is probably yes. On environmental issues, would objective people across the country look to Alberta for leadership? The answer I think clearly would be no. There are many areas in which they might say there has been progress and there has been something to applaud. One area you would not say is the environment, and yet I saw Premier Eves, almost arm in arm with Premier Klein, denouncing the Kyoto accord, and that's a different role. Mr Speaker, you've been in the House I think since 1990. That's a different role than Ontario has played in years gone by and a somewhat disappointing role as far as I'm concerned.

I want to go back to why this bill is before us. Is it before us because the government promised it somewhere along the line? No, it is not. Is it before us because the government wants to bring this legislation forward? It is not. It is a direct result of the tragedy of Walkerton, where for the first time in the history of Ontario, seven people died from drinking the water and well over 1,000 people were seriously ill, some of whom will be seriously for years to come as a result of the consumption of locally produced water.

It was the contention of the government—and I've heard this before. As I say, you hear it in the government talking points when you speak to your Conservative friends. They would like to portray it as these two local yokels who were not very good, to say the least, at operating a water system. More objective observers, including Justice O'Connor if you read his report carefully, rejected that contention. Yes, we recognize that they played a role. He said, however, that you cannot simply pin the blame on these two individuals and say there were not other causes.

I think it goes back to a fundamental decision made by this government. I don't want to put words in the mouth of the Speaker or others, but I well recall three, four or perhaps five members of the Conservative caucus, including the present Minister of the Environment, who cautioned, before the Common Sense Revolution was announced and immediately after the government came into office, not to proceed with tax cuts before the budget was balanced. I thought that was sage advice.

If people had said, "You have to address the fiscal problems of the province," most people would have agreed with that. What happened, however, was that not only did the government make massive cuts to many ministries, including the Ministry of the Environment, but at the same time it was invoking tax cuts, which meant they had to make even deeper cuts in those ministries.

They would have been wise to listen to what I recall was your counsel, Mr Speaker, that of my good friend Ted Arnott, my friend Chris Stockwell and I think maybe Morley Kells, a couple of others anyway, who said, "Please think about this carefully." If I'm correct, even during the leadership campaign I thought I heard the Minister of the Environment, when he was running, say, "You know something, folks? You've got to get things in order. You can't go out and make tax cuts until you have your budget balanced and you've got things in order." I think that would have been wise advice.

But what happened instead was that the government engaged in massive cuts to ministries, and one of the real targets was the Ministry of the Environment. Why was that? Well, there's a considerable number of people in the government caucus who don't like the Ministry of the Environment and certainly didn't like it during the years that the New Democrats were in power, the Liberals were in power and perhaps even the Davis Conservatives. Why? Because the government was aggressively chasing polluters and was being tough on environmental issues. So the nod and the wink and the elbowing of people was saying, "Don't worry. We'll get the Ministry of the Environment out of your face"—a promise made, a promise kept. They sure as heck got the Ministry of the Environment out of the faces of a lot of polluters and proceeded to virtually dismantle that ministry.

Why I am personally saddened by that is that I recall my many discussions with the Treasurer of the day, the Honourable Robert Nixon, about the need for substantially more staff and larger budgets and greater clout for the Ministry of the Environment. As a good Treasurer, as a good Minister of Finance and a person who I think one could say was fiscally cautious, he of course would challenge those contentions I would put forward. Fortunately, Premier Peterson was in tune with the contentions I would put before the cabinet.

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): I think he's breaking cabinet solidarity.

Mr Bradley: I may be breaking cabinet solidarity to say it, but the point I want to make is that the ministry was turned around completely. First of all, it had the financial resources to do its job properly, second; it had the staffing levels to do it; and third, it had the clout to do it within government—much to the annoyance of some of my former cabinet colleagues from time to time, ministers of mines and other ministries, who did not always like the Ministry of the Environment. But it was a strong ministry; it was an enthusiastic ministry. If you ask the members of the Ministry of the Environment today, "What was your heyday?" they would not say it is today. A lot of them are no longer with the ministry, because they were fired out the door.

So what happened? Well, this government, in its rush to invoke tax cuts before balancing the budget, in its ideological opposition to government as a whole, in its dislike for the Ministry of the Environment and what it perceived to be its interference with economic growth in the province, proceeded to make damaging and deep cuts to the Ministry of the Environment. Virtually one third of the staff were fired out the door, a lot of very good people, a lot of very competent people, respected not only in Ontario but in Canada and throughout the world. Second, the budget was cut by 50%. Third, the staff were told to be business-friendly. They know how to define that. That means, "Don't push business too hard."

What I found in my experience, by the way, to give a compliment to business, was that there were many people in the business sector who were in fact prepared to be ahead of government, to make major changes in their style of operation, to put in catchment systems for the pollution they produced, but even better, to change the way in which they produced their products so as not to produce contaminants in the first place.

So there were many progressive people out there—not all, by any means. They were the people who were most critical when governments got easy on polluters. The reason they were is that they spent the time, they spent the energy, they spent the money, they trained their employees and they were getting kudos for what they were doing in the environment. When they saw competitors begin to get away with what they didn't get away with and to gain a short-term competitive advantage, they were justifiably annoyed.

We were all shocked when we heard what happened in Walkerton, when the news came on finally that people were dying from drinking the water. We all remember the medical officer of health on television, and his solemn pronouncements. He turned out to be a hero in this particular case. But when we heard of the tragedy and we saw the people who were really, really ill, when we saw the lack of confidence, which still exists, unfortunately, in many people in Walkerton about the water supply and others across the province who are lacking in confidence in the water supply, I think all of us were genuinely troubled by that, saddened by the tragedy that happened in Walkerton.

I think that was a fundamental change in this government. I don't mean this as a pun or in any way like that at all: it was a watershed for the government in terms of its thinking. It hit a wall. The philosophy was that government was bad, that you should dismantle as much as possible, that you should get the government out of the faces of individuals and companies and industries and so on. I think much of that has swung back in the other direction. Part of that, I might say, came from the tragedy of September 2001 in New York and Washington, where people saw that public servants played a very significant role. Even in the US, I think I saw the pendulum begin to swing back the other way.

But remembering what happened in Walkerton, the tragedy and all of the warnings that were given to government, the Provincial Auditor, who is totally objective—the Provincial Auditor is a person who, no matter who's in power, carefully analyzes what's happening in government to make sure we're getting value for the dollars and comments on what's happening. The Environmental Commissioners, Eva Ligeti, first of all, who was ultimately fired by this government for being too critical of the government, and subsequently our new Environmental Commissioner, Gordon Miller, both have been critical of this government and have issued warnings to this government about its policies and the potential consequences.

The Walkerton inquiry, conducted by Justice O'Connor, went into some detail about the government having two sets of business plans, one that it showed to the public and one that it showed internally to the cabinet and members of caucus. So when these massive cuts were being made to a ministry that was an overseer of municipalities and others, in fact they knew that the risk to the water supply of this province would be increased considerably by the action taken in virtually dismantling the Ministry of the Environment.

I well recall, as will others in this House who have been here a while, the excellent job that was done by the Ministry of the Environment laboratories. We had a central laboratory and we had regional laboratories. This government, as a cost-cutting measure in 1996, closed those laboratories virtually overnight and forced municipalities to scramble to find somewhere to have their water tested in about an eight-week period of time.

Virtually everybody who has observed this, and even people at the time said, "This is madness." If you don't have rules in place, particularly for reporting to the medical officer of health when there's a problem, and when the reporting is only to the operator of the system, that's bound to cause problems. I remember a memo from Jim Wilson, if I can use his name, then as Minister of Health, to the Honourable Norm Sterling as Minister of the Environment, a memo which warned about this. That memo was based on staff input to the minister. When a specific memo or letter goes from one minister to the other saying, "Watch out; this is a problem," in terms of the reporting of adverse results in water testing, then you know that that minister is either protecting himself or at least trying to transmit a message.

We now are—what?—two and a half years after the Walkerton tragedy, and at long last we have a bill introduced which addresses some of the concerns that began to flow from that. There were many warnings at the time about the consequences of the cuts to the Ministry of the Environment.

I remember Dr Richard Schabas, a person for whom I, and I think most people in the province, have a good deal of respect, saying the following in his testimony, and this probably symbolized what was happening in the government at the time. Let me quote directly from his testimony:

"The third meeting, which to the best of my recollection was at the end of May of 1997, I was actually in Montreal with the minister and with the deputy at a meeting of the federal and provincial medical officers of health, we were there to discuss the creation of the board agency, which I was very much involved with as a policy standpoint from the ministry, and we had a discussion that morning at which point the minister and the deputy both identified the fact that the proposed policy changes and legislative changes were going back to policy and priorities committee of cabinet that afternoon and there was not going to be anyone there to represent the viewpoint of the ministry or the viewpoint of public health and there were a number of important issues that were still on the table for that day's discussion.

"So, at the direction of the minister, I came back, I missed the second half of the minister's meeting, came back to Toronto to attend the policy and priorities committee meeting, which would have been in the late afternoon, and the way these meetings work, there's a little anteroom where all the civil servants who come in for selected items wait and we sat and waited for the public health item to be called. When it was, I came in to the meeting and sat down in the appropriate chair for the table to prepare to discuss these issues, at which point an official assistant deputy minister in cabinet office came over and put his hand on my shoulder and said, 'Dr Schabas, the Premier doesn't want you here for this discussion.'

"So I was taken aback and started to express my concerns to him and then I looked and I realized that the Premier himself was sitting directly across the table from me so I turned and I addressed my remarks to the Premier and basically said that the Minister of Health has specifically asked that I be here, that these are important issues with regard to public health, they are important concerns, and that in my view it was very important that the viewpoint of public health be heard in these discussions and the Premier looked at me and I was quite certain was hearing what I was saying, we weren't more than a few feet apart, and then he basically turned away from me and, I mean, as far as I was concerned, the Premier was turning his back on public health and then I left the meeting and that was the last opportunity that we had to discuss these before these changes were made to the public health system."

Let me put that in context. This is the chief medical officer of health, a non-partisan person who serves no matter who is in office, saying that the Premier had turned his back on public health.

The warnings were there. You see, when the Ministry of the Environment laboratories existed, if there were an adverse result in a test, if there were any abnormalities, not only was the local operator notified but also the medical officer of health was notified. Had that happened in Walkerton, had that regime been in place in Walkerton, we would not have had the seven deaths and the thousands of people who are ill.

That is the context in which we find ourselves in Walkerton. So when my good friend the Minister of the Environment paints a picture of two individuals operating a water system and they're almost entirely responsible for this, it is not a picture which is agreed to by others. Certainly a role was played there, but Dr Richard Schabas would not agree. As I read the testimony, or as I read the final report of Justice O'Connor, he did not come to that conclusion either. He said certainly the government's oversight, or lack of oversight, played a significant role.

As I think was pointed out earlier by the member for Niagara Centre, seven people had not died before—nobody had died before—from drinking water in Ontario, and massive numbers of people had not become ill before in the province. So with the lack of staff, with the lack of resources and with the lack of clout, the Ministry of the Environment was unable to do its job as it would like to have done. In fact, there was testimony which indicated that the Red Tape Commission, this sinister group within the government that was there to find what it would say were unnecessary regulations, had intimidated Ministry of the Environment officials to such an extent that they did not even bring forward recommendations as to how the reporting system should work when the laboratory testing was privatized. That's how intimidated they were. They felt they would not be listened to, that they would be criticized.

So you have to look at the atmosphere. It was an axe swinging wildly and without thought in 1996. Now we see the government creeping back from that through various pieces of legislation; in fact, through regulation and through some policy changes. But that was only because we saw seven people die from drinking water in the province of Ontario.

Those massive cuts were made not only to the Ministry of the Environment but to the Ministry of Natural Resources. The Ministry of Natural Resources, as a lot of people don't understand, has a lot to do with water quantity and quality as well. They had a lot of people who were dealing with water quantity and quality, either directly through the Ministry of Natural Resources or indirectly through their funding and association with conservation authorities. Keep in mind, and you would know this from your area, Mr Speaker, that there were massive cuts made to the budgets and staff of conservation authorities as well.

So all of this oversight of our water system was cut back. In fact, we have seen it continue. The Environmental Commissioner, Gordon Miller, in his latest report revealed to the public of the province that when this government took office, there were some 730 monitoring stations on our streams and rivers and lakes, and that by the year 2000 that had diminished to 240—almost 500 monitoring stations removed. Surely, as everyone recognizes, the raw water supply has to be monitored and protected so we don't have these problems.

One of the initiatives the government moved slowly on but finally passed in terms of legislation was what was called the Nutrient Management Act. That really refers to manure and sewage. We use the word "nutrient" in a way, I guess, to avoid using those words. But even with that act, the regulations are not in place yet. There is still a consultation going on. There are even some exemptions. I am told that raw sewage from outhouses, for want of a better word, can be spread on agricultural land. That doesn't make any sense to me. There are even people who are genuinely concerned about sewage that comes from sewage treatment plants, that has been treated, being placed on agricultural land, but most assuredly untreated sewage being placed on agricultural land is a problem.

Within the Ministry of the Environment there is not the inspection regime available to deal with this issue, and the Minister of the Environment was not even allowed to have the lead. The lead was given to the Ministry of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. So that legislation, much cheered about by the government, is not implemented appropriately yet and has a lot of flaws in it. It is more flash than substance in terms of its effect on protecting the raw water supply, the groundwater or surface water that we use for drinking purposes.

I recall, when the incident broke, what happened. They asked the Premier the questions in this House. First of all, he blamed the NDP. He said, "Oh, well, it's not my fault. It was the NDP. They started it all." That was quickly put aside when it was revealed that in fact the major massive cuts were made by the government, not by the NDP.

Then the town of Walkerton was at fault because they didn't take advantage of infrastructure money that was available. Then somebody—I think it was the federal member from Grey-Owen Sound—showed evidence that in fact Walkerton had taken advantage of this funding. So that took that out of place.

Finally, after much discussion and debate in this House and questions in and outside the House, the Premier was dragged, kicking and screaming, into allowing a public inquiry. I must give my colleague Mr Conway probably the lion's share of the credit in one question that he asked, and many of us asked questions in the House. The day he got up in a very impassioned way and asked questions of the government, finally the government capitulated. But it was in an impassioned way, because I had asked questions, the leader of the official opposition, Dalton McGuinty, the critic for the NDP and the leader of the NDP had all asked questions about a public inquiry. I don't know what finally motivates a government, but I remember the very impassioned plea made by my colleague from Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke that day, and finally the government capitulated, after much weeping and gnashing of teeth, to have a public inquiry.

I want to say something positive about the appointment that was made. I thought the appointment of Justice O'Connor was a good appointment. I didn't know that much, not being a lawyer or involved in the judicial system, and I asked my colleague from St Paul's about this. I said to him, "What about Justice O'Connor? Is he a good choice?" The answer was yes. I think most people out there said yes. It turned out he was a good choice, in my view. I like the way he conducted the inquiry. I like the way he was able to speak to the average citizens within Walkerton and wherever he went in the province, as well as to the so-called experts. I thought, as I say, the manner in which he conducted the inquiry was superior to what I've seen in many cases. That's why I think the recommendations he made were so compelling for all members of the House and why they are included in this legislation, as I think they should be.

I do want to say, however, that when we talk about the regime of the day, let's look at the inspections that were done. By the way, I should mention something that a lot of people wouldn't realize. Do people in this House realize that the operating budget of the Ministry of the Environment was higher in 1976 than it is today? That's 26 years ago.

Hon Janet Ecker (Minister of Finance): That's because we had Energy.

Mr Bradley: I don't know if that was the case in 1976. I'm pretty sure, if you think back to 1976, it was only the Ministry of the Environment in those days. I think subsequent to that they were combined. I remember my friend Robert Welch was Minister of Energy for a while. But I think it was separate from that in those days. It's interesting to see that in 1976—it wasn't a Liberal or NDP government; it was a Conservative government of the day—it was even higher than when this government is in effect today, even after it has made some additions to the ministry.

So the number of inspections was way down. The government kept diminishing the number of inspections. The inspection team that used to go out to the municipalities to see what was going on was virtually dismantled. I remember when they went on their blitz, they had to hire some of those people back; they had to hire people from wherever they could to do the inspections that were to take place at the time. So I thought the annual reporting, what I call the drinking water surveillance program, had been allowed to slide, the inspection regime had been allowed to slide, and yet there were many out there warning of problems that could happen not only in Walkerton but in other municipalities.

We must remember that the finance minister of the day, through all these massive cuts, through the dismantling and destruction of the Ministry of the Environment, was none other than the Hon Ernie Eves, who is now the Premier of the province of Ontario. I can't blame the present Minister of Finance, who is with us this evening, because she wasn't the Minister of Finance of the day, but I can certainly tell you who was, and that was the Honourable Ernie Eves.

So we have a circumstance where we now have a drinking water act before us. As I mentioned at the beginning, one of the things I liked about the bill—although the member for Bramalea-Gore-Springdale and somewhere else heaped praise on it; I think that was an overstatement—was a lack of hostages. In other words, in a lot of government bills they'll bring in a poison pill that the opposition can't swallow and can't vote for. This bill doesn't have that.

Is it missing some components? It sure is. It does not have a component that allows people to take legal action against the government. It does not have a component that deals with water sources. It does not have a component that specifies—

Ms Churley: Public right to know.

Mr Bradley: Public right to know is not found in this bill, as my colleague from Toronto-Danforth points out.

It does not spell out the kind of financing that must be part of the implementation of this bill. And there's still a regulatory framework that must be finalized.

The appointments made to the advisory committee of the Minister of the Environment are at the discretion of the minister. As I mentioned, I think, in my response to the government in its initial discussion, I think it would be superior to have those as order-in-council appointments, to be analyzed and scrutinized by the government agencies committee.

My good friend Bob Wood, who is a prominent member of that committee, is here tonight, and I might add that I, as an opposition member, find him a helpful member of that committee in that he certainly does his job for the government but in my view he helps the committee function as it should. I would think, although I can't put words in his mouth, that in his heart of hearts he would probably like to see the people come before that committee as order-in-council appointments, so that members of his caucus and members of the two other caucuses could interview the people and see if they are the best possible people for that job.

Earlier this evening, my friend Bart Maves answered the question as to whom the water commissioner shall report. He can correct me if I'm wrong, but I thought he said "reports to the minister"—

Mr Maves: Publicly.

Mr Bradley: In public. But I think it would be superior if that person were an officer of the House, who reported to all members of the Legislature. I can tell members opposite that were they in opposition, they would feel even more strongly about that than they might in government. I notice that even within government caucuses, including the federal government caucus at this time, there's a feeling that individual members want to have more say. Having that person as an officer of the House, as opposed to reporting to the Minister of the Environment, albeit publicly, would be superior in this legislation.

Virtually everyone who has made reference to this says, "Look, you have to deal with the sources of water." We saw the cutback from 730 monitoring stations to 240 monitoring stations. That's an indication the government is moving backwards. Conservation authorities can play a very significant role in that. If they're given the financial resources, the staff and the clout, they can deal with that. The Ministry of Natural Resources and the Ministry of the Environment can deal with that. I think it's going to be important that we deal with the sources.

Again, the Provincial Auditor, the two Environmental Commissioners we've had in the Legislature and the Ontario Medical Association are among the people who have said we have to address the problem, the challenge, of the raw water supply out there. I'm disappointed that the government is only now appointing, or is about to appoint, a committee to look into it. I think it could have been done simultaneously with this bill or indeed could have been started last spring as part of a legislative or regulatory framework, and that has not happened.

Let's get down to the implementation of the bill. Anybody who is knowledgeable about the Ministry of the Environment knows there will have to be a massive investment of funds in the Ministry of the Environment to ensure it can carry out its role under the provisions of this bill. If the bill is to mean anything, if the words in the bill, the provisions of the bill, are to be meaningful, the Ontario Ministry of the Environment is going to have to play a significant role in the implementation of this bill. They will need many more staff—dozens upon dozens more staff than they have today—and they'll require millions more dollars more, and again the clout.

The minister and some of the others who have spoken on the government side make the point, "We've hired this many new people." What I would point out is that they fired those people out the door. They're now trying to replace some of the people who were fired out the door.

What has to happen is that the Ministry of the Environment has to be restored to its former budget, at the very least, and to its former staffing level, also at the very least, to do its job appropriately.

It is said by members of the government that this is going to be the best drinking water in the world, that this is the strongest bill in the world. I'm surprised they didn't say in the universe.

Hon Mrs Ecker: OK, then.

Mr Bradley: The Minister of Finance says the universe will do. We like to be critical, we Canadians, of Americans. There are many states that have tougher drinking water standards than we have anywhere in Canada, and some federal legislation. I hate admitting that from time to time. But if you look at specifics in some of their legislation, it's stronger than ours. So this contention that somehow this is going to be the strongest bill ever anywhere, is one which will not hold water, just as when the government says it's implementing all the recommendations of the Walkerton report, of the Justice O'Connor report, they're really not doing so. They're nodding and winking at some of them and fully implementing others, but they're certainly not fully implementing them.

This bill doesn't deal with privatization. I'm afraid that some of the provisions of the bill will drive smaller municipalities into privatizing the water system within their area if there is not a component that provides for assistance to municipalities to help them in meeting the considerable costs of the implementation of this bill. The Ontario government, the provincial government, must be a funding partner on an ongoing basis to assist those municipalities.

I see that the government keeps announcing and re-announcing some money. A good example is Camden, Ontario, and the town of Lincoln, where I've heard money announced and re-announced, but it never seems to flow; a cheque never seems to get there. I hope the government isn't using the excuse of waiting for an election campaign to start flowing those funds which have been announced and re-announced but never flowed to the municipalities.

I said at the beginning that I wanted to share some time with one of my colleagues. I am at the present time going to turn it over to Mrs Dombrowsky, who has four names in her riding: Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. I am going to turn over to Mrs Dombrowsky my further time on this bill.

Mrs Dombrowsky: It really is important to me to have this opportunity this evening to speak to a very important piece of legislation that has impacts across the province, obviously, and very definitely in my riding as well.

I listened with great interest and attention to the opening remarks of the government and also to my colleague. I am always very impressed by Mr Bradley, who was the best environment minister the province has known. That comes to me not just from members of our caucus but from people across the province, people who worked with the Ministry of the Environment. Jim Bradley was a minister who was truly committed to the environment. I was amused by the analogy he used earlier this evening when he talked about a Minister of the Environment who had sharp elbows when it came to advocating for the environment. Certainly Mr Bradley has those in our caucus room, at our caucus table, and has taught me a great deal about the value and the way to ensure that we protect our environment for everyone in our community, particularly for generations to come.

I am very honoured to share the lead with Mr Bradley today. It provides me with an opportunity to talk about the parts of the bill that I'm happy with and the parts of the bill that are not there, what should be in the bill that isn't there, and what I'm hearing from people, from constituents in my riding, about the concerns they have about the Safe Drinking Water Act.

It is important that we have this bill. As Mr Bradley has indicated already, sadly it was an environmental tragedy that precipitated this piece of legislation. It was only after seven people died in Walkerton that we now are entertaining this type of legislation here this evening.

I well remember those election campaigns when the Tories were going across Ontario speaking about the excesses in government, that we had too much government and we didn't need all those people in those offices doing whatever they do. Well, you know, some of those people in those offices were responsible for testing water. How it ever happened that someone made a decision that we didn't need to do that is beyond me. Sadly, we've all witnessed what happens when people really don't understand the role, the work and the importance of what civil servants do, particularly at the Ministry of the Environment. Certainly it's something Mr Bradley was very aware of because of his former role, but also because he recognized that government does have a responsibility to be a watchdog to ensure that we have those quality services in our communities.

I was thinking, as Mr Bradley was reading the comments of the former medical officer of health for the province of Ontario, Mr Schabas, that it was really very chilling to hear the account from the doctor who had the responsibility to consider the well-being of all Ontarians. He sat in a room with the Premier and ministers of the day. He was very adamant that the issues at hand were of importance, of significance and really would impact the health and well-being of Ontarians. It's chilling to think that this gentleman would say that he felt the then-Premier of the province would turn his back on the concerns this man was very earnestly trying to have them understand: the important role of the folks at the Ministry of the Environment and what they did for the people. Consequently, because his warnings were ignored, 700—or was it 900?—people were fired out the door at the Ministry of the Environment.

Mr Bradley: Nine hundred.

Mrs Dombrowsky: My colleague from St Catharines has confirmed that 900 people at the Ministry of the Environment were fired out the door, testing in communities did not have the provincial oversight as they once did and we had the tragedy at Walkerton.

I was reading an editorial in one of the local papers in my riding, the Kingston Whig-Standard, and the comment in the newspaper was that this legislation is a step back to the future, that we're not moving ahead but are moving back to what we had. The report wasn't especially complimentary, from the perspective that this is really righting a wrong that happened many years ago when staff at the Ministry of the Environment was cut.

Concerns that I have as a rural representative about this bill relate, I would suggest, more to what's not in the bill than to what is in the bill. I spoke, in the one opportunity I've already had to make some comment on remarks made earlier in the evening, about the fact that I was speaking with a water supervisor from my riding. He asked, where does it indicate what the responsibility of the provincial government is with respect to this act? What is the provincial government prepared to provide by way of support for communities across Ontario?

I live in a part of the province that is not especially densely populated. It's a beautiful part of the province, with quality people and a wonderful quality of life, a number of smaller communities, no communities of significant size. When I say "significant," I don't have communities in my riding with populations of more than 100,000 people, for example. I have a number of small communities. Many of them have water systems. Many of them have very old water systems, actually, and that's part of the problem. When I speak to municipal representatives about the state and the condition of their water treatment facilities—they're very dated, they're very much in need of repair and upgrade—they're quite concerned about the fact that the law will require them to provide a level and quality of product, being the water for the people in their community. I'm not suggesting that they should not be required to do so, but I think there needs to be some recognition that a small community of 700 or 800 people, or even 2,000 people, does not have the financial resource base to perhaps address those needs.

In the past, historically, they have been able to count on support from the provincial government to assist them with those infrastructure needs. It was explained to me by one municipal representative in my riding, who said that their municipal water system needs to be upgraded and the cost to upgrade the water system to meet present-day standards, to ensure that the people in this small town have quality water, safe drinking water, is over $1 million—$1 million for a community of 1,000 people. That is a significant burden if that community is to bear that financial burden alone.

It was interesting that the municipal representative also pointed out to me that they could upgrade to a capacity of 15,000 people for the same cost. So whether you're upgrading a facility and you have 1,000 residents or 15,000 or 20,000 residents, the cost of the upgrade is the same. But I would suggest that the ability of the people to pay is not the same. The concern is that people in rural communities are going to be required to pay more for safe water than people in more populated communities, and I don't think that should be the case. Up until now in Ontario, that has not been the case because there has been the recognition that as a province we all benefit from healthy communities and there is a recognition that the province can assist communities with infrastructure dollars to meet these very important needs.

The other concern I have about the impact this legislation will have on people, certainly in my riding but also across Ontario, is the impact it will have on our seniors, on people who are on fixed incomes and also on our poorest people. I'm particularly concerned about this, given the information that all members of this Legislature have been receiving in their constituency offices in recent days and weeks about the cost of hydro. The cost of hydro has absolutely skyrocketed, and people on fixed incomes are contacting my office who have had hydro bills double and triple and even quadruple in amount, and they're on a fixed income. They don't have the money to pay the bill.

Now we have a piece of legislation whereby the basic premise is that communities, the users of the water resources, should also pay for whatever mechanisms are in place to ensure their safety. So the users very possibly are going to see water rate increases as well. I'm very concerned for those people who are on fixed incomes, who haven't had raises, in many cases, for years. People who are on Ontario disability support have not had a raise in, I believe, nine years—maybe it's been more. And now they're dealing with hydro rate increases, and I believe that in the not too distant future, they're going to be hit yet again with water rate increases.

What we very much want to see in this bill is an indication that the province recognizes that there are communities that do not have the same resource base to support some of the upgrades and that the province recognizes that it has a responsibility to supplement those communities so that everyone in Ontario will have access to quality drinking water and they will have access to it at a relatively even rate, so you don't have some people in smaller communities paying a significantly high amount of money for safe water while people in other communities, particularly those that are very well-resourced or have a greater assessment base or tax base, don't pay as much.

As a rural member, these are concerns that have come to me already. When I read the bill and when I listened to the debate here this evening, I was hoping that I would hear some indication from any of the members who participated from the government side that there would be some assistance, some consideration, some understanding that the bill will have impacts across the province. And while the ultimate impact is safe and clean drinking water, I think the question has to be, at what cost? Does the government understand that there may be communities that will not be able to afford the cost, and because the government recognizes that, it's prepared to put in safeguards to ensure that all Ontarians will be able to access safe drinking water at a reasonable price?

Certainly, I think it is important for the government to commit to and understand the value of obtaining public input on this piece of legislation. This was certainly something that I know our critic has advocated, as have other members from other parties, as absolutely essential to ensuring that we have a sound piece of legislation.

I also wanted to talk about the fact that within the body of the bill there isn't anything that would prevent a municipality from selling their water system to a private corporation. I've talked about the fact that there may be small municipalities that would find the upgrading of their water system a significant burden, perhaps one that they didn't feel they could pass along to their ratepayers. So it is conceivable that a company or corporation could come along and say, "Let us relieve you of that worry. Let us take that burden from your shoulders. We would be prepared to come in and we will provide you with a quality water system. We will manage it, we will provide all the bells and whistles." I'm sure there are many municipalities that might think, "Well, that might not be a bad idea. That takes the responsibility away from us. We're not in a position, as a municipality, of binding our ratepayers to a significant debt load." So the system could possibly be sold to a private corporation.

I don't think that's a good idea for a variety of reasons. Again, it goes to consistency of services in communities in Ontario and also, once such a facility is in the hands of a private corporation, there is no control or regulation around rates or about quality or level of service. So I'm very concerned that Bill 195 has been totally silent, that there is no commitment within the body of the bill that the water system must remain in public hands.

I have to say that while it disappoints me, it doesn't surprise me, because it is very much in keeping with the whole privatization agenda of the Harris-Eves government that we have seen unfold in many areas during the term of the last two governments.

I have to say that when we consider privatization of the many services in the province that have been privatized, I really am hard-pressed to think of an example where privatization has resulted in better services for the people of Ontario.

I hear on a number of occasions on a variety of issues about services that have been contracted out, services that have been privatized, and people in my riding are not especially happy. One example I'm thinking of is Ministry of Transportation services, particularly in times of bad weather in the winter months where the contracted services are not as efficient as when they were provided for the people in the communities by the Ministry of Transportation. In community and social services there have been many services contracted out, and there again we hear from people who are not satisfied with the level of service.

In Bill 195, I believe this is another opportunity the government is making available for the privatization of an essential service. It's an essential service, and we all must be concerned about that.

What we in the Ontario Liberal Party are looking for in terms of good, solid legislation is legislation that will ensure a government that takes responsibility for providing a quality, dependable service at a reliable rate.

As the article in the Whig-Standard that I already referenced said, we're going back to the future, going back to where we were before. Sadly, we have a long way to go to get to where we should be. But when you're following up, when you're playing catch-up as a government that slashed the budget and fired out the door 900 workers of the Ministry of the Environment, while this legislation is a step in the right direction, we have a lot more steps to take before we get to where we need to be and should be for the safety and well-being of the people in this province.

I'm very happy to have had this opportunity, and I hope the government will be prepared to entertain amendments that will strengthen this legislation.

The Speaker: Questions and comments?

Ms Churley: I listened carefully to the speeches by the Liberal environment critic and of course the former Minister of the Environment, who knows the ministry very well, as it used to be anyway. Before I got into government I worked directly with him to get some environmental things in my riding accomplished. I always listen carefully when Mr Bradley speaks because I know he's well aware when he talks about the cuts to the ministry and the impact those have had on our environment and the health of the people of Ontario.

One of the things he spent a great deal of time pointing out, I think because he was provoked, as am I, by the Minister of the Environment, who spent a great deal of his speech talking about—well, what he did was come full circle. I felt like it was déjà vu all over again, because somewhere in his speech he started saying it's all the fault of the Koebel brothers. All you have to do is pick up these reports, these two thick reports by Justice O'Connor. It was almost like he was saying that was all unnecessary because really it was the Koebel brothers alone, which is where the Tories started out. I was really disappointed tonight to find that we're back to that. Of course nobody is denying, on any level, that what the Koebel brothers did contributed in a big way to the tragedy. But Mr Justice O'Connor made it clear that the cuts to the ministry had a huge impact, and that they ignored the many warnings from many people that a tragedy could happen, that those were not listened to.

So the minister provoked the need to tell the true history again tonight of what led to the tragedy of Walkerton.

Thank you for this opportunity. I'll be up again in the next few minutes.

Mr Maves: I'd like to respond to the member for St Catharines and the member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington, specifically to the member for St Catharines. I had to bristle when early in his comments he said that this government was brought kicking and screaming into bringing in pro-environmental legislation. I bristled quite a bit at that, because the history shows something totally different.

For instance, we were not dragged kicking and screaming into the Drive Clean legislation we introduced. It offended many of our supporters, in fact. It wasn't politically popular at all, but we had the courage to introduce, pass and implement that. The SWAT team was something we campaigned on in the 1999 election. We were not forced into that. These are focused inspection teams to target polluting industries. This government legislated the highest penalties, including jail terms, for major environmental polluters.

We set aside and protected more parkland than any other jurisdiction in the developed world. Again, we were not dragged kicking and screaming into that. We did it because we believed in it. We said we'd eliminate the Lakeview coal plant by 2005. No other government did this. We were not dragged kicking and screaming into that. We've done that because we believe in it. Lately, we nixed the OPG sale of two coal-burning electricity plants because the prospective buyers would not commit to cease using coal and replace the coal with natural gas by our timeline of 2015. Again this disappointed some of our supporters, but we still had the courage to do it.

We have a very active and positive pro-environment history, so I take exception to the comments of the member for St Catharines.

The Speaker: Further questions and comments? The Member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale.

Interjection.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): You have neither that nor a medal to pin it on.

I want to say what an honour it is for me to have an opportunity to comment on the speeches by the member for St Catharines and the member for Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington. For anybody who's watching at home, I think it's been an interesting night, especially the contrast between their thoughtful speeches and the apologetic comments of the member for Niagara Falls, who preceded me, who stands here suggesting that if it were not for the tragic events that occurred two and half years ago in Walkerton, Ontario, where seven Ontarians died, died at the hands of policies, according to the O'Connor report, attributable to mistakes that people in government made—and instead we get this crappy response from the member opposite, who talks about how they weren't dragged kicking and screaming to implement Drive Clean, which took longer than anything.

I think tonight's debate, led by the government members and followed up by my colleagues and, in a moment, at least part of a presentation by the very thoughtful, on this issue, member from Toronto-Danforth, gives Ontarians a good glimpse into some of the worst and into some of the best about government.

I do think we have a piece of legislation that we're coming together around. There has been a bit of an opportunity for input, something that is too rare in this House. The spirit of bipartisanship apparently can only occur when serious death has been involved, all other bills depending upon a government which thinks it has all the answers. On this bill they had to recognize, for once perhaps, that their own policies led to deaths in Walkerton. We need to remember that as we debate this.

The Speaker: Let's see: one, two, three, four. Yes, the member for Niagara Centre.

Mr Kormos: I wouldn't have stood if I was out of order, Speaker. Far be it from me.

I listened very carefully to the speeches of Mr Bradley and Ms Dombrowsky. While I was listening to them, though, I was reading the Hansards from June 1991. I saw that there had been a succession of quorum calls being made by opposition members. Finally, one Mr Turnbull stood up with great indignation, stating, not incorrectly, "Once again it appears that the government has so much disrespect for this House that we do not have a quorum." Well, hour after hour I've sat here watching a quorumless House, government benches absent. I was relishing the opportunity, just before Ms Churley began speaking with her leadoff on behalf of the New Democratic Party, to call quorum, but, sure enough, a quorum of Tories scurried in here, the chicken hanging from their mouths, the stains on their ties drying rapidly in the heat of the chamber.

Hon Mrs Ecker: We didn't have chicken tonight.

Mr Kormos: I'm sorry. Ernie is at Swiss Chalet. With these guys we're talking about the tender beef fat from the curl around the filet, cut with a fork.

Ms Churley is going to be speaking to this bill in around two and half minutes' time. I want to remind folks once again, notwithstanding the rather feckless effort on the part of the minister to somehow explain his comments away as being non-partisan, and simply point out that nobody ever died drinking NDP water in this province. Nobody ever died drinking Liberal water. It was Mike Harris-Ernie Eves Conservative water that killed seven in Walkerton. That's why we're here today.

The Speaker: Response?

Mr Bradley: I thank the members for Toronto-Danforth, Niagara Falls, Toronto Centre-Rosedale and Niagara Centre for their contributions. Indeed, I think each one of them brought a different perspective tonight.

I think we all recognize, from the comments that have been made, that we would not see this legislation before us tonight had seven people not died tragically in the town of Walkerton.

We see that the bill contains many of the recommendations that have been made by Justice O'Connor, and I think that's positive. We see also that the bill is missing some significant components and some significant assurances on the part of the government that it's going to provide the necessary funding and staffing and the clout to the Ministry of the Environment, to the Ministry of Natural Resources and to conservation authorities so they can carry out their responsibilities in implementing the bill. It is one thing to have legislation which contains words; it is yet another to have the wherewithal to implement that legislation. I think that's what's going to be key with this bill.

In addition to that, I express concern once again, and I don't think anybody has dissuaded me, at the fact that this bill does not contain anything in terms of a meaningful reference to protecting the water sources. Everyone recognizes that preventing contaminants from getting into the water supply in the beginning is so exceedingly important. I know the Provincial Auditor thought so. I know that two Environmental Commissioners think so. I know as well that the Ontario Medical Association believes that to be the case.

We look forward to what will follow this bill. I know that my colleague from Toronto-Danforth will want to analyze it and come forward with some of her recommendations as well. I look forward to that.

The Speaker: Further debate?

Ms Churley: It was June 15, 2000, shortly after the tragedy in Walkerton, that I first introduced my Safe Drinking Water Act, which was then Bill 96. Then, on September 28, 2000, the bill passed second reading. It never did go any further than that. Later, I introduced the bill again as Bill 3.

It's human nature for everybody to want to take some credit for being here tonight, and that's fine. I think we should probably all, in different ways, take some credit for being here tonight and having this bill before us, and I will get to what I like about the bill and what I don't a little later.

Here is what I want to do: I want to give the credit to the people of Walkerton. They are the people who suffered. They are the people who lost loved ones. They are the people who lost six people through that tragic occurrence. They are the people who have up to 2,000 people ill, some of whom are children who will never, ever totally recover. There are still adults as well as children on medication they will be on for the rest of their lives. There are children who will end up being on dialysis. We must not forget the reason we're here tonight. Not much good can come out of such a terrible tragedy.

I want to once again say to the people of Walkerton that they are responsible and we back them up here in the Legislature. It was they who inspired me to immediately continue the work I had been doing on a Safe Drinking Water Act some time ago. I got really busy and shelved it and hadn't gotten very far. It was the people of Walkerton who inspired me to get together with experts in the field and look at the American safe drinking water legislation, which at the time I wrote this bill had been around for 25 years. In fact, although I added made-in-Ontario pieces, a lot of my bill was based on very successful safe drinking water legislation in the US. So it's the people of Walkerton we should be giving credit to tonight for any movement we've seen here in the Legislature as a result of the terrible thing that happened to their town. I want to commend them and thank them for their perseverance, dignity and strength throughout this whole ordeal.

Hopefully when we have all of the pieces of legislation in place—because we're not there yet, and even the minister acknowledges that. The Safe Drinking Water Act before us tonight, the Nutrient Management Act and the other bill, Bill 175, dealing with other matters around sewers and water, in and of themselves will not prevent another Walkerton from happening. Indeed, unless the government reinvests in the Ministry of the Environment, none of these pieces of legislation, including ground-water source protection, when and if it comes, will prevent another Walkerton.

One of the things Justice O'Connor points out—and I have both the reports. I've read them and I recommend that all people do. It's not heavy reading. I have to commend Mr Justice O'Connor as well for the incredible job he did, not only in conducting those hearings but making them so comprehensive, and for holding them in Walkerton and allowing the people of Walkerton to be very involved every step of the way. His reports are very readable and very doable.

What Mr Justice O'Connor did was have a very thorough look—and he has two parts. Part one deals with some of the more technical aspects of what went wrong, and with recommendations. Part two deals more with the policy areas. If the government doesn't want to believe what the opposition has to say about the impact of the cuts, the reductions in staff, the privatizations, the down-loading, the Red Tape Commission, if you bundle them all together when you read these reports, you will see that the government—and it has been admitted finally. There was an apology from Mr Harris—a long time coming, but it came—and an acceptance of the government's role and their responsibility. I commend them for finally, after some time, recognizing that, making that apology and acknowledging that some of their policies and cuts did indeed have an impact.

Particularly in response to the Minister of the Environment, I said earlier that I was appalled by the minister's speech. He brought us back to the early days after the events in Walkerton happened, when Mr Harris first tried to blame the NDP, then moved on to blaming the town and then specifically the Koebel brothers. Nobody here is going to say for one moment that the Koebel brothers' activities did not play a large role in what happened in Walkerton—we all know that. But for the minister to stand up tonight with these reports in hand and say that could have happened under any other government, I would say to him that's not so. I also would say to him when he gets up and says, "What did you guys over here do? You did nothing. We're the ones bringing in the Safe Drinking Water Act, we're the ones who are setting up a committee to study, to advise on source protection. You did nothing," that's not so.

If you look at the kinds of programs and staff levels that were in place, not just under the NDP—we in fact increased it, despite the recession. We decided to invest in environmental protection in this province, even though we got a lot of flak from this side of the House, at the time, for increasing the deficit. That was one of the things we were doing when we were in government. We made a decision not to borrow money for tax cuts, we made a decision to borrow money to keep people afloat during a recession and for environmental protection, among other things, in this province.

When the minister says we did nothing, he's wrong. The difference is, and everybody knows this by now, that under successive governments, from the time the Ministry of the Environment was first set up under the Bill Davis government, under the Liberal and NDP governments, there was a continuum of improvement within in the Ministry of the Environment. That stopped after Mike Harris took over. Not only were there not any improvements, but we went downhill, we went backwards. And indeed, when the NDP was in government—and I want to talk about source protection for a moment, because the minister and government members like to point out, "Why didn't you do it when you were in government? You didn't do it." You're supposed to be neutral, Mr Speaker. Nice to see you in the chair because you can't heckle me now.

When we were in government we did a couple of things that started on the road to groundwater and source protection. First of all, we gave adequate funding to conservation authorities, which do a lot of that work, the monitoring and that sort of thing. We didn't cut the ministries of the Environment or Natural Resources, we actually increased funding. But furthermore, and this is very relevant to source protection, there are two things—there are many others, but there are two things in particular that started us down that road, although, admittedly, not yet a comprehensive plan. We brought in the green planning act. You have to understand that when we talk about source protection, that is a big piece of it. Land use planning is a big piece of source protection. So we're on the road to source protection with that. And what did this government do? One of the first acts of the government under Mike Harris was to get rid of that planning act, throw it out. It was seen as red tape, it got in the way of development.

Another thing that we did that contributed to source protection policy was to bring in a small but actually mighty program. It was called CURB, Clean Up Rural Beaches. It was a program that actually had dollars assigned to it. Once again, we were using money, yes in a recession, to try to protect the source of our water. That was to help farmers establish where there were problems with farm animals too close to wells and water sources, and helping them, giving them money, working with them, training, educating and then giving them money to fence off areas where there might be a well or an environmentally sensitive area that could harm the water, to keep the cow manure away from the water sources.

I want to make it clear to the government members tonight that it is not fair and it is not accurate, indeed, to say that under our government nothing was done on source protection; in fact, we're further behind. That is what is so discouraging. When I hear the government say that—talk about bristling—it's just not a correct accusation or observation, because we did do things. Instead of this government building on it, which is what we were going to do had we been elected, they threw it out. So we're starting from way back, back from when we were in government and brought these policies in.

Instead of using my own quotes about the cuts to the Ministry, I am going to read specifically from Justice O'Connor because I think that for the government members he is perhaps more believable than I am even though I've got my own numbers in front of me.

In the Report of the Walkerton Inquiry Part One—where he deals with more of the technical things and reductions and budgets and things like that, he says, "Shortly after the election," in 1995, "there was a reduction to the MOE's budget of $30.8 million. In August 1995, the central agencies of the government directed the MOE to develop a plan for reducing its budget by a further 40% for 1996–97, and then by another 20% for 1997–98. These reductions added up to $200.8 million over the two-year period. In January 1998, an internal MOE document reported that the ministry had been 'particularly hard-hit' in comparison with other ministries. It stated that since 1995–96, the MOE budget had been reduced by 48.4%."

He says, "The budget reduction targets were not set by that ministry," the people who knew the impact these cuts would have on the environment. "They also did not involve a review of the question of whether the reductions could be achieved without sacrificing the MOE's capacity to fulfill its statutory mandate. Rather, the reduction targets were initiated by the central agencies"—that means the Premier's office—"and the MOE's responsibility was to develop strategies for reaching those targets." He goes on about the business plans and the actual warnings that Mr Bradley talked about earlier, that I won't repeat again, as these cuts were coming forward to cabinet. They were warned about impacts to the Ministry of the Environment and chose to ignore them.

So that's the backdrop here, and Mr Justice O'Connor is extremely clear that those cuts had an impact on what happened in Walkerton, ie, the ministry's ability to respond was severely limited.

The other thing that Justice O'Connor talks about is the closing of the public labs. On very short notice, all of a sudden all the municipalities had to—I think the time frame was four weeks or something like that, four to eight weeks. They didn't have to be accredited; they were all scrambling to find a lab to test their water. And there's another myth: just the other day when I was speaking to another bill, one of the government members said, "You're the guys who closed the labs and made Walkerton use the private lab in the first place." Well, that too is not correct.

What people tend to forget that Justice O'Connor pointed out, and we don't even talk about it much here, is that not only were there four Ministry of the Environment labs which tested water; there were 13 public health labs operated by the Ministry of Health and they too were all closed, in 1996, I believe. In fact, Walkerton was using one of those Ministry of Health labs in Palmerston, I believe, until after they were closed and then they had to scramble to find a private lab. That too contributed, because of what happened with the reporting structure, as Mr Justice O'Connor said, to the events in Walkerton.

On several occasions the ministry, the minister and the Premier were warned, time and time again, that something terrible could happen. I know Mr Bradley and I were at some of the inquiry hearings. In fact, we were there the day Brenda Elliott, who had been the minister previously, was there, and when Mr Harris testified. Counsel for the inquiry was questioning Mr Harris and told him, "You know, there were at least four or five warning bells that told you directly that there could be a problem with the cuts, the downloading, the Red Tape Commission, and in particular the closing of the lab." Indeed, he cited me and two questions I had asked in this Legislature after they closed the labs on such short notice. Eva Ligeti, the then Environmental Commissioner, had pointed it out in a report as well and I pointed it out. I asked questions here in the Legislature and pointed out to the government that there was a real danger and that they should look into it. There were many, many warnings, which were cited earlier, and they were ignored.

So when Mr Stockwell, the Minister of the Environment, stands up and says it was mostly the Koebel brothers and that it could have happened under anybody and we over here have never done anything, I just want to put that to rest. When the Minister of the Environment stands up and says that, and then says, "Let's be non-partisan about this, because this is a good thing," he can't very well expect me to stand up and let those myths—and I'll call them "myths" for the purposes of being parliamentary here tonight instead of what I'd like to say—we cannot let those myths go without some kind of correcting of the record.

I want to speak briefly about the Red Tape Commission. As I said earlier, and it was quoted in Justice O'Connor's report, indeed the Ministry of the Environment seemed to be the hardest hit. We knew that at the time. We watched it all happening and kept warning the government. It was appalling, what was going on within the ministry. Then the Red Tape Commission was brought into the world.

Mr O'Toole: It's a good commission.

Ms Churley: Yes. You say it's a good commission. It too picked on the Ministry of the Environment. The Ministry of the Environment was seen as just red tape that got in the way of doing business. It too was the hardest hit of any other ministry. The Red Tape Commission, particularly under Frank Sheehan, spent more time trying to cut important regulations from that ministry, and in fact did, than any other ministry at the time.

It's worth noting, because I know that in a couple of minutes I'm going to close for the night, while I'm referring to the Red Tape Commission: when I asked a question to the then Minister of the Environment—there have been many Ministers of the Environment; it was Dan Newman—about my bill, the Safe Drinking Water Act, and asked him if he was in favour of it and if he'd be willing to pass it, he said that it was just an example of more red tape. That was the attitude of the then Minister of the Environment. It's in Hansard. He was referring to some of the requirements in the bill, for instance the Water Advisory Council, which is part of my bill, which is now one of the things the government did adopt from mine, although it's not as thorough in terms of what that council should be doing and how it should be appointed and who should be on it.

In summary tonight I just want to give that as the backdrop. When I come back—I believe we're going to be debating this bill again on Monday—I will go into more detail about the bill itself, compare it to mine and talk about the need for public hearings clear across the province so that people can have input and so that we can make necessary amendments.

The Speaker: I thank the member. It being 9:30 of the clock, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 of the clock on Monday.

The House adjourned at 2128.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

SUDBURY REGIONAL HOSPITAL

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): After several delays that have for months kept the health care providers in our community on edge, the health minister finally has in his possession the operational review of the Sudbury Regional Hospital. For months, while hydro costs have soared and with construction costs rising, the debt-ridden hospital has remained in a state of stalled, partially finished construction because this government has abdicated its responsibility and promise to ensure that our hospital becomes a referral centre for northeastern Ontario. Right now, the dormant construction site, as the seasons change in the north, has quite frankly become a symbol of how the Harris-Eves government has broken its promises and abandoned health care in our community.

Hospital administrators and staff have put forth a valiant effort, but sheer will alone cannot ensure the hospital can serve patients. Funding is needed; provincial funding is needed. The hospital asked for the operational review, Minister Clement, so that your government can see first-hand that, rather than cutting corners, you must provide the funding necessary to ensure construction reaches completion and that the level of service adequately and safely reflects the needs of northerners.

Today my community demands that you, Minister Clement, release the results of the operational review, that your government ensures the number of beds will not be further reduced, that your government provides the funding that is owing and long overdue so our community can have restored faith in your health services and construction on our hospital can again begin.

OPTOMETRISTS

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): I rise today to recognize an important health care profession in Ontario: optometrists. Optometrists play an important role as primary eye care providers in this province. More than four million patients visit an optometrist annually and, as you can see, I'm one of them. Optometrists not only provide prescriptions for eyeglasses; they routinely diagnose and manage eye-related diseases and conditions, and refer patients for timely treatment to specialists. Optometrists are helping to save health care dollars through early detection and appropriate treatment of sight-threatening conditions in children, seniors, working aged adults and the medically at risk.

At Queen's Park today, we have representatives from the Ontario Association of Optometrists. The OAO is a voluntary professional organization that represents nearly 1,000 registered optometrists in Ontario. In addition to providing resources and continuing education to its members, the OAO is committed to raising awareness of optometry and educating the public about the importance of professional eye care. Each year, for example, the OAO partners with the Ontario region of the Canadian Diabetes Association in raising awareness about the damaging effects that diabetes can have on your eyes. The OAO is also working actively with educators on the importance of good vision in school and eye examination for children. The OAO is hosting an inaugural Optometrists on Site reception later today at Queen's Park. I'd encourage all the members in the Legislature to join us at that reception this evening.

PSYCHIATRIC HOSPITALS

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): In 1996, after the OPSEU strike, the Harris government decided it was going to get out of the business of running hospitals. Then-Minister of Health Jim Wilson promised that psychiatric hospitals and psychiatric patients would never be caught in the midst of a strike again. Yet this past spring, four of 10 psychiatric hospitals again faced the reality of striking workers, and patients in those hospitals paid a huge price. All 10 of the provincial hospitals were supposed to be transferred to either a public hospital or to a community board. In the case of six hospitals, the divestment went ahead. The money to finish the job with the other four hospitals in Thunder Bay, North Bay, Whitby and Penetanguishene was supposed to have been in the last two budgets, but the Minister of Health apparently decided that he had a better use for the money. The budget for mental health facilities went underspent by $21 million two years ago and by more than $52 million last year. In the meantime, patients in four psychiatric hospitals continue to experience the declining standard of care that is the inevitable consequence of this government's underfunding of its own hospitals.

The chairs of three of the hospitals' community advisory boards are here at Queen's Park today. The community advisory board at the Whitby hospital resigned en masse last June out of sheer frustration. The Minister of Health refuses to meet with these community board members. He won't tell them why or how long the patients in their hospitals will be left hanging. The Minister of Health has apparently decided that mental health isn't a hot enough political issue to spend money on, but he can't avoid this forever. The consequences for patients will be his responsibility. It's past time for this minister to finish the job his government started six years ago.

BILL FERRIER

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): How far we have come over the last number of years as MPPs in this Legislature. I have had the pleasure today to bring to lunch Bill Ferrier, who was the member for Cochrane South from 1967 and consecutively for three elections. We had an interesting discussion about how the work in this Legislature has changed over the years. He hearkened back to the days when we didn't have time allocation motions in this House and you really did have debate, where members came to this House and had to convince each other of their ideas, and that the House, in some ways, used to work, I would argue, probably more progressively than it does.

He also talked about how they did the work as local MPPs in their own ridings back then. Bill talked about how Jean, his wife, who just passed away unfortunately about a couple of weeks ago, was his constituency assistant because members back then in 1967 and onwards had no constituency staff, had no constituency offices, had no assistance whatsoever. They used to sit in this House, write their letters themselves on their desk. They used to get on the train to get back to their ridings up in northern Ontario because travel was not paid for to the extent that it is now for members, and how when he got back to his constituency late on Friday night or on Saturday morning, basically Jean had everything laid out for him—the people he had to speak with, the people she had talked to, and how the phone rang all the time at the home—again, just the family to deal with that. I just reflect back to 1967 and say, we've learned a couple of things since then. We are certainly more privileged as members, but I would like to get back to a time when we don't have time allocation motions, such as the time when Bill was here.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Just before the next member begins, maybe we could recognize our former colleague, Mr Bill Ferrier, from the riding of Cochrane South. He's in the members' gallery west. Would all the members please welcome our honoured colleague.

Applause.

MISSISSAUGA ARTS AWARDS

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): The Mississauga Arts Council honoured a dazzling array of talent at this year's Mississauga Arts Awards Gala Night, held at the Living Arts Centre on October 16, 2002.

Recognizing both established and emerging talent in the visual, new media, literary and performing arts, this spectacular evening provided an exciting preview of our city's bright artistic future. From an impressive field of 100 nominees and 20 finalists the 2002 winners were: Juliana Schewe, visual artist—emerging; Tom La Pierre, visual artist—established; Patrick Thornton, new media artist—emerging; Rachel Sa, literary artist—emerging; Robert Sawyer, literary artist—established; Christopher Miranda, performing artist, individual—emerging; Rik Emmett, performing artist, individual—established; Cow Over Moon, performing arts group—emerging; Mississauga Players, performing arts group—established.

We are also grateful for the leadership from the corporate community and all the sponsors and supporters who make these awards possible.

LUNG CANCER AWARENESS MONTH

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): In Canada this year alone, almost 21,000 Canadians will be diagnosed with lung cancer, and approximately 80% will die from this disease.

Unfortunately, for people diagnosed with lung cancer, treatment is limited and support is minimal. People who have been touched by lung cancer call it the "invisible killer" because it receives little public attention and lower amounts of funding when compared to research dollars spent on other types of cancer. They feel that this reflects the common misconception that lung cancer is simply a disease of smokers.

ALCASE, the Alliance for Lung Cancer Awareness, Support and Education, has recently been established as an organization to increase awareness about lung cancer, to support patients who are currently living with lung cancer and individuals who care for them, and to educate the public about the disease.

As part of their efforts, ALCASE has proclaimed November as Lung Cancer Awareness Month. I join them in urging the provincial government to lead the way in educating its citizens about the risk of lung cancer and the resources available to them. With more knowledge, more patients can be diagnosed in the early stages, when the chance of long-term survival is as high as 85%.

I hope members of this Legislature will take the time to read the information that ALCASE has provided to all members for your reference. I want to thank the board president, Ralph Gouda, and Laurie Bass, a member of their public relations committee and daughter of one of my constituents, Wayne Jacoby, for ensuring this valuable message has been brought to our attention. I want to wish them every success in their efforts in attracting needed attention to this killer disease.

At this point, on a point of order, Mr Speaker, I would seek unanimous consent of the House for members to wear the white ribbon supplied by ALCASE to all members in support of Lung Cancer Awareness Month.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed? Agreed. The honourable member has consent.

CLARINGTON GREEN GAELS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I am pleased to rise and put on the record an outstanding success of the Clarington Green Gaels Junior B lacrosse team. This past summer, they captured the Founders Cup Junior B championship in Halton Hills. It was their third Founders Cup in the past five years. The Green Gaels also won the championship in 1998 and 2000.

The Clarington Green Gaels are an excellent example of the importance that residents of Durham riding place on sports and fitness. The Green Gaels are excellent ambassadors for our community and a source of pride to the many fans who attend the home games at the Garnet B. Rickard complex in Bowmanville. The Gaels were the underdogs this year after losing to the Spartan Warriors of St Catharines in Ontario Lacrosse Association finals, but they, like me, didn't give up. In the championship, they won five games in five days. On their way to winning the Founders Cup, the Green Gaels defeated New Westminster, Edmonton and Winnipeg.

Congratulations to head coach Brad MacArthur, his staff and of course the players who worked so hard this past season. Among the members of the team who were recognized with awards from the tournament were Marvin Barr, who was declared the most valuable player, and goalie Rick Passfield, who was named to the all-star team. Also named as a tournament all-star was Zach Greer. Congratulations also to Doug Trudeau, who scored the final two goals in the championship game.

The Green Gaels of Clarington have worked hard in this championship season, and as their MPP I share this with them and with the House today: a great achievement for the Green Gaels lacrosse team.

HYDRO RATES

Mrs Sandra Papatello (Windsor West): Families across Ontario today are wondering how they are going to pay their hydro bills. Our offices are being flooded with phone calls, e-mails and letters from people who cannot believe how much the Harris-Eves government has bungled the hydro file.

It seems some Tory members can't believe it either. Gary Carr thinks you guys messed up. Frank Mazzilli says your incompetence is hurting people in London. Even Cam Jackson, the $104,000 man, can't believe how expensive hydro bills are. When a guy who spends more than $800 on a meal thinks the rates are too high, they're shockingly high.

But who is standing up for families in Waterloo-Wellington who are being gouged by these out-of-control hydro rates? It's not Ted Amott. He hasn't said the word "hydro" in this House since 1996. Who is standing up for families in Ottawa-Orléans? Brian Coburn has never said the word "hydro" in this House. How about Gerry Martiniuk over in Cambridge? He's never said the word "hydro." Who is fighting for families in London Centre? It's not Dianne Cunningham. She hasn't talked about hydro since 1993. Gary Stewart hasn't talked about hydro since the year 2000. Tina Molinari never said the word in this House, neither has David Tsubouchi, Jerry Ouellette, Morley Kells or John Snobelen.

There's only one leader and there's only one party fighting for families on these outrageous hydro bills. That's Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party.

HELLENIC CARE FOR SENIORS

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): I'm pleased to rise in this House today to thank my colleague, the Minister of Health and Long-Term Care, for visiting my riding of Scarborough Centre last Wednesday. I especially want to thank him for attending the groundbreaking of the new Hellenic Care for Seniors long-term-care facility located at Lawrence and Kennedy in my riding. The new Hellenic home will consist of 128 new beds for the seniors of Scarborough. Other seniors will be drawn from other areas to this example of first-rate nursing home care.

I was pleased to be joined at this important event not only by the minister but by His Eminence Metropolitan Archbishop Sotirios. We had a good chat.

The new seniors' home is a classic example of co-operation between the Ernie Eves government and the diverse communities that make up the Scarborough I am so pleased to serve in this Legislature.

It's very important to recognize the great strides that are being taken by this government for our seniors. The groundbreaking is part of a bigger plan being put in place by my Scarborough colleague the Honourable Dan Newman, Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. Altogether, new and redeveloped beds are being created across Ontario as part of the Ernie Eves government's unprecedented $1.2-billion investment in long-term care for the seniors of today and tomorrow. The groundbreaking is an example of good government at work in our communities.

VISITORS

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I want to introduce to the Legislature some special guests we have in from Nipigon who are sitting in the members' west gallery. We have Levina Collins, project coordinator for the township of Nipigon economic development office, a great hard worker. She's accompanied by Nyomie Ray, who was a summer student, I believe, with her office this summer, and Courtney Wellman, who is actually from Nepean, Ontario. Welcome to the Legislature. They're great hard workers for the township of Nipigon.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm presenting on behalf of my colleague Tony Martin, who is at the Kimberly Rogers inquest today, Mr Jim Steele, who is originally from Timmins but now lives in Sault Ste Marie and who is the father of Alexander, a page in our Legislative Assembly. I'd like to welcome him to the Legislature today.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): On a point of order, Speaker: I would ask your indulgence and that of the members of the House to welcome my mother, June Christopherson, to the chamber. Along with my mom is our family friend Beatrice Harrison, and Zack Dayler, who is a co-op student in my office. I take particular pride in also recognizing my mom's brother, Uncle Chuck Clapham, who is a World War II veteran. Thanks to him, we get to be here today. Thank you all.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the honourable member and we welcome his mother here.

The member for Davenport on a point of order.

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): On the subject, Mr Speaker: our page Grant Gonzales's mother and sister are here, Merlina Gonzales and Glenda Gonzales, and Sheryl Hennessey, the godmother of our page Grant Gonzales. Let's welcome them as well.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

GRAFFITI AND ADVERTISING SIGNS CONTROL ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LE CONTRÔLE DES GRAFFITIS ET DES PANNEAUX PUBLICITAIRES

Mr Kells moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 205, An Act to control graffiti on public and private property and advertising signs on public property / Projet de loi 205, Loi visant à contrôler les graffitis sur des biens publics et privés et des panneaux publicitaires sur des biens publics.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for short statement?

Mr Morley Kells (Etobicoke-Lakeshore): The bill prohibits applying or affixing graffiti to any public or private property and prohibits erecting or attaching advertising signs to public property. If a municipality enacts a bylaw in respect of the control of graffiti and advertising signs, insofar as the bylaw is more stringent, the bylaw prevails over the bill.

TRANSPARENCY IN PUBLIC MATTERS ACT, 2002 LOI DE 2002 SUR LA TRANSPARENCE DES QUESTIONS D'INTÉRÊT PUBLIC

Ms Di Cocco moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 206, An Act to require open meetings for provincial and municipal boards, commissions and other public bodies / Projet de loi 206, Loi exigeant des réunions publiques pour des commissions et conseils provinciaux et municipaux ainsi que d'autres organismes publics.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for short statement?

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): This bill requires that public bodies hold meetings which are open to the public. The public can only be excluded from meetings of the body if certain specified types of matters are going to be discussed by that body. Minutes of these meetings, open to the public, have to be made available to the public in a timely fashion and must contain sufficient detail.

The body is also required to set rules respecting public notice of its meetings and meetings of its committees, the availability of these minutes to the public and the availability to the public of the body's rules. The body is required to appoint a person responsible for compliance with the rules, and section 8 imposes a penalty for failure to comply with the requirements for notices, minutes and rules.

There are a lot of consumers in Ontario who are not just concerned about the bills they have in their hands but about what the future holds, whether that be a working family, a small business or a farm operator. We understand that concern. The Premier has requested that I look at the issue of rebates and what can be done to acknowledge that this is really a problem.

I would indicate in strong terms to the member opposite that the view of the government, when we introduced Bill 35, was that we had to keep hydro rates lower than they would have been if we had taken no action.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: If the member opposite checks the Hansard from that committee, that's actually what they'll find. In fact, we haven't had public power at cost in this province; we've actually had public power at cost minus $38 billion.

Mrs Pupatello: I guess you're telling us it would be worse if you had done nothing.

I have in my hands a press release issued by then-Minister of Energy, Jim Wilson, two months before the market opening. It promises right there in a big, bold title, "Customers to Save $3-$6 Billion Under Electricity Competition." The customers are supposed to save, and he called that estimate conservative. We call it wrong.

On June 25, Ernie Eves stood in that spot and promised, "There is not going to be an electricity shortage and higher and higher prices." Wrong again.

The Harris-Eves government broke its promise to consumers about lower rates. You broke your promise to investors of greater certainty, and you've broken your promise of a reliable supply of new electricity. Given all of these promises, given your bungling, tell me why anyone should trust Ernie Eves to fix the hydro mess that he created?

Hon Mr Baird: I certainly acknowledge the concerns that families and small business people right across the province of Ontario have in this issue. The Premier has asked that we look into it and what has caused these increases and report back to him.

I would indicate the analysis done and quoted by my colleague was by Dr Fred Lazar, a professor of economics at York University, who looked at what the cost would be had we undertaken no change in Ontario after a substantial freeze in rates by successive governments, and look at what they would be under the new model.

The member opposite quotes Jim Wilson. I'm going to quote Dalton McGuinty: "Rates may very well have to go up. We've been getting a bit of a free ride here in terms of the hydro debt that Ontario Hydro has amassed"—and that's not Jim Wilson; that's your own leader, Dalton McGuinty.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Final supplementary.

Mrs Pupatello: I'll have to be sure to tell my constituents that that's the kind of answer we get from the Minister of Energy: a completely unsympathetic ear to people who cannot afford to pay their bills. It's that simple. Individuals in their homes and businesses cannot

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO RATES

Mrs Sandra Pupatello (Windsor West): My question is for the Minister of Energy. I have in my hands a copy of Bill 35. You remember that act: it was the one in which Ernie Eves, Jim Wilson and Mike Harris promised that consumers would actually be protected, and that would lower hydro rates. So that no one was confused, they actually named that piece of legislation "An Act to create jobs and protect consumers by promoting low-cost energy through competition...." You remember that bill.

Across the province, employers big and small are considering layoffs so that they can pay their utility bills. The rates in fact are going up, not down, and consumers are saying that they've been betrayed by you. Instead of being protected, they are being gouged by your government. Why did you and Ernie Eves bungle the opening of the market and break your promise to taxpayers?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): I'm certainly familiar with Bill 35. I sat on that legislative committee. I will suggest—

Interjection: We can't hear you.

Hon Mr Baird: Then maybe you should listen.

pay these increases. We cannot get a sympathetic ear from Premier Ernie Eves. This is what he said: "The reality is, nobody likes to pay more for anything."

That's not what people in Ontario want to hear, Minister. Talk about being out of touch. Ernie Eves doesn't get it. Rather than working to find solutions, he's looking for scapegoats. His first instance is to blame Mike Harris. Wrong. It was Ernie Eves and not Mike Harris. Now he wants to blame the OPG. Guess what? He is OPG. He's the only shareholder. Besides, Ernie Eves himself was warned by the provincial government about problems at Pickering. The auditor told him and he did nothing. He tries to blame the management of OPG.

Ernie Eves looks like he's looking after his friends, like Bill Farlinger, the $300,000-a-year man. While the Premier blames and looks for scapegoats, the public—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the member's time is up.

Hon Mr Baird: The member opposite never lets the facts get in the way of a good rant. The Premier is very concerned about this issue. He's concerned about the effects on working families. He's concerned about farmers who are concerned about the future viability of their operation and about small businesses around Ontario. He's asked me to report back in short order with respect to what we can do to address those concerns, whether it's through the rebate or through others. The member opposite is dead wrong. There is a huge amount of concern that we have out there, not just for working families but for businesses in the province.

The member opposite didn't quote those quotes because they don't suit her own partisan purposes. The member opposite neglects to talk about how her own party was trolling for bucks on Bay Street, saying that she and Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party have been consistent supporters of the move to an open market. This doesn't fit the arguments of the member opposite. What did she say? "Throughout Ontario's electricity restructuring process, Dalton and the Ontario Liberals have been consistent supporters of the move to an open market." Stand—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the minister's time is up. Come to order, please.

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): Minister, when your government was orchestrating this electricity mess, there were assurances that with the market opening there were going to be lower prices, plenty of supply, and stability from your electricity brainchild. I have a letter from the Inn of the Good Shepherd in my riding that says, "Utility bills' arrears have been the number one factor contributing to the growing problem of homelessness during this past year." I've heard from people on fixed incomes, on disability and from small businesses who don't know where they can turn. Mike from Corunna just wrote to me, saying that his bill for the low-usage period has gone up 100%, increased.

Dorothy, whose husband needs oxygen, a night cyclist and air, had her bill go from $102 to $258. Ramin, a small business owner, whose hydro jumped from $1,884 for two months to $1,500 per month.

Minister, how do you explain this mess? How and when are you going to fix it?

1410

Hon Mr Baird: I certainly share the concerns of anyone on a modest or fixed income who has concerns with respect to their hydro bill. That's why the Premier has asked that we look at the rebate and how we can provide relief to consumers.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Baird: People who pay 5.5 cents shouldn't get a rebate as if they pay 8.3 cents. But I say to the member for Sarnia-Lambton, we are looking at the issue.

The member opposite has said that she believes homelessness has been fuelled for the period of a year. Well, rates were frozen for seven years, until May 1. They went down in May, they went down in June and residents wouldn't have received their bills for July and August until September, so I suggest there were probably a number of other contributing factors to that.

We do have a concern with supply in Ontario. I acknowledge that. The member opposite might want to explain her personal view that we should close down 24% of the production in the province as their answer to the supply problem. The lights will be out, there will be brownouts and they will be brought to the people by the member for Sarnia-Lambton who would put 300 of her own constituents out of a job. That's quite an economic development initiative for Sarnia-Lambton.

The Speaker: Supplementary?

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): Thomas Green of Tweed is 64 years old. He heats his house with electricity, and he's worried that he won't be able to pay his bills this winter. His hydro rate has more than doubled since June. This man has worked his entire life, and on the eve of his retirement, he expects that his hydro bill will be almost $700. In another case, a family on social assistance because of a disability must choose between paying the rent or paying their hydro bill. Their hydro bill for July was $132; in September they got a whopping $480 bill.

It is unacceptable that the Premier has dismissed these issues when he says, "No one likes to pay higher prices." His indifference and your incompetence are forcing people to choose between buying food or paying the rent. What are you going to do for families on fixed incomes who cannot pay their hydro bills?

Hon Mr Baird: We have a tremendous concern about those on fixed and modest incomes, whether they be social assistance recipients, seniors or those people with modest incomes who are working. The Premier has asked me to look at it.

The member opposite talked about bill increases in June. She would want to be clear, though, that while prices were frozen for seven years in the province of Ontario, she would want to say of course that they went down by more than a third in May and almost a similar amount in June. She would want to be honest to customers.

I do find it passing strange that this member represents a party that on second reading, agreement in principle, voted for Bill 35. She would want to ask that. I know this member opposite certainly has problems managing her own household finances, but at least her constituents aren't seeking public redress from the Board of Internal Economy.

The Speaker: Final supplementary.

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): Minister of Energy, we know—

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Hamilton Mountain has the floor. Come to order.

Interjection.

The Speaker: That means you, member for Windsor-St Clair, please. It's your member asking the question. The member for Hamilton-Mountain, please.

Mrs Bountrogianni: Minister of Energy, let's stick to the topic at hand, and that is hydro prices for people on fixed incomes. No one is doubting your personal concern, Minister, but we are doubting the concern of the Premier when he says, "The reality is, nobody likes to pay more for anything any more." That shows what he truly believes. This is not about liking to pay more. The Premier should be ashamed to even suggest such a thing.

People's bills have more than doubled. On Saturday, within one hour on Hamilton Mountain, over 3,000 people signed a petition protesting your sale of Hydro One and asking for the immediate release of the rebate. People, particularly senior citizens, are worried that they're going to lose their homes. Minister, will you end this assault on the people of Ontario now?

Hon Mr Baird: I do appreciate the member opposite's comments that "No one is doubting your personal concern." In fact, her own colleagues did that, and I'd like to acknowledge the member opposite understands that all of us in this place do come to Queen's Park to try to improve the lives of our constituents and to do a better job to improve their lives.

The Premier said publicly in very strong terms on both Thursday and Friday that he was tremendously concerned about those on fixed incomes. I'm wondering why the member opposite doesn't want to use those quotes.

The Premier is concerned about this. He has asked me to look into both the rebate and the situation that those on fixed incomes are facing. We acknowledge that whether it's for small businesses, working families or farm operators, they're concerned not just about the bills they've got in front of them but they're also concerned about the future. In short order, we'll be coming forward with some responses.

The Speaker: New question. The leader of the third party.

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Minister of Energy. The number of Conservative MPPs who oppose the skyrocketing hydro bills that come with hydro deregulation is growing by leaps and bounds. Last week it was Gary Carr. Now it's Frank Mazzilli, Cam Jackson and—oh, yes—the Minister of Transportation, Brad Clark; he'd like to be in there, too.

Minister, when are you going to start listening to your own MPPs? They're telling you that talking about a one-time rebate, trying to hide the increases in hydro bills, won't work. They want a rate freeze. They want hydro rates to go back to what they were a year ago. Will you do that, Minister? Will you listen to your own backbench MPPs and terminate hydro deregulation?

Hon Mr Baird: I'll say to the leader of the third party that at least I can respect him on this issue. He has been a consistent fighter on this issue. He's not like Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Baird: You had to stand in your place and vote that Bill 35 in principle—

The Speaker: Order. Take your seat. It's getting too noisy in here.

Hon Mr Baird: When the opportunity came to stand and be counted, the leader of the third party was there, leading the fight. But who was standing up in favour of competition, an open market and collecting $350 from anyone on Bay Street who would agree with them? It was Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party.

Mr Hampton: I want to return to the question, which you didn't answer. I want to put it in the words of Garfield Dunlop's campaign manager—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Will the member take his seat? This is the last warning for the member for Windsor-St Clair. If I get up again, he'll be out for the day. I apologize. You get to start over. I'm just warning the member for Windsor-St Clair. He got a last warning. The leader of the third party may start over.

Mr Hampton: I want to refer to another MPP's—Garfield Dunlop's—campaign manager, Mr Bob Kehoe, who says, "I'm a lifelong Conservative." He says in the Orillia Packet and Times that hydroelectricity is an essential public service. He says, "Certain things such as education, health care and the electricity system should remain in the public control." He says, "I don't believe we should be selling off and opening up electricity to private interests. It should be a public service, owned by taxpayers for taxpayers." Get this: like the MPP for Oakville, he is circulating a petition that demands the government dispend with the competitive electricity market and revert to the system that was in place before May 1.

I ask the question again, Minister: when are you going to start listening to your own Conservative MPPs, your own campaign managers, and terminate hydro deregulation?

Hon Mr Baird: We certainly hear the concerns, whether they be members on this side of the House, small business people or a working family struggling to pay the bill they've got on their kitchen table today, or their concern for the future with the bill that will be coming in next month. We're looking at how we deal with a rebate mechanism that would provide some support to these people who are concerned about themselves, their future and their family. We're also concerned about what holds for the future. The Premier has asked me to look into it, and I've committed to do that in short order, because the Premier, along with members on this side of the House, shares that concern.

I do again at least acknowledge that the member opposite has been consistent. Look at what his own colleague said. The official spokesman for Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberal Party: "Let me be clear. We need a competitive marketplace. The electricity market that we as Liberals envisage is one where we see a competitive market in the generation of electricity." At least the honourable member has been consistent on this issue.

Mr Hampton: Minister, I hear both you and the Liberals talking about a hydro rebate. You would know this: just this week, the Society for Prevention of Cruelty to Animals in Ontario has had to lay off seven of their staff because their hydro bill has gone from $5,000 a month to $11,000 a month. What good would a $200 or $300 hydro rebate do for them? What good would it do for the majority of small businesses in this province? Virtually nothing.

The issue is this: hydro deregulation, no matter where it's been tried, has driven up people's hydro bills. That's what happened in California, that's what happened in Alberta, that's what happened in Montana and that's what's happening in Ontario. So no amount of playing with money over here or trying to bribe taxpayers with their own money through a rebate is going to do the job. Will you recognize hydro deregulation provides too many opportunities for price-fixing? It provides too many opportunities for market manipulation by companies like Enron. What you need to do is terminate—

The Speaker: The member's time is up.

Hon Mr Baird: Like I said, we certainly share the concerns and the Premier has asked me to look into it. We'll continue to do that in short order.

The member opposite spoke of one organization, a charitable organization, where he said they would receive only a $200 rebate. Yet if they had to let go seven people, if they were making $15,000 a year, that would be $75,000. I would suggest that a rebate would be greater than $200 for someone who had to slash expenditures by $75,000. I think he would acknowledge that if he was being straightforward.

We are looking at the issue. We feel the concern that people of Ontario have in this issue. The reality is the member opposite is driving around Ontario in a bus preaching public power at cost. We have not had public power at cost in the province of Ontario for years. While the leader of the third party and his band of socialists sat on the executive council, they borrowed $3 billion. Who is going to pay that? His children and his children's children. We don't think that was either sustainable or responsible for the future.

The Speaker: The minister's time is up.

New question, the leader of the third party again.

Mr Hampton: To the Minister of Energy, yes, I go around Ontario pointing out that we should have a regulated hydro system. It should be hydroelectricity at cost. The reason I do is because if I look at, again, California, if I look at Alberta, if I look at Montana and if I look at what's happened in Ontario, deregulated hydro, privatized hydro means you get a whole bunch of profit-takers who all want to get their hands into the consumer's pocket and take some money, and you get Enron-style corporations that want to manipulate the electricity supply, create an artificial electricity shortage, drive up the price and gouge consumers. I don't think anybody should entertain hydro deregulation the way Conservatives and Liberals have.

So I say to you again, Minister, recognize that rebates won't do the trick. The kinds of incentives that the Liberals are talking about won't do the trick. End hydro deregulation. Recognize this is an essential public service that should be owned and controlled by the people.

Hon Mr Baird: We recognize that the policy the member opposite used was not successful. What he continued to do when he was in government was to take the Ontario Hydro credit card and borrow more and more money each and every year. He talks about public power at cost, but his actions speak louder than his words.

We're looking at what is the responsible approach to take for this year and for the years ahead to ensure that we can have a ready supply of safe and affordable electricity for the people of Ontario. Whether it's for working families, small businesses, farm operators or large industry, it's important for the people of Ontario. We long ago lost the plan that was envisaged with respect to public power at cost. That's not even a policy that he supported. We are looking at whether it's the cost of generation, what could be done with the rebate. We're also looking at what the reasons are for other bill increases to see what we can do to help acknowledge what is a real concern for the people of Ontario.

Mr Hampton: Minister, I hear you on the one hand saying that you believe hydro prices may have to rise higher. That was your statement in estimates committee, that hydro rates were unrealistically low and they might have to go higher to entice private investors in. I hear the Liberal energy critic saying that you may need to provide tax incentives or some other enticement to the Enrons and the Brascans, as if they're not making enough money already, to entice them into the province.

How much taxpayers' money are you and the Liberals prepared to spend? How much taxpayers' money are you and the Liberals prepared to waste trying to entice the Brascans, the Sithe Energies and the Enrons to build profitable, profit-driven hydro generating stations in Ontario? How much are you prepared to spend, rather than doing what you should do: terminate deregulation?

Hon Mr Baird: I've corrected the leader of the third party before and I'll do it again. He should check the Hansard. I said no such thing. He knows it and I know it. People can check the written transcripts of that committee. He knows I never said it and he should be straightforward with the people of Ontario.

What the member opposite is asking is, how much would we spend? We won't put Ontario into an $11-billion deficit; we won't allow a $3-billion increase in such a short period of time on the Ontario Hydro debt as he did when he was in power; we won't allow it to be acceptable in Ontario to go from spending $4 billion a year on interest to more than $9 billion, as he and his party did in the province of Ontario. But at least I can look the member in the eye and know that he's been consistent.

The members opposite said they didn't vote in favour of Bill 35. On June 25, 1998, on second reading, agreement in principle on the bill, what was the vote count? It was 60 to 10. New Democrats were the only ones who stood up against competition. The Liberals are strongly in favour of this policy.

ONTARIO DISABILITY SUPPORT PROGRAM

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): My question is for the Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services. Dalton McGuinty often speaks of the just-in-time families who live in our communities. These are families who, faced with an unexpected bill like a car repair, are cast into financially dire straits. Often, for them, the only discretionary funds are for food. You can just imagine the effect on these families of the new electricity bills from your deregulated environment. You know—you should know—the absolutely devastating effect on Ontarians who are recipients of ODSP. These are people who are already, at the absolute maximum, $7,000 below the poverty level in this province. They come to me with a question that I'm going to pass on to you for your answer. They say to me, "This month, should we pay our electricity bill or should we buy groceries?"

Minister, what is the answer that you would like me to pass on to these citizens on ODSP?

Hon Brenda Elliott (Minister of Community, Family and Children's Services): I thank my colleague from the Liberal Party for the question. As he will know, our government is very concerned about people with disabilities in Ontario, that's why it was our government that removed those with disabilities from the welfare file and created the Ontario disability support plan. It's also our government that was the first government to introduce the Ontarians with Disabilities Act. So we understand the challenges that those with disabilities face in Ontario. We've made great efforts to try to improve circumstances for their lives.

At present, gas and hydro expenses are covered under the shelter allowance. In extraordinary cases, caseworkers can issue a cheque to cover the actual cost of hydro or any other unexpected expense. We believe that no one in the circumstance of unexpected challenges should lose their home or place to live. That is why this government does already have in place provisions to deal with extraordinary costs, including paying for electricity.

Mr Parsons: Minister, I and others are disappointed in that answer. You have sent these people to poverty. It is a shameful reflection on this province, on how you handle Ontarians with disabilities.

Hon Mrs Elliott: Is it?

Mr Parsons: Please let me finish, Minister. This is not funny. They are choosing between electricity and food. Certainly there is a discretionary fund, but you capped the non-health discretionary funds that municipalities have to give out. I'm asking you—and I'm almost embarrassed to ask the question—if you will immediately raise the ODSP to the poverty level. It should be far above, but would you simply move it to the poverty level and remove these people from making the decision of do they buy food or do they have heat and electricity in their home. Minister, their increases do not begin to match the increases caused by the electricity gouging that is taking place.

Hon Mrs Elliott: While I tried to be very clear in my answer; I will try again. Perhaps I do need to speak slowly so the member across can understand what I said. I said that this government cares. We already have measures in place to deal with extraordinary circumstances for those who are on fixed incomes under the Ontario disability support plan. I said, and I will repeat, that in extraordinary circumstances caseworkers can issue a cheque to cover the actual expenses of hydro or any other unexpected expense. We have provisions in place to deal with extraordinary costs, including costs to keep electricity running.

KYOTO PROTOCOL

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): My question today is for the Minister of the Environment. Basically, I'd like to—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. Give the member the chance to ask the question, please.

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Simcoe North has the floor.

Mr Dunlop: My question is for the Minister of the Environment. I'd like him, if he could, to give us an update on what's happening with Kyoto at the present time.

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Obviously, some members opposite don't think it's an important issue facing the province or the country today, and I do. Considering the recent events and the ministers of environment meeting in Halifax, that a request that the federal government have a first ministers' meeting was refused by the Prime Minister, it was disturbing to say the least. The impact of Kyoto, I think, has been universally accepted around this country, that the impact statements and the studies provided by the federal government are weak, not completely fulsome, and the questions that have been put by the provinces have not been answered. I was very, very, encouraged to read that the public has changed its mind dramatically and that they would like some fulsome information too with respect to this. I'd like to follow that up, hopefully, in the supplementary.

Mr Dunlop: Minister, can you update us on what the federal government is actually trying to do before the Christmas season? Is it possible to get that answer? There seems to be a lot of dialogue floating around, but everybody wants to know exactly what our federal government is actually up to before the Christmas season begins.

Hon Mr Stockwell: The provinces at the last meeting were very clear. They suggested to the federal government that they need more explanation on exactly what Kyoto means: costs, impact studies, megaton reductions, credits etc. I know we stood in this House last week and there was much ballyhoo from the opposite side about 70% or 80% of the public supporting Kyoto, and they were prepared to sign last week. Both leaders suggested we should sign on to Kyoto.

We've discovered that maybe that just isn't the case. Maybe the public in the province of Ontario have taken a sober second look. They'd like to know the impacts cost. They'd like to know the job cost. They'd like to know the investment cost. They'd like to know what the economic impact is to the people of the province of Ontario. So I can only take a large sigh of relief that this government decided not to follow the instructions of those two parties opposite, listened to what they thought would be the best approach to take and—that's my leadership—now today the public said, "Boy, maybe the Conservatives were right. Before we buy a pig in a poke, maybe we should examine this project."

HYDRO RATES

Mr Ted McMeekin (Ancaster-Dundas-Flamborough-Aldershot): My question is for the beleaguered Minister of Energy. Hydro from a different perspective: we've a very significant local problem impacting the Waterdown Legion and our precious war veterans. Since deregulation of the hydro market, the Waterdown Legion's hydro bill has climbed 149%. Minister, the Waterdown Legion is, as you know, a charitable organization. The impact of this 149% increase is simply devastating, as I suspect it is with other legions across the province. Here's what Legion treasurer Gary Titley told the Flamborough Post last week: "The increases are having an effect on the way the legion does business. We've had to reassess our commitment to our community just to meet projected utility costs."

Minister, this isn't right. Will you stand in your place today and tell these veterans what your government plans to do to help them?

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): Providing supports to organizations, to individuals, to working families and small businesses in the province is tremendously important for the people of Ontario. It's tremendously important for their government. The Premier has asked me to review the whole issue of rebates and what can be done to help address these concerns with respect to taxpayers in the province of Ontario, and that's what we're doing.

The member opposite may want to ask his own official spokesman, his own party critic, Sean Conway, who was quoted in the Ottawa Citizen: "Conway said Ontarians paid artificially low electricity prices for years while the provincially owned power utility piled up billions of dollars in debt." We acknowledge there are concerns out there. We're working on solutions. I will say to the member opposite that the old way, where we simply took out the Ontario Hydro credit card and borrowed money from our children and our grandchildren, is not the way to go. It's not what anyone in the province would envisage.

Mr McMeekin: Artificially low? These rates are up 149%, for goodness' sake, and now, just a week before Remembrance Day, our Waterdown war veterans may have to sacrifice significant community work simply to pay their hydro bills.

Minister, our war veterans are frustrated and angry with your government. Don't take my word for it. Here's what Gary Titley said further in the article I quoted earlier: "Other businesses wouldn't be able to get away with this. This is mismanagement. Someone was asleep at the wheel."

When will you finally admit that your government's hydro policy is not working: not working for residential consumers, not working for small business consumers, not working for Ontario charities and not working, as we discovered today, for our war veterans?

Hon Mr Baird: Obviously it's a tremendous concern when any community organization like the Royal Canadian Legion, which provides excellent services to a lot of vulnerable people, including veterans and other community support groups, is facing some significant financial challenges. We acknowledge that, and we are looking at what we can do in terms of a rebate mechanism that would provide a measure of relief and support for this group, for working families, for farmers, for small business people and for industry in the province.

When the member opposite stands in his place and speaks against deregulation, his own party, the Liberal Party of Ontario, and his leader, Dalton McGuinty, stood in their place and voted in favour of Bill 35 in principle in 1998. And what did Michael Bryant, the critic, say just last week? "Our position has not changed since 1997." I know he'd want to be honest to his constituents and point that out.

NURSE PRACTITIONERS

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): My question is for the Minister of Health. Since this government was elected in 1995, we have made health care a top priority. This year, the provincial government will spend over $25 billion on health care. This represents 47% of Ontario's total budget for this fiscal year. This is an all-time high. The government, since 1995, has increased spending on health care by 45%, or almost $8 billion.

One of the many provincial government initiatives on health care involves primary care reform, specifically supported by nurse practitioners. In Waterloo-Wellington, there is great interest in bringing nurse practitioners to our communities. Can the minister update my constituents and this House about the nurse practitioner program in Ontario?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): My honourable colleague is right: the nurse practitioner program is one of many initiatives that the Ernie Eves government is introducing to ensure that Ontario has timely access to universal and publicly funded health care. This year, our government has pledged $11 million for up to 117 new nurse practitioner positions in the province.

I'd like to take this opportunity to dispel some of the myths about nurse practitioners. Many people hear the term "nurse practitioner" and simply think of a registered nurse, and yet a nurse practitioner is more than that. They have been trained to take on additional responsibilities. They are one step closer to being a general practitioner in the medical sense. For example, you can go to a nurse practitioner and get an annual physical examination. If you're concerned about a lump or other abnormality, a nurse practitioner can order a mammogram without having to wait for an appointment with a GP.

We have listened to Ontarians. Primary care reform is the top priority for them and it is for us as well.

Mr Arnott: I've taken a great personal interest in the nurse practitioner program in our province. I know that my constituents in Waterloo-Wellington will benefit significantly from their services.

I'm aware that the Ministry of Health recently announced the commencement of the nurse practitioner application process. I was very encouraged to learn that there are plans to bring nurse practitioners to my constituency of Waterloo-Wellington. Could the minister inform the House about how many nurse practitioners the communities of Wellington and Waterloo are eligible to receive? Second, could the minister indicate a timeframe as to when we will have these nurse practitioners in place, serving the health care needs of the residents of Waterloo-Wellington?

Hon Mr Clement: This year, 31 communities are eligible to apply for nurse practitioners. I am delighted to inform my colleague for Waterloo-Wellington that the Waterloo region will be eligible to receive up to 11 new nurse practitioners, while Wellington county will be eligible to receive up to seven new NPs. The deadline for submissions is December 13. The ministry will review each application, and decisions will be announced next January.

I would like to add that many of the nurse practitioners, including those in Waterloo-Wellington, could begin serving their communities very shortly after their applications have been approved. Applications are found on the Ministry of Health's Web site and can be submitted—actually, HealthyOntario.com is the best place to receive this information. Certainly we are also interested in submissions by interested groups within the 31 communities.

We are there for nurse practitioners and we are there for the people of Ontario.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): My question is to the Minister of Energy. You are now six months into one of the most disastrous policies any government of this province has ever undertaken. Ratepayers across this province are demanding that you scrap this plan and go back to something that worked since the beginning of the last century.

In Minister Molinari's riding, a ratepayer by the name of Shirley has called us and told us that when she phoned to say she couldn't pay her $700 bill this month, Vaughan Hydro told her not to worry, that they had thousands of calls just like hers. They told them to make weekly instalments if they have to; they're not going to shut them off. I thank Vaughan Hydro for that. But there are thousands of people in Vaughan facing this problem.

In my own riding, a constituent phoned to say that his hydro bill for this month, November, has gone up to $828. When he queried it, because it was only $160 during the heat wave, he was told to pay now or have his hydro cut off.

Your own caucus is falling all over themselves, member after member, to distance themselves from this. When are you going to limit and change and go back to—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the member's time is up.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, minister responsible for francophone affairs): We recognize that there are a lot of people in Ontario—working families, small business people, farmers and others—who are concerned about electricity rates; so is their government, so is this minister and so is our Premier. He has asked me to look at the issue with respect to rebates and report back to him in short order on what we can do to express both the concerns people have around the kitchen table with respect to the bills in front of them and with respect to the fear they have for their future—themselves and their families.

The member opposite is suggesting that we go back to the way it was. The way it was was public power at cost minus $38 billion. I don't think it's responsible, as he and his party would, to borrow $3 billion over five years for hydro or to borrow $50 billion over five years to provide for people in Ontario. I don't think there's social justice in borrowing $50 billion or $3 billion on the backs of our children and our children's children to pay for our life today. That's why we have to move to a better way. We're looking at possible—

The Speaker: The minister's time is up. Supplementary?

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): Let me see if I have this straight. You're saying we're better off now; I fail to see how. The reality is that as we go around the province, Ontarian after Ontarian is complaining that they're paying more for hydro now than they did prior to your deregulation scheme.

Just in the city of Timmins on the weekend, I had an opportunity to speak to a number of people. One particular couple, John and Anne, whose bill has gone up by $100 a month, sent me this note after our conversation. They wrote, "My husband and I have been struggling to make ends meet for the last six years due to medical conditions.... Take a lesson from the American experience. Privatization increases costs and reduces services to the paying public."

They go on to make the point that they paid less under a regulated power structure that was publicly owned, and they pay more now. Minister, when are you going to turn the lights on over there and recognize that hydro deregulation is a disaster? Stop it. It's not by doing subsidies or anything else that will fix it. When are you going to stop it?

Hon Mr Baird: The member said it's not by doing subsidies that you're going to stop it. That's exactly what he and his party did in each and every year they were in government. They borrowed $3 billion on the backs of hydro customers; they borrowed $50 billion on the backs of families in the province of Ontario. I acknowledge particularly this member has been consistent in his opposition to privatization.

What do the other members think? Some members say one thing on Bay Street when they're in Toronto and another thing on Main Street when they're back in their ridings. Let's hear one member: "The only way we're going to get more made-in-Ontario electricity is to permit the private sector to come in and build electricity"—Michael Bryant, Liberal critic for energy. What else have they said? "We know that some areas of the province wouldn't have energy if it wasn't for privatization." Who said that? My friend the member for Hamilton Mountain, Marie Bountrogianni, said that—a consistent supporter of privatization on Bay Street, but when she's back in the riding on Main Street, the position changes.

HOSPITAL FUNDING

Mr Dominic Agostino (Hamilton East): My question is to the Minister of Health. On Thursday, the Hamilton Health Sciences corporation announced it may be facing a $30-million deficit. They will be laying off 250 staff. They're going to be closing 69 beds in a specialized complex continuing care unit at Chedoke. They're going to close outpatient physiotherapy and reduce clinical procedures.

Two and a half years ago your government fired the board and CEO of the same institution, because you felt they couldn't control the budget, and you brought in a new CEO and a new board. Two and a half years later we're facing many of those similar challenges. The problem is not the board, which you like to blame. The problem is not the administration, which you like to blame. The problem is your constant and critical underfunding of health care. They need $5.5 million immediately simply to balance their budget, and it's still going to mean a reduction in programs that they've outlined here.

Minister, it's clear you're to blame and your government is to blame. Will you commit today to funding the proper needs of this hospital, the $5.5 million that they asked of your staff on Thursday, to at least be able to balance their budget for this year?

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I'd like to put two facts on the record for this House: first of all, there will be more beds available in Hamilton for complex continuing care patients when all is said and done, and that's what the people of Hamilton really care about.

I must correct the record from the honourable member. When it comes to funding the Hamilton health sciences centre, this government has been there for the people of Hamilton. The percentage increase from 2001-02, just in this hospital alone, is 8.5%. That's a $36-million increase in one year. If you look over the last five years, the Hamilton health sciences complex has received an increase of $138 million. That's a 43% increase. We have been there for the people of Hamilton, and it is time for Hamilton Health Sciences to do its job as well. We have confidence they can do that.

Mr Agostino: Once again, it's someone else's fault. We hear this story over and over: "It's the Hamilton Health Sciences corporation's fault; it's the staff; it's the board; it's the administration." When are you going to take responsibility for your decisions that have impacted on these cuts in Hamilton? The reality is there are 69 beds at the Chedoke continuing care centre. It's a family, it's a home to them. These people are going to be dispersed throughout the community. They don't pay copayment fees now. They will be forced to pay copayment fees when they get put into these other institutions.

The reality is that you've got to stop pointing fingers and blaming this board and this administration and acknowledge it's your underfunding that is causing this problem. They may face up to a $30-million deficit. You don't seem to get it. That's cuts in health care; that's cuts in programs, in services—250 staff being laid off. That's the simple truth and reality, Minister. When are you going to step up to the plate, do the right thing and fund this institution properly so it doesn't have to continue making these cuts to health care in Hamilton?

Hon Mr Clement: The fact is that St Peter's is staying open. That's 250 beds right there. The fact is that St Joseph's is building a new 148-bed complex. That is for continuing care as well. Those are the facts.

In the alternative Liberal universe, I suppose a 43% increase in the budget is somehow underfunding or cutbacks, but in the real world we have been there for the people of Hamilton, we have been there for health care in Hamilton and we will continue to be so.

RURAL ECONOMIC DEVELOPMENT

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question today is for the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing responsible for rural affairs. As you well know, the Ernie Eves government has made rural economic development a top priority. Our government is ensuring that the people who live, work and raise their families in small-town Ontario, like Blackstock, Nestleton, Newtonville and other rural communities, enjoy the same the opportunities for growth and prosperity as their urban neighbours.

Minister, I know you've been doing an exceptional job developing and putting in place strategies and programs that benefit the people of rural Ontario. Can you inform the House what you've been doing and how the success of your ministry's economic development programs have made life better for rural Ontario?

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I thank the member from Durham. His tireless efforts in and around Queen's Park certainly represent his constituents in Durham very well.

The task force report on rural economic renewal recommended the development of teams of highly skilled experts who could assess barriers to growth, recommend solutions and work with people to ensure that success and growth happen to their rural economies.

As a result of that, we developed the resource jump teams to achieve this objective. As recently as December 7, 2001, we assigned a group to jump-start tourism in the Land O' Lakes region of eastern Ontario. Thirty-five actions have been identified by that group, a long-term work plan has been done and a variety of new, innovative tourism packages are now being marketed.

We have seen the positive impact in this region as a result of these efforts. Tourism operators in the region are embracing its recommendations enthusiastically.

Mr O'Toole: That's a very thorough answer, Minister. It's clear your heart is still in rural Ontario. I know that for sure. It sounds like part of it is in Northumberland, actually.

This is great news for the people of the Land O' Lakes region and I commend you for the work. Tourism, as you know, is a vital part of not just the Land O' Lakes but the riding of Durham. It's a major economic contributor. Let's understand that. Can you expand on the scope of this project and future projects that might land in Durham?

Hon Mr Coburn: Recently, the member from Northumberland, the Honourable Dr Galt, visited the Land O' Lakes region on my behalf and presented funding in the amount of $400,000, a full 50% of the project's cost, toward jump-starting Land O' Lakes tourism. This OSTAR-RED project is a direct result of the jump team's recommendations, and I'm confident that this exciting private-public sector initiative will indeed succeed.

This $400,000 provincial investment in tourism enables the project partners to work better together, removing barriers to economic development and helping them build a stronger and more diverse tourism industry. We expect this program to have measurable results, raising the international profile of the Land O' Lakes region and enhancing its position as a must-see tourist destination here in Ontario.

DOCTOR SHORTAGE

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): I have a question for the Minister of Health. As you know, we have in Ontario a real crisis—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. I know it's fun lobbying, but the member does need to place a question. I'd appreciate your support. The member for Davenport.

Mr Ruprecht: I have a question for the Minister of Health. As you know, we have a doctor shortage in Ontario. We are indeed in a crisis. A lot of Ontarians are waiting to get an appointment with a doctor and they cannot. Some of our municipalities are totally underserved.

You know the facts. Right here in Ontario, we need at least 1,000 doctors, while at the same time we have over 1,100 doctors within the greater Toronto area who are foreign-trained professionals. The question is simply this: when will this minister make the announcement all of us are waiting for? As we know, Ontario created a special six-month assessment program this year. All foreign-trained graduates were required to redo parts of their residency program. These are punitive measures. Will this minister now stand up, because he knows—

The Speaker: The member's time is up.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I thank the honourable member for his question that was offered in all seriousness, and I take it seriously.

As this House knows, Premier Eves and I have been working very hard on a new policy, a new initiative with respect to this area for international medical graduates. I can tell you that we are very excited about the progress we're making. We're still crossing some t's and dotting some i's, but in the fullness of time, this announcement will have every question that I'm sure the honourable member would like to ask answered. I would assume that the honourable member will support this Ernie Eves government initiative, just as I'm assuming that the opposition members supported us on the northern medical school, a brand new medical school for northern Ontario, just as they hopefully supported us on the new medical education campus at Windsor. Hopefully, they supported us when it came to all of the new initiatives when it comes to—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

Mr Ruprecht: Let me remind this minister that his much-lauded new fast-track program—you know what?—accepted only 44 of the 709 people who applied. Is that the program you're going to espouse in this Legislature: accepting 44 out of the 709 people who applied? That, obviously, can't be your new policy.

I remind the minister of one other fact. We met, about three years ago, with the OMA and the Ontario College of Physicians and Surgeons. We indicated to them, with our colleague from Kingston and the Islands—he made it very clear that we need some action. You have screwed up this policy for the last six years, and now you're coming here to this Legislature and telling us, "Are you going to support this program?" Of course we're going to support this program. But we want you to stand up and say you're accepting more than 44 physicians when over 1,000 community residents are waiting to get some action. Tell us in the House: what are you going to do? When are you going to accept this—

The Speaker: The member's time is up.

Hon Mr Clement: The honourable member is clearly lunging, in some desperate manner, to try to attach himself and his party to the good-news Ernie Eves announcement that is forthcoming. But the people of Ontario can see through that.

In answer to his question, our new initiatives will be the equivalent of one and a half new medical schools for the people of Ontario and for citizens in Ontario to get access to excellent quality training by foreign-trained physicians. They can talk all they want. They're good at talking. We're good at doing.

WORKPLACE SAFETY FOR STUDENTS

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): Mr Speaker, if you'll allow me, please, my question is for the Minister of Labour. This assembly is well aware of your commitment to workplace health and safety, especially as it relates to young workers. I'm certainly very happy to see so many young people in the visitors' gallery today. I understand that you spoke to students at Hill Park Secondary School in Hamilton about young worker health and safety. Could you please update us on that?

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): I thank the honourable member for the question. Our government is committed to the health and safety of young workers in the workplace. That's why we're taking the message directly to the students with the Live Safe! Work Smart! presentation. This past Friday at Hill Park Secondary School, I spoke to over 800 students about the importance of health and safety in the workplace.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Clark: I see that the member for Kingston and the Islands is fully supportive of me getting out to the high schools and speaking to them about the need to be safe in the workplace.

The students at Hill Park were very interested in the message I had to share about young worker health and safety, what their responsibilities are and what their rights are. Students were eager to learn how to recognize hazards in the workplace and how to protect themselves on the job. There are no valid reasons for any injury or death to occur in the workplace. That's why the Ernie Eves government is taking the message of workplace safety directly to the students.

Mr Gill: Minister, I am glad to hear that you are taking such an active role in preventing injuries on the job for young workers. I think visiting schools and educating children about health and safety is very important.

Minister, please advise us on your future plans about visiting more schools and talking to youth about safe workplaces.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Clark: It would appear that the member for Kingston and the Islands would like me to come to his riding too and speak to the high school students there. In the near future—actually, next week—I'll be going to St Mary's Catholic Secondary School in Hamilton to share the same message with the students. The goal of these school tours is very simple: to increase awareness about workplace health and safety, inspire young workers to understand and exercise their rights and responsibilities for workplace safety, promote a Live Safe! Work Smart! culture for a new generation of workers and encourage a feeling of empowerment among young workers. We need to enhance the skill and knowledge level of our students to equip them with the fundamental skills to protect themselves in the workplace. Finally, we need to increase the level of awareness of the issue among young people, their parents, their teachers and the employers. These are the messages that the Ernie Eves government is bringing directly to the students to ensure that they are safe in the workplace.

HYDRO RATES

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): My question is to the Minister of Energy. All afternoon you have been dancing around the real issues that are affecting real Ontarians. The NDP hydro hotheads have been responding to our call to tell us what's happening out there. From Brampton we're hearing this: "I can see a lot of people going bankrupt over these prices. Should we thank you now or after we file?" From Mississauga: "My brother is on a pension and his bill for two months was $600. Where is a person supposed to find this kind of money?" From Guelph: "Admit your error and reverse this now." From Waterloo: "I will have to sell my house if this keeps up." From Mount Hope—and a monthly bill increase of $320: "Do I pay the bill or feed my family?" And from Stoney Creek: "Please stop the deregulation. Help people on fixed incomes stay warm."

Minister, never mind all the macro talk. What are you going to do to help people pay their hydro bills so they'll have heat this summer?

Interjection: He meant winter.

Hon John R. Baird (Minister of Energy, Minister responsible for francophone affairs): I don't want to make light of a serious issue. There's nothing I can do to make the summer not be warm. The member opposite must be listening, though; we did have the warmest summer in 50 years, and I acknowledge that.

I want to tell the member opposite that I also have heard the concerns of working families, of small businesses who are concerned not just about the high hydro bills they have on their kitchen tables today but about the future. The Premier has asked me to look at the whole issue, about a rebate and the whole issue about the challenge that these families are facing. We've indicated that he has asked me to report back in short order and I've committed to do just that.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Supplementary?

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): The Conservatives and the Liberals support the deregulation and the privatization of hydro; 80% of Ontarians and the NDP don't. Chuck S., down in Welland: "The whole older generation of people on pension cannot wait for an election. Rebates or no rebates, it's all a sham and we know it." John and Margaret in Grimsby: "All essential services should be run by the government for the betterment of the province and the residents." Ed of Niagara Falls: "You're killing the economy big time. People won't be able to pay their hydro bills any more. That will hurt everyone in the long run."

These folks don't want your crummy rebate. They want restoration of a regulated, publicly owned, publicly controlled, publicly operated, hydro-at-cost hydro-electricity system. Why don't you listen to the 80% of Ontarians? Don't offer them $100 or $150 when they've already been slammed and whacked for what will amount to thousands by the time the winter is over. Tell them you're going to restore regulated, publicly owned hydro here in the province of Ontario.

Hon Mr Baird: The member opposite's own party, his own government didn't bring in public power at cost once when they had five years to do that. They borrowed $3 billion; that's in addition and above and beyond the $50 billion they borrowed out of the consolidated revenue fund, and our children and our children's children will have to pay for that. On the issue of privatization, at least the honourable member has stood in his place and been consistent. What did Dalton McGuinty say? "I am in favour of privatization, both in terms of the transmission and the generation." To clarify that, Michael Bryant said last week, on October 28, "Our position hasn't changed since 1997."

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I am not happy with the answer given me by the Minister of Health. Before he leaves, I'd like him to know that I would request a late show. Perhaps he can come back and expound on his new announcement that we all await.

The Speaker: If I could just remind the member to file the appropriate paperwork with the table, that would be helpful.

PETITIONS

AIR QUALITY

James J. Bradley (St Catharines): My petition reads as follows:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government's wholly owned Nanticoke generating station is North America's largest dirty coal-fired electricity producing plant and Ontario's largest producer of the chemicals and acid gases which contribute to deadly smog and acid rain; and

"Whereas the Nanticoke plant, which has more than doubled its dangerous emissions under the Harris and Eves government, is now the worst air polluter in all of Canada, spewing out over five million kilograms of toxic chemicals each year, including many cancer-causing chemicals and mercury, a potent and dangerous neurotoxin; and

"Whereas the Ontario Medical Association has stated that 1,900 Ontarians die prematurely each year and we pay $1 billion annually in health-related costs as a result of air pollution; and

"Whereas the Eves government has the opportunity to make a positive move on behalf of the environment by proceeding with the Sir Adam Beck 3 generating facility, which would produce air-pollution-free electricity in this province and would provide an alternative to the constantly increasing demands placed upon the Nanticoke coal facility; and

"Whereas the Beck 3 generating facility would also provide a major boost to the economy of Ontario through investment and employment in the construction and operation of the facility and in addition would offer additional energy for the power grid of the province of Ontario;

"Be it resolved that the Ernie Eves government, as chief shareholder of Ontario Power Generation, order the immediate development and construction of the Sir Adam Beck generating station."

I affix my signature. I'm in complete agreement.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): I have another 2,000 names. We now have 28,000 names on this petition. It's to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario, dealing with the multi-laning of Highway 69.

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas, in the last three years, 46 people have been killed; and

"Whereas, this year alone, 10 people have needlessly lost their lives on this highway; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of any government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government has failed to do so;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned" 2,000 people "petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Harris-Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

I of course affix my signature to this petition, and give it to Lauren, our page, to bring to the desk.

POST-SECONDARY EDUCATION FUNDING

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas average tuition fees in Ontario are the second-highest in Canada; and

"Whereas average undergraduate tuition fees in Ontario have more than doubled in the past 10 years; and

"Whereas tuition fees for deregulated programs have, in certain cases, doubled and tripled; and

"Whereas Statistics Canada has documented a link between increasing tuition fees and diminishing access to post-secondary education; and

"Whereas four other provincial governments have taken a leadership role by freezing and reducing tuition fees;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to:

"Freeze tuition fees for all programs at their current levels, and

"Take steps to reduce the tuition fees of all graduate programs, post-diploma programs and professional programs for which tuition fees have been deregulated since 1998."

This is signed by several hundred more students who share this concern. I affix my signature in full agreement with their concerns.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Further petitions? The member for Thunder Bay-Superior North hasn't had one in a while.

Mr Michael Gravelle (Thunder Bay-Superior North): My colleague from Thunder Bay-Atikokan and I were recently at Lakehead University, where thousands of students signed petitions calling for a tuition fee freeze, and certainly I'm here to read some petitions as well. This is a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas average tuition fees in Ontario are the second-highest in Canada; and

"Whereas average undergraduate tuition fees in Ontario have more than doubled in the past 10 years; and

"Whereas tuition fees for deregulated programs have, in certain cases, doubled and tripled; and

"Whereas Statistics Canada has documented a link between increasing tuition fees and diminishing access to post-secondary education; and

"Whereas four other provincial governments have taken a leadership role by freezing and reducing tuition fees;

"Therefore, we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to:

"Freeze tuition fees for all programs at their current levels, and

"Take steps to reduce the tuition fees of all graduate programs, post-diploma programs and professional programs for which tuition fees have been deregulated since 1998."

I want to thank Glendon Tremblay, president of the Lakehead University Student Union, for organizing this petition campaign. I'm very pleased to add my name to the petition.

HYDRO RATES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'll try one in the back row: the member for Sarnia-Lambton.

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas electricity bills have skyrocketed under the Harris-Eves government's flawed electricity plan; and

"Whereas some consumers have signed higher fixed-rate contracts with retailers, without adequate consumer protection; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has failed to address electricity supply shortages in Ontario, forcing the purchase of American power at a premium prices, driving up prices still further; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government appointed a board of directors for Hydro One that has been paying themselves extravagant salaries, compensation packages and severances for senior executives; and

"Whereas Hydro One bought 90 municipal utilities, serving about 240,000 people across Ontario, at premium prices and with borrowed funds. These purchases with borrowed funds have increased Ontario's debt burden; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has added additional fees and taxes to local electricity distribution companies. These charges have also been passed along to consumers;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Harris-Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair and reasonable prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario."

I have thousands of signatures. I affix my signature to this petition.

WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): The petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario. There are about 300 names on this petition, which reads as follows:

"The unreasonable and inhumane restrictions that the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources (OMNR) is placing on wildlife rehabilitators with respect to the release of orphaned animals will eliminate their ability to help wildlife.

"Whereas wildlife rehabilitators provide an essential public service for many thousands of people seeking help on behalf of orphaned and injured wildlife in Ontario; and ...

"Whereas this will incur significant new costs for local governments with respect to bylaw and public health and safety interventions while creating an emotional and volatile climate because the majority of people in Ontario are simply unwilling to see healthy young animals euthanized," which means killed;

"We, the undersigned, are deeply concerned that the release restrictions imposed by the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources will eliminate the provision of responsible wildlife services in our community.

"We petition the government of Ontario to work with wildlife rehabilitators to ensure that progressive, humane and responsible regulations with respect to release criteria for rehabilitated orphaned wildlife are put in place in Ontario."

I affix my signature to this petition as well.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): I have a petition concerning the increases in hydro rates. The petition reads as follows:

"Whereas the government has legislated the opening of the Ontario electricity market as of May 1, 2002, and the price per kilowatt hour for electricity in the province of Ontario has nearly quadrupled since May 1; and

"Whereas Ernie Eves has done a poor job in educating the public as to the ramifications of an open electricity market in the province of Ontario and has done little to punish the unscrupulous sales practices of door-to-door energy retailers; and

"Whereas" the government "appointed the board of directors for Hydro One, who approved exorbitant salaries and compensation packages for Hydro One executives;

"Be it resolved that the Ontario government move immediately to protect our province's electricity consumers by addressing the serious generation problem in Ontario, by punishing unscrupulous electricity retailers and by moving forward with a rebate to offset the increasing costs of electricity in Ontario."

Since I agree, I'm delighted to pass it on to Maureen.

WILDLIFE MANAGEMENT

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The member for Prince Edward-Hastings has been up since the beginning.

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I have a petition with over 1,000 names from 280 different cities to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"The unreasonable and inhumane restrictions that the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources (OMNR) is placing on wildlife rehabilitators with respect to the release of orphaned animals will eliminate their ability to help wildlife.

"Whereas wildlife rehabilitators provide an essential public service for many thousands of people seeking help on behalf of orphaned and injured wildlife in Ontario; and

"Whereas the unreasonable release restrictions imposed on wildlife rehabilitators by the OMNR will prevent responsible wildlife rehabilitation, not only compromising wildlife and frustrating the public but forcing it underground and jeopardizing public safety; and

"Whereas this will incur significant new costs for local governments with respect to bylaw and public health and safety interventions while creating an emotional and volatile climate because the majority of people in Ontario are simply unwilling to see healthy young animals euthanized;

"We, the undersigned, are deeply concerned that the release restrictions imposed by the Ontario Ministry of Natural Resources will eliminate the provision of responsible wildlife services in our community; and

"We petition the government of Ontario to work with wildlife rehabilitators to ensure that progressive, humane and responsible regulations with respect to release criteria for rehabilitated orphaned wildlife are put in place...."

I am pleased to add my name to these thousands of signatures.

POVERTY

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I have further petitions addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas we are seniors and low-income people finding it very hard to live and pay all expenses every day; and

"Whereas with all the increases in our utilities in the last several months, we no longer can afford to have a warm house, or buy enough of a variety of foods, or buy some of the drugs that we desperately need; and

"Whereas we feel helpless, abandoned, and totally neglected by our own government; and

"Whereas, without some sort of assistance from our government, either in terms of subsidy or lowering the cost of utilities," such as hydro or "...gas for heating, we will have to seriously limit the quality and quantity of prescription drugs, or decide to buy food or pay the ever-increasing utility costs;

"We, the undersigned citizens of Ontario, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to help us live in dignity and with compassion and care."

I concur in the content of the petition, and I will affix my signature to it.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Eves government has increased the fees paid for by seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities by 15% or $7.02 per diem effective August 1, 2002; and

"Whereas this fee increase will cost seniors and our most vulnerable more than $200 a month; and

"Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

"Whereas the increase in the government's own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

"Whereas according to the government's own funded study, Ontario ranks last amongst comparable jurisdictions in the amount of time provided to a resident for nursing and personal care; and

"Whereas the long-term-care funding partnership has been based on government accepting the responsibility to fund the care and services that residents need; and

"Whereas government needs to increase long-term-care operating funding by $750 million over the next three years to raise the level of service for Ontario's long-term-care residents to those in Saskatchewan in 1999; and

"Whereas this province has been built by seniors who should be able to live their lives with dignity, respect and in comfort in this province;

"We the undersigned petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Demand that Premier Eves reduce his 15% fee increase on seniors and the most vulnerable living in long-term-care facilities and increase provincial government support for nursing and personal care to adequate levels."

I am very happy to sign this petition, and I will be handing it to Hin-Hey, who is the page.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This is part of the 28,000-name petition. It comes from Tecklenburgs Restaurant in Sudbury. It is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it deals with the multi-laning of Highway 69 from Sudbury to Parry Sound.

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a ... trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas, in the last three years 46 people have been killed on that stretch of highway; and

"Whereas" so far this year "10 people have died needlessly on the stretch of highway between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of a government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government has failed to do so;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

I affix my signature to this petition and of course give it to Maureen and ask her to bring it to the table.

That in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Stockwell has moved government notice of motion 57. Minister?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Mr Speaker, this is Bill 175, which is the source-to-tap cost recovery bill from the Ministry of the Environment. To set aside six days of committee time to hear this bill, I think it would be important to let the Legislature decide to let the committee decide how they want to manage their time in six days, how they want to travel and how they want to go about doing their business. We couldn't get an agreement from the three parties about exactly how to do that, but I think everyone would agree that six days is a fairly reasonable amount of time to be set aside for Bill 175 to be heard in public hearings at committee.

I know the good work of the general committee. I think it will be up to them and they will do the decision-making, which I think by and large will resolve the issue.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I say to the member opposite, I appreciate the fact of what you're saying. I've canvassed all caucuses on this bill with respect to what it is they'd like to see. Having not heard back from one of them, it was difficult to get a consent motion to determine how we carry forward on this bill. So I did make a decision to go with six committee days in consultation with one of the opposition parties; that seemed to satisfy their concerns. It's the best I can do, considering I can't get consent from all three parties. Therefore we can't move forward in any kind of collegial agreement about how we manage this bill. I've tried my best to be as generous as possible with respect to committee time on this bill, and I'm interested in hearing from the opposition members.

As I spoke to this bill for the first time in the House, I said to the member for St Catharines that I'm interested in seeing your amendments, I'm interested in seeing the amendments from the opposition, I'm interested in travelling this bill. By turning it over to the committee, I think it's the best possible world that we can have for it.

At this time, I'll be happy to sit down.

The Speaker: Further debate?

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): I'm pleased to take part in the debate today on second reading of the Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act. I know there are a number of members here who will remember back 45 or 50 years to the days when we were in elementary school and our memories of safe drinking water and how we heard, back then, about the problems that the people in Europe had insofar as safe drinking water is concerned, and how, through carelessness or lack of regard, those countries no longer had safe drinking water. Well, 45 or 50 years have gone by and of course we in North America are now faced with the same situation.

Safe drinking water, I have to say, is a non-negotiable priority for this government. It is something that the people of Ontario expect will not be compromised. I expect it. I expect that I will be able to drink safe water. I expect that my children will be able to drink safe water. If passed into law, the Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act will set another benchmark and provide an even stronger foundation for safe drinking water. It makes for good planning, it promotes water conservation and is an integral part of this government's clean water strategy. And I do want to emphasize the conservation aspect of water. We should all employ water conservation tactics.

This government is committed to implementing all 121 recommendations from Commissioner O'Connor's report of the Walkerton Inquiry, parts one and two. Our clean water strategy will help to make this commitment. We believe that one of the critical steps toward implementing the recommendations is the government's proposed Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act.

The driving force behind this proposed act is the concept of full-cost accounting and recovery. Our government believes that legislating full-cost accounting and recovery from municipal water and sewage services is one of the best ways to protect public health and our environment. The principles of full-cost accounting and recovery are fundamental to sustainability and are key aspects of Commissioner O'Connor's recommendations in the report of the Walkerton Inquiry, part two. Full-cost accounting reports will provide us with an accurate picture and a transparent method for identifying all costs, both operational and capital, to ensure that human health is protected when it comes to delivering water and sewage services. The full-cost recovery plans will provide a guide to ensure that sustainable systems are developed and supported.

In his report, Commissioner O'Connor made several references to the need for municipalities to ensure that their water systems are adequately financed. To quote Commissioner O'Connor, "Over the long term, safety depends on stable and adequate financing to maintain the water system's infrastructure and its operational capacity to supply high-quality water consistently."

Commissioner O'Connor also stated his support for the proposed act after it was first introduced to the Legislature as Bill 155. He said, "In my opinion, if passed into law, the act will address many of the important issues concerning the financing of water systems.... The requirements for a full-cost report and cost-recovery plan, as generally expressed in the proposed act, are in my view appropriate."

Through our clean water strategy, of which the Sustainable Water and Sewage Act is a significant part, the Ernie Eves government has pledged to invest more than half a billion dollars over the next two years. I repeat that for emphasis so our critics can be aware of it: this government has pledged to invest more than a half a billion dollars over the next two years in clean, safe drinking water for the people of Ontario. This year alone, the government will provide $245 million, including investments to help municipalities upgrade their water systems to meet our tough new standards and make improvements to their waste water systems.

While we acknowledge that there is still work to be done, this government continues to make significant progress on several other components of its clean water strategy.

We will also deliver on our budget commitment to establish the $50-million Clean Water Legacy Trust and the Clean Water Centre of Excellence in Walkerton. The centre of excellence in Walkerton will provide access to the best scientific knowledge, research and technology, and training in the management and monitoring of our safe drinking water. Again, I want to emphasize that: the centre of excellence will provide access to the best scientific knowledge, research and technology, and training in the management and monitoring of our safe drinking water.

In addition, the government plans to consult with key stakeholders on watershed-based source protection planning issues this fall. Several groundwater studies are already underway to support this planning.

So far, action has been taken on many fronts to help ensure that clean, safe drinking water is delivered to all of the people in Ontario. Our accomplishments include the drinking water protection regulation; the drinking water protection regulation for smaller waterworks, serving designated facilities; the Nutrient Management Act, 2002; and work toward a Safe Drinking Water Act. These examples demonstrate that our commitment is unwavering and the momentum is strong. We fully support Commissioner O'Connor's recommendations and are moving forward to complete their full implementation.

I'd like now to highlight some details of the proposed bill. If passed into law, the new Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act will make it mandatory for municipalities to assess and cost-recover the full amount of water and sewer services. The proposed act will ensure that water and sewer systems generate sufficient revenue to fully recover all their long-term operating and capital costs.

As members are aware, the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing first introduced the legislation as Bill 155 last December 2001. In his report, Commissioner O'Connor has stated that the previous bill addressed a number of major financing concerns. The act has been reintroduced to give legal authority to the Ministry of the Environment, as announced by Premier Eves in August of this year. It is also the government's next step in fulfilling Commissioner O'Connor's recommendations.

The concept of full-cost recovery is not a new one. Municipalities are already able to apply full-cost recovery if they wish. In fact, some municipalities have implemented this to some varying degree. But although some municipalities claim to be recovering full costs, the province doesn't know the extent to which they are recovering all of their long-term investment needs. The proposed act will give us the full picture of what it costs municipalities to provide water and waste water services and will require municipalities to do cost accounting according to a regulated standard.

Specific reporting requirements and detailed analyses would include all operating and capital costs; financing costs; renewal, replacement and improvement costs; infrastructure and investments required to maintain and expand the systems; and last, all sources of revenue. Accountants are quite familiar with these types of standards.

The proposed act will also require system owners to develop comprehensive asset management reports. At present, municipalities use different methods in determining water rates. In general, few of these methods include investment needs or what will be needed for repair, rehabilitation and expansion of related infrastructure. As a result, it is difficult to get an accurate estimate of the shortfall.

The reality is that most municipalities do not have a handle on the long-term costs of maintaining their water and sewer systems. That's a fact. This leads to under-investments in water systems, because much of the infrastructure is buried. The old adage "Out of sight, out of mind" is an unfortunate fact in many cases.

Underpricing of water can lead to deferred maintenance and overconsumption by water users. Deferred maintenance ultimately leads to deteriorating infrastructure and potential risks to public health.

Legislating full-cost accounting and recovery ensures that safe water is a priority municipal service that cannot be traded off with other services; the standard of service is mandatory.

Make no mistake: this is an environment and public health issue. But while the proposed Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act addresses the issue of infrastructure financing and cost recovery, there is also a much broader issue at stake. That issue relates to the overriding principle of municipal accountability.

A new provision in the proposed Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act would require municipalities to report to taxpayers annually on any service delivery improvements and any identified barriers to improving service delivery.

Through better communications, increased knowledge and more consistent financial and full-cost accounting processes, municipalities will be in a stronger position to know exactly where things stand and the true cost of their water and sewer services. This will enable them to take a more proactive view and adopt a more integrated and holistic approach to environmental protection.

Environmental improvement is a continuous journey, and it is a journey that we must travel together. The answers to our environmental challenges cannot come from any one source. Our government recognizes that it must involve consultations and partnerships with municipalities, industries, community organizations and individual Ontarians.

We are open to hearing amendments that make sustainable water and sewer financing work for our partners, but as I said in my opening remarks, our government's commitment to safe drinking water is a non-negotiable priority. There is no way we will allow the amendments to take away from the priority to make safe drinking water a must in this province.

We all need to know the true cost of the water and sewer services that we take for granted. It is the only way we can ensure that these services will be there to support the health and prosperity of future generations—your children, my children and their children. By working toward common environmental goals, we are able to explore opportunities, take appropriate action and together be at the environmental forefront as we solve our environmental challenges.

I believe, if passed, this bill will become an important legacy of our government. I certainly will look with pride on this as a legacy. I encourage members of this Legislature to support the Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I'm delighted to join in the debate on Bill 175.

Just to add to the comments made by the member on the government side, the member from Kitchener Centre, Mr Wettlaufer, we would love to see this going through as speedily as possible. It does not represent the final document we would like to see, and I believe it doesn't represent the final document that Justice O'Connor would like to see because it does not address all the recommendations in his report, but I believe this would be a good first step to move on with addressing safe, clean drinking water in Ontario.

It has already taken a couple of years since Justice O'Connor made his recommendations, and they are good recommendations. But finally something is here, so for my part I can say that, yes, we should support this bill even though it lacks some very major, important recommendations. But at least it's a first step, and I would say to the government side and to the Premier here, get on with it. Don't delay it. We can work on some of the other details as we go along. We'll see what the government indeed is going to do with respect to some of the recommendations that we as Liberals, and Dalton McGuinty, have been making with respect to safe drinking water.

One very important aspect that the bill is not doing is addressing the problem at source. I believe, and I believe even Justice O'Connor is saying, that controlling the water at source is very important. It's not only important; I don't think we should contemplate water contamination, pollution, at any stage, but at source it's most important.

Let me read what Justice O'Connor has been saying with respect to two of the important aspects of his reports. It says very explicitly, "... may constitute a significant burden for low-income families and individuals.... Suffice it to say that, since water is an essential need, it would be unacceptable for those who are unable to pay for safe water to go without. The provincial and municipal governments should ensure that this does not occur by whatever means they consider appropriate." This was on page 313 of Justice O'Connor's report, part two. He was addressing water rates and his concern with respect to affordability. I will try in the next few minutes to address the accountability that Justice O'Connor is speaking of in his report as well.

But there is another passage that I want to read to the House, where Justice O'Connor is practically admonishing the government. Justice O'Connor made a specific warning that the Conservative government's municipal downloading may make it impossible for municipalities to pay for water and sewer infrastructures. Let me say, before I continue with what Justice O'Connor has said, that it's not just a question of approving another piece of legislation without addressing the real problem. The real problem is that a lot of the infrastructure needs a complete overhaul costing millions and millions of dollars. One cannot accomplish clean, safe drinking water unless the government—and it's in the report itself again. It needs funding and it needs qualified staff as well.

Let me continue with what Justice O'Connor was saying: "The financing of water systems does not occur in isolation of other pressures on municipal budgets. In light of recent restructuring in the municipal sector, especially the transfer of additional open-ended social service costs (eg, welfare) to municipalities in 1998, there is currently some uncertainty about the ability of municipalities to finance all of the programs they are responsible for, including water services.... I encourage the province to publicly review the program responsibilities and fiscal capability of municipalities in light of recent restructuring to ensure that the financial pressures of municipalities do not crowd out the adequate financing of water systems."

I think this is quite clear. I know the Premier and the government members have the same report which we have, I have read from, showing the concern of Justice O'Connor.

It's not a question of when they knew it or how long this has been in existence; it is a question of doing something about it to make sure that instead of just approving a piece of legislation, the government gets on with the action and says, "Let's do it. We are going to do it."

The bill itself addresses two or three main points. One point is full cost accountability, which I think is fair; another point is full cost recovery. I think these are two very important points. But, as I said just a moment ago, reading from Justice O'Connor's report, who is going to pay? Ultimately, who is going to pay? The government has been totally mute on the issue, solving the problem of who is going to pay for it and how. I'm afraid that ultimately the individual taxpayer is going to get clobbered. Who is going to be clobbered the most, finally, for whatever action the government is going to take will be the working class people and, most importantly, the seniors who cannot afford any increase in water rates, especially at this time, with what we are going through with hydro rates.

Today I had another family come to my office delivering their hydro bill and asking, "How come the last bill we had was $199 and the new bill is $378?" These are seniors living on a fixed income in a 900-square-foot, two-bedroom pre-war bungalow. I wonder how high the rates will go, how hard the seniors in our province will be affected before the Premier and the government get off their butts, if you will, and do something about it and freeze the rates so we can bring some lasting relief to working families and seniors.

But let me get to Bill 175. I just wanted to throw that in because the government, unfortunately, in introducing Bill 175—I will try to address as well the fact that they are cutting debate.

Bill 175 does not address full-cost accountability and who is going to pay. Eventually they hope that the municipalities and taxpayers will bear the brunt. But as Justice O'Connor has been saying, I am afraid this is going to be done at the expense of those who can least pay for it. Are they working together with the municipalities? I doubt it. They have been too busy concentrating on how to sell some of the publicly owned agencies to cover the losses they have taken in the last few months, so they can look good in the next budget, that they have forgotten the essence, the real action, to make sure they deliver safe, clean drinking water to Ontarians.

The question indeed should be, who is ultimately going to pay for the actions of this government? We cannot afford to continue with the present situation, where the government has cut 50% of the environmental budget and one third of the staff. No wonder. We're not totally blaming the government, because the problem existed many moons ago. But the fact is that as soon as this government came into power they annihilated practically every major budget, and one to suffer the consequences was this particular ministry, the Ministry of the Environment. How can we not suffer the consequences when you cut 50% of the funding and one third of the staff?

The quality is measured by the staff that we have in the field, not only used by the ministry but by the various municipalities as well. When the monitoring stations are cut down from 730 to 240, well, that really sends a big signal. Between 1995 and 2000, the monitoring stations were cut by 500, 100 monitoring stations per year. You can't tell the people of Ontario, you cannot tell the municipalities, you cannot tell the consumers that when you cut 500 monitoring stations, this will not have a serious detrimental effect on the quality of water that we have in Ontario. I'm sure that along the way, if we had proper funding and, as we had in previous times, enough quality stations and inspectors, they would have bumped into some of the problems and we wouldn't have had the serious problems we experienced with Walkerton.

The other thing the government must understand is that we cannot continue to impose more responsibilities and more restrictions on the small municipalities in Ontario: more downloading, less money for the municipalities, less-qualified workers, fewer monitoring stations, less funding for municipalities and more responsibility. The government cannot accomplish with this bill what Justice O'Connor is saying in his report. We cannot accomplish it unless the government gets down to business and says, "Yes, we have to put back some of the funding that we cut originally. We have to bring the monitoring stations up to par to make sure that they do their job."

They have to understand that they have to get those qualified inspectors that they let go—and we said, "Don't do it, because we are going to suffer the consequences." In other words, the government, by approving of this legislation, cannot deliver safe drinking water to people in Ontario unless they include most of the recommendations from Justice O'Connor's report, more funding and qualified staff, as well.

Quality of water is not only when you in your own home or factory or place of employment open your TAP and say, "Well, the water seems clean." I think there is more than that. One important factor is worth repeating, and that is controlling the water at source. The way it is now, municipalities don't have the capacity, the quality of staff or enough staff to do that. The last scope of the government was indeed to deliver that, but I would like to again address Justice O'Connor's report, which goes further than the present bill.

I do hope that whatever action the government is willing to pursue from here on in, either pass the bill as it has been introduced or send it to committee and bring it back—I heard someone from the government side say, "We cannot accept any amendments." If you cannot accept any amendments, then I say to the Premier and the government, approve the bill as it is today. I believe there is room for improvement. If you send it to a committee, then do it quickly. But then don't come to the House and say, "Well, we will not accept any amendments." I believe there is room for that, because as much as the government, the opposition as well, and our leader Dalton McGuinty, have been saying we have to have a bill that will deliver, indeed, the best safe water to the people of Ontario.

I think my time is up. I have been negligent if I missed saying that I haven't been watching the clock but I believe I'm running close to my time. I'll let my colleague the member from St Catharines—you're not going now? OK. We're going in rotation, so I think my time is done, and I hope that my colleague the member from St Catharines will add more on Bill 175.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): Thank you, and your colleague will of course be given that opportunity in the rotation.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): I look forward to this little bit of time. I've got another time allocation motion by this government.

I'm really disappointed, you know? I would like, for once, the government to bring in one of their key pieces of legislation where they didn't have to do time allocation, that we would actually have an opportunity to go back to the way this House used to work at one time, where the parties actually had some ability to negotiate how long issues would be in the House and how much committee time we got. But since the government has changed the rules—and I would say, in fairness to the Conservatives, the Liberals introduced the concept of time allocation, we built on that and the Tories just made it a practice at this point. Quite frankly, we're going to have to go back to redoing the rules in this House, because we've gotten to the point that it's really not functional any more.

I want to start off by saying I've listened to the government House leader and Minister of the Environment get up and talk to us for a few minutes when this time allocation motion was introduced. He said he thought he was being very fair; he was offering to the opposition parties six days of hearing, and said in that comment that he thought that was more than fair given the circumstances. He said the Liberals were prepared to make a deal with him and the NDP wasn't, and that's true. I want to say, as the whip for the New Democratic Party who was part of that negotiating process, I've been at the last two sets of House leaders' meetings that we've had on this particular issue and it's true that we have not agreed to acquiesce to the government on this because we think there are a number of issues that, quite frankly, have to be dealt with. For the government to come in and say, "You're going to get six days of public hearings" on what is, probably for a lot of communities, a very serious bill when it comes to the actual impact on those communities, we think is a bit pale.

I would just say to the government House leader, I remember when I first came here in 1990 and, actually, when a bill that was a key, signature piece of the government came to the House, you had more than three days of debate in the House at second reading. In fact, you probably had, in a key, signature piece, I would argue, the better part of a couple of weeks of debate. Then, if you remember, Mr Speaker—you were a member of the same NDP government that I was—when you had a key, signature piece of legislation of a government that passed second reading, it went off to committee and it had lots of committee time.

I remember, for example, that one of the, probably, most key, signature bills that we did was the anti-scab legislation that our government had put in place. I remember travelling that around prior to it becoming a bill and then, when it became a bill, ad infinitum, because the opposition wanted to have hearings.

I remember our first budget in 1991, when the third party of the day, the Conservatives, basically demanded and held up this House for umpteen number of days because they had the ability to do that, with the way the rules were back then, and wanted to have our first budget go out for consultation through the committee process. We acquiesced to that. There was a fair process of committee time where the public were allowed to come and speak for and against parts of the first budget our government had put in place, and I think that was not a bad process. I would think, in a democracy, we should not be afraid to have public scrutiny of bills in the House.

So I just say the government across the way: I'm not saying I'm offended—I would really be going over the top if I said that—but I'm certainly disappointed that when the government House leader comes in here and says, "Oh well, I gave you the offer; you could have had more than six days of hearings, but you guys wouldn't acquiesce." Well, there's nothing to acquiesce to. The rules in this House are quite simple. The government has made it that every bill that comes through the House basically, especially government initiative bills, are time-allocated. So what am I going to negotiate when I walk into the House leaders' meeting? It's real simple. The government says, "Well, what do you want?" It doesn't matter what I want. You guys have got all the rules: three days of second reading, one day of time allocation and the bill is done. You don't even have to send it off to committee under the current rules.

I look forward to the day, probably within the next 12 months, when we will have a provincial election. I'm sure we New Democrats will increase our number of seats in this Legislature, I believe the government will lose their majority and we will be back here as a minority Parliament. I think only then will there be enough initiative and enough ability across the parties to really sit down and redo the rules so that the rules of this House reflect a little bit of common sense. I would argue, at this point, there is very little in the way of common sense in the way these rules operate.

I believe you have to have a process of fair debate in the House, and on key, signature items, the opposition should be allowed to hold up key signature pieces for a period of time. Eventually the government has to be able to get their bill through—I understand that—but there needs to be ample time for discussion at second reading. I would argue strongly that you also have to have a fair amount of time to allow a bill to go to committee because, after all, public scrutiny is what this should be all about. If the bill doesn't stand up to public scrutiny then maybe we've got something wrong and we need to get back to the drawing board.

For example, what this bill does, among other things, is allow for what they call full-cost recovery on the water systems in Ontario. In other words, currently, by and large, what you've got is municipalities across Ontario some of which charge for water and some of which don't. What they want is to be in a system where you take the full cost of producing water in the province, from the source to the tap, and pass that on directly to the consumers, to the utilizers of water.

I have a bit of a problem with that. I'm probably in a little bit of a minority on this side. I think certain things should be paid through our tax system. We all pay municipal taxes. We all pay property taxes at the municipal level, and we pay provincial and federal taxes of different types. I believe there are certain things that we should expect from our government by way of our tax system. To put more things and more pressure on having people pay user fees for things—I think it comes to the point where a user fee becomes a tax by any other name. We still end up paying our municipal taxes, we end up paying our federal and provincial taxes, and on top of that we end up paying large user fees and we fall further and further behind. What you end up having is governments that, because they don't want to raise taxes per se, increase user fees and say, "We're not the tax hikers."

I just want to say that this government have been masters at raising taxes by way of user fees over the last seven years. I look at fees for people who utilize arenas—those sports clubs that do figure skating, power skating, speed skating and hockey. I look at the utilization of swimming pools, where people are having to pay more. When it comes to using baseball diamonds and soccer fields, people are paying far more in user fees because of this government's approach, saying, "We need to take away from the tax base those services that used to be paid for by the taxpayer and transfer them over to user fees." So the government has a bit of a sleight of hand that goes on when it comes to how they pay for things.

All I would argue is that we should be a little more transparent in the process and allow a better way of making sure that every level of government takes its responsibility when it comes to safe drinking water, and that we not try to increase user fees in order to pay for the system. We should fund them properly.

I also want to point out very quickly in the time I have left that municipalities are now having a hard time trying to meet the requirements that were put on them by the provincial government as a result of Walkerton. We all know what happened: people drank the water in Walkerton and people died. The reason for that was fairly clear: the government privatized the labs and cut the Ministry of the Environment by 50%. As a result, there was no mechanism to safely test the water, and unfortunately people died.

The government put in some rules in the short term to deflect attention off them for some of the things that happened in Walkerton. They put in new rules and said, "Here are the new rules you have to meet in order to produce safe drinking water in your communities." I just want to say to the government, there's a whole bunch of communities across Ontario now that can't afford to pay for the new responsibilities you've given them. In this bill there is still no mechanism to do that except charging somebody a user fee. So, yeah, we're going to have full-cost recovery and it's going to be the users in each community who will end up paying for water. What that means at the end of day is that people living in Opatatika or Hearst or Timmins will end up paying more for utilization of water now that you've done everything you've done in the water systems. So I have a bit of a problem about where we are getting the money from.

I also want to say there is a huge issue—unfortunately there is not enough time to get into this one—in rural communities across Ontario, and that is those private hotels and motels, trailer parks and those classes of properties out there that utilize water. For example, not seasonal trailer parks but residential trailer parks or motel complexes are having to follow the new regulations, and they don't have the means to offset their costs. As a result, they're not able to afford to do the changes the government wants in the first place.

The government's response to that up until now has been not to provide money to assist them in meeting the regulations; they've just delayed by a year the time people have to comply with the new regulations under the Ministry of the Environment. As a result, they've pushed back the date until June 2003 for trailer parks and others to comply with the new water regulations.

I'm just saying it's basically a shift of hands. They're trying to say, "Let's push this off until after the next election. In that way, we're not going to have to worry about it going into the next election." Well, the chickens are going to come home to roost at one point, and it's going to be far too difficult, I will argue, for those types of water utilizers to pay for the system.

Je pense que ce qui est important est de réaliser, comme j'ai dit, que oui, c'est important qu'on ait un système qui est fiable quand ça vient à la production et à la transmission d'eau pour les utilisateurs à travers l'Ontario. Je pense qu'il n'y a personne à l'Assemblée, soit Conservateur ou dans l'opposition, qui est contre le principe de s'assurer que l'eau a besoin d'être sécurisée et que les utilisateurs ont l'assurance nécessaire que l'eau que l'on va utiliser est potable et saine.

Le problème, comme j'ai dit plus tôt, est que le gouvernement a déjà créé un problème. Le gouvernement, à cause de ses actions qui ont résulté en Walkerton, a mis en place des réglementations. Jusqu'à date, beaucoup de municipalités à travers la province ne sont pas capables de rencontrer les obligations de ces réglementations. Je regarde justement à travers mon comté les communautés de Hearst, Kapuskasing, Opatatika et autres qui ont beaucoup de difficultés à rencontrer ces réglementations parce que ça veut dire qu'ils ont besoin de payer plus d'argent. Au lieu de prendre la position que je pense qu'il doit prendre, c'est-à-dire, « On va payer d'une manière adéquate pour les résultats de nos réglementations, » le gouvernement répond en disant, « On va transmettre les frais d'utilisation aux consommateurs pour être capable de s'assurer que c'est bien financé. »

À la fin de la journée, tout ce que le consommateur sait est qu'il va payer plus. Si le gouvernement essaie de se cacher à l'arrière de, « On est le gouvernement qui a mis en place beaucoup de réductions d'impôts, » je dirais, « Oui, on a eu des réductions d'impôts d'une poche, mais on est en train de les payer dans les frais d'utilisation de l'autre. » À la fin de la journée, pour le consommateur ou la personne qui paie les taxes, c'est le même fardeau qu'on leur demande, et je dirais même que le fardeau est plus haut.

Notre critique va avoir beaucoup de chances de parler en plus de détail de ce projet de loi. Je regarde avec certitude que les commentaires que M^{me} Churley va faire seront bien raisonnés et bien pensés. Je pense que ce qui est clair est qu'elle a démontré dans tout ce débat que, quand il vient à quelqu'un pour être clair sur les questions de l'environnement et de l'eau, Marilyn Churley, notre députée néo-démocrate, est certainement l'avocate qui était, franchement, la plus claire dans tout ce débat. Je regarde vers elle puis je regarde aussi vers M. Prue pour faire une couple de commentaires plus tard.

Avec ça, j'aimerais vous remercier. Je sais que d'autres membres de l'Assemblée voudraient parler sur cette motion.

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): I'm particularly pleased to rise this afternoon to speak to Bill 195, the Safe Drinking Water Act, because I think it's a clear demonstration of how committed the Ernie Eves government is in sparing absolutely no effort to ensure that Ontario residents have access to clean, safe drinking water.

Not only that, I think it's a clear demonstration of the fact that we intend to ensure the toughest and best drinking water standards in the world. That's important. I maintain, for example, that in Toronto—and I see my colleague across the way. He and I used to sit on the same municipal council right here in the great city of Toronto. Actually, we both sat on the transportation committee together. We were equally committed to ensuring that Toronto lead the world in providing the absolutely safest, cleanest drinking water. I think that Bill 195 is a reaffirmation—Mr Prue, I don't believe we actually sat on the same Metro council at the same time, although it's interesting that there are representatives from the Liberal, New Democratic and Conservative parties who sat on the same municipal council that was—I have absolutely no question as to the commitment on their part—equal, as on our part, with respect to ensuring the absolutely toughest, best standards in the world.

I met with my municipal counterpart on Friday. I like to meet with my school board and council counterparts from my riding just to share the issues of the day. I want to assure you, Mr Speaker, that this government is absolutely committed to listening to those concerns and ensuring that we do enact the wishes of the people. In terms of the best safety standards for our drinking water, I'm absolutely committed, and there isn't a person in this chamber or in council chambers across this province who isn't absolutely committed, to ensuring that we have the best water standards in the world.

I think it's important that we make sure those water standards continue to be sustainable into the future. That's why I'm particularly pleased to take part in this debate on the Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act, because this legislation continues to the decisive action that we've taken since the summer of 2000 to ensure safe, clean drinking water.

I would sure like a refill of this very good drinking water that's in front of me, please.

We believe in Commissioner O'Connor's report of the Walkerton Inquiry, and because of that we have committed to implementing all of the 121 recommendations that he made. We agree with him that sustainable municipal water and sewer financing is absolutely essential. It's good planning that promotes water conservation and indeed will help to provide clean, safe water, not just for my constituents in Scarborough Centre but for all the people of Ontario. That's why we're doing this. We need to have those province-wide standards, not just in providing safe drinking water—certainly we did it with the Ontario curriculum. I think it is incumbent upon this government to ensure that we continue to sustain that into the future.

I would like to turn briefly to the details of the proposed bill. If the bill is passed, the Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act would require all owners of these systems to undertake a full-cost accounting of their water and sewer systems. A detailed analysis would include all operating and capital costs, all sources of revenue and the investment required to maintain and expand their systems.

Bill 175 would also require system owners to develop comprehensive asset management reports and then to provide a plan for implementing full-cost recovery.

If passed, the government would implement this bill in two stages. The first step is aimed at assessing the full cost of water and sewage services in each municipality. The second would involve bringing full-cost recovery forward in a way that makes sense for municipalities. I know my colleagues across the way would agree with that.

Commissioner O'Connor said, "In my opinion, if passed into law the act will address many of the important issues concerning the financing of water systems. The requirements for a full-cost report and cost-recovery plan, as generally expressed in the proposed act, are in my view appropriate." He also strongly supported the implementation of asset management and full-cost-recovery plans in relation to drinking water treatment and distribution systems.

I know this bill isn't new to the members of the Legislature, since it was first introduced in December 2001 by the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Now the Ministry of the Environment is bringing forward this bill in keeping with the Premier's announcement in August that he will take full responsibility for leading Ontario's comprehensive strategy.

There's a good reason for tabling this act at this time. In the months since the previous bill was tabled, the Walkerton inquiry has concluded. Commissioner O'Connor made far-reaching recommendations, as members of this House well know, and now the government wants to implement all of them; and I think that's very important to stress.

We also understand and appreciate that consultation is essential if we want to make this happen. The government has already conducted consultations about the proposed Safe Drinking Water Act and is currently doing so with respect to the regulations for the Nutrient Management Act.

I want to reiterate that this government will continue to encourage public and stakeholder involvement.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): The unfortunate fact of life in this Legislature these days is that most of us end up, particularly in the afternoon sessions, speaking on what are called time allocation motions. They are motions which are designed to choke off debate, to end debate, on a particular piece of legislation that would be before us. This government, in an unprecedented way, has utilized the avenue of the time allocation motion to control the agenda of this House.

There is a discussion going on, probably not widespread in terms of the general population but amongst those who follow the democratic, parliamentary and legislative processes at the federal and provincial levels, about the role and responsibility of individual members.

It seems to me that every time we have a time allocation motion forced on this House by a majority government and rule changes made which diminish the role of individual members, and in particular the members of the opposition, who are the watchdogs on behalf of the people, the legislative body in which we happen to be involved becomes less relevant to the general population.

So there is a discussion out there about the relevancy of elected bodies, the power of the individuals within those bodies, the power of the executive, that being the cabinet, and of course the non-elected people in the Premier's office and the minister's office, the people I refer to as the whiz kids. These are political people. They're not elected. They're not members of the public and permanent civil service. They seem to have an undue amount of influence on what goes on in government business in this province and indeed, if I may say so, in many other jurisdictions.

The debate is on at the federal level about this at this time. There has been a lot of publicity surrounding it. Some of the same people who are very critical of what happens in the House of Commons have been silent—notable by their silence, in fact—on what's happening in the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

I recall a—I'll refer to it as an impassioned speech that I made, I think back in 1993, when the Honourable Dave Cooke, who was then the government House leader for the New Democratic Party, brought in what I referred to as draconian new rule changes that would be designed to favour the government in having its legislation pushed through the House in what the government would consider to be a timely fashion. Built upon this were two changes made by the Harris government to the rules of this House, which again diminished the role of individual members and essentially took away any of the so-called bargaining chips the opposition would have to deal with legislation.

My good friend who sits across from me, the Honourable Norm Sterling, Minister of Transportation, who I thought in opposition made a compelling case against those kinds of rule changes—I'm sure that in his heart of hearts, as he sits in the House this afternoon, he still harbours those views, though he might be in the minority among those who are sitting on the government side. Mr Sterling, on a number of issues, would be considerably to the right of many of us on this side. But I want to say of him that on issues such as information and privacy and on many legislative issues that relate to the rules of this House and indeed on a couple of environmental issues, I believe he happens to be a progressive person. I don't say that only when he's in the House; I think that is the case. It's nice to see that from a person whom many in the opposition would like to paint as an unrepentant right-wing Conservative. I know differently, from observing him on certain issues such as the Niagara Escarpment Commission.

I love time allocation motions, as I'm sure you do as Speaker, because it allows the flexibility of debate that we like to see in this House. While I'm on the issue of the Niagara Escarpment Commission, which affects your riding as well as my riding, Mr Speaker, I hope that the Honourable Norm Sterling, if I may use his name, the Minister of Transportation, will try to exercise within the cabinet his considerable authority in dealing with matters related to the Niagara Escarpment Commission. He made a couple of what I thought were good decisions when he was the minister who had responsibility in that regard, and I said so publicly at the time. It's not usual for the opposition to say that, because we know we'll read it in some literature somewhere, or it will be read back to us in the House. Also we know that the government has enough people to congratulate themselves, and all government members are born with a third hand to pat themselves on the back. So we know that can happen.

But I do want to say of the minister, first of all, that I think he recognized the importance of appointing to the Niagara Escarpment Commission people who are there to protect the plan, as opposed to those who are there to ignore the plan for the preservation of the escarpment lands. I remember a subdivision which he turned down that he could easily have approved, as a member of the cabinet. The cabinet turned that down, I think with a good deal of input from the minister—I'm not at the cabinet meetings, obviously. But again, he was a guardian of that particular unique piece of land, declared by UNESCO as being a world biosphere. I encourage him to continue his efforts in that regard. I did mention him earlier because I remember some of the impassioned speeches he made in favour of having rules in the House which would allow the opposition to at least slow down for further consideration the legislative agenda of the government.

I want to say that I wish—as you do, because you were kind enough, Mr Speaker, the other day to bring a resolution before the House that I thought was timely—that instead of dealing with a time allocation motion, we were dealing with the issue of hydro bills. Again today you rose in the House to bring specific instances to the attention of the Minister of Energy, instances where people are really feeling the impact of huge increases in their hydro bills. That's something very basic, and I will tie that into the bill which is being time-allocated today.

One of the concerns I have is that if we place all of the onus on the water rate itself to provide everything that has to do with the provision of clean water and sewer projects and so on, we may find that people at the bottom rung in terms of economic wherewithal—people who are on fixed incomes, people who unfortunately are on social assistance, people who are working but are low-income people—find it very difficult when they see their insurance bills going up, their hydro bills skyrocketing, their natural gas bills increasing. When they go to the pump to get gasoline for their car, that cost has gone up. Their municipal taxes may have gone up, and user fees at the local level. I hope there is sufficient funding from the partner called the provincial government to alleviate part of that hardship on those individuals in those municipalities, and I hope that elected municipal representatives take that into consideration.

But you and I know that if you asked this afternoon, “Are we getting most of our calls on full-cost accounting of water in this province?” we'd have to say no. I'd say that easily the largest number of calls coming from the most impassioned people are about their hydro bills. I see members of the government now have indicated their concern about the hydro bills. They're feeling a lot of the heat as well. I suspect the government is scrambling now to do something to get the pressure off in this regard. Hopefully your resolution had some impact, and the questions that are directed to the government from both of the opposition parties.

I, for the life of me, cannot see why this government got itself into the jam of having GST charged on the interest on the debt, on the debt charges. All you had to say was “It's a tax.” I know they hate saying that, but it is a tax, in effect, which pays the debt. If you declared it that, you wouldn't have the GST on it. For the life of me, I don't know why this government wouldn't have done that and wouldn't do it now.

There are some members who may be familiar with what I call the Beck 3 project in Niagara Falls. We have Beck 1 and Beck 2. What is that? That's a huge generating station along the Niagara River in the city of Niagara Falls and it produces hydroelectric power. That is power which has no impact on the air at all—it is benign environmentally in terms of the air—and minimal impact on the waterways. There is a plan sitting and waiting to be implemented.

I was in Niagara Falls with Dalton McGuinty, the leader of the Liberal Party, and both of us at that time were calling for the implementation of what we would call the Beck 3 project, another generating capacity for Niagara Falls which would, first, produce a lot of power for the grid, and that's needed at this time; second, would do so in a relatively environmentally benign manner; and third, would create good jobs in the area while that construction was taking place.

You may ask, doesn't it have to go through an environmental assessment? In fact, my understanding is that the environmental assessment has been completed, that the project was ready to go in 1998 and that the government made a decision not to do so. I would hope we would have that announcement made in the House. I think that would do two things, as I say: first, help to improve the air quality in this province and, second, provide more capacity for the grid system in the province.

I would have hoped that this afternoon, instead of dealing with the issue of a time allocation motion, we could deal with what you would, again, perceive in your riding and I would in mine, and that is the problem of the doctor shortage, where we have, particularly in the category of general practitioners or family doctors—

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: The member for Kitchener says, “Be patient.” I want to say to him that I saw a program on the issue on his local station, which I don't know if he saw. I thought it was very well done. I saw half an hour of it. I didn't hear Mr Wettlaufer's name mentioned at the time, but I saw what I thought was a good group of people, a panel and an audience, talking about a very timely issue. The people of St Catharines and Niagara would say, “Wouldn't it be nice, instead of dealing with a time allocation motion this afternoon, if you were talking about ways to bring more doctors into our underserved areas.”

There are a few options, and the member would probably have a consensus with me on these. One is that we have to get—

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: Of course, we're on a time allocation motion. We're talking about a time allocation motion. The former Speaker is trying to intimidate the present Speaker, as he always does; to no avail, I can see, in this particular case. Engaging as I am in a conversation through the Speaker with my friend from Kitchener, one of the things we obviously have to do is increase the number of spaces in the medical schools in the province.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: We certainly have to do that. The deputy leader of the Liberal Party says Dalton McGuinty has a very detailed plan in this regard, and I agree with her.

However, there's a second one I want to talk about that people have mentioned, and that is foreign-trained doctors who are in our country and who have—

Hon Mr Stockwell: Who drink water.

Mr Bradley: The minister says, “Who drink water.” I'll get to him in a minute. I have a shot to take at him a little later, after I was complimenting the previous minister. Some of those individuals would be able to practise if it were made—not easier but if there was a faster and more comprehensive evaluation of them to allow them to practise.

The third thing is, and the member for Kitchener would agree with me on this, there's another group too many people have forgotten about. That's the number of young Canadians who have gone abroad to medical schools and are now practising in the United States who would love to come back to our communities but don't have a chance to do so. Even in Etobicoke Centre there may be individuals of that kind.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: I know he does. He is eager to talk about what—I just wish he was as eager to provide the 411 pages of secret material that he is hiding in the Ministry of the Environment on the Kyoto accord.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: He says it may have arrived today. I heard a question in the House, as you did, Mr Speaker, a lob-ball question. I saw the minister go over to Garfield Dunlop and say, "You've got to ask this question." Up gets Garfield and asks the question, and the minister is all smiles about it and he's saying the federal government won't provide this information for us. I think it was—correct me if I'm wrong; I know you will—back in March that I first made a request for all the information available within this government, all the studies you've done on the potential implementation of the Kyoto accord, and you've refused to provide that information. My assistant even had to pay something like $350 out of his own pocket to get this information. He wouldn't have been so annoyed with that if indeed he had received it right away. But I think in a gesture of benevolence the Minister of the Environment should reimburse my staff member for having to pay all of that money for that information.

Hon Mr Stockwell: You got it today.

Mr Bradley: He tells me I got it today, at long last. I think it was the threat of the Information and Privacy Commissioner, who said, "Either you produce it now or the minister must resign," or words to that effect. But he has been hiding that information for all this time—and chortling.

I remember when my good friend Norm Sterling was the Minister of the Environment. He may not have always been a person who wanted to defend every environmental part of the government policy, but he was prepared to do so because he was the Minister of the Environment. He knew that the Treasurer, who is the Minister of Finance, the Minister of Economic Development and the Minister of Energy would take the non-environment side, the anti-environment side, but he knew that as Minister of the Environment he had to stand up for the environment. Today, my very good friend the former Speaker, the member for Etobicoke Centre, loves to be up there fighting the government of Canada, fighting against the environment. Who on that side speaks for the environment? I would say, behind closed doors, likely the former Minister of the Environment, now the Minister of Transportation. But certainly it is very discouraging to see the present Minister of the Environment, who is a very articulate and bright person in terms of his ability to handle questions and to deal with the news media—what an asset he could be to the environment if he were out in the hallway fighting for the environment instead of against the environment. All this talent is being wasted in this particular case.

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): Jim, can you imagine him against Kyoto?

Mr Bradley: Exactly. I can't imagine that. And I know, because they look to the future, that his wonderful wife and children would be on the side of the environment. I know them well. They are good kids, and his wife is a very, very nice person. I remember that when he was Speaker they would come down the hallway and play ball hockey in the hallway and so on. But I want to say to the minister: that's the role and responsibility of the minister. He's a very talented person. I would love nothing better than to see this individual, my good friend Chris Stockwell, fighting for the environment instead of against the environment.

However, let me go on to some other issues. You'll be interested to know—this is a time allocation motion—that Maude Barlow is coming to town in St Catharines. This is on November 13 at 7 o'clock at the Sir Winston Churchill Secondary School auditorium. What is she going to talk about? Something near and dear to your heart and mine, and that is privatization of health care. She is an expert in this, as she is on water, and she certainly is cautious about any applause to this government for its water policies, although I will have some Toronto water at the present time. I know the pages will want to get that for me at the quickest opportunity. Thank you.

What else shall we look at here? Oh, yes, what it's going to take to implement this policy, both bills. There are some virtuous parts of both this bill and Bill 195. I want to say that. I'm not completely negative about them. I think there are some provisions in this legislation that we're time-allocating this afternoon and in Bill 195, which is another piece of legislation dealing with water, that merit support and approval. There's much that is missing. It's not as comprehensive as we'd like it to be. There are a lot of question marks out there about the dollars and cents, particularly for municipalities that are unable to afford the provisions of these bills, and for lower-income people, who would have a tough time meeting the costs.

I also wish that this afternoon we were talking about the disruption this government has caused to education in our part, the Hamilton-Niagara area, and across the province, because that would be worthy of a lot of discussion in this House. People are looking for some stability, some peace. They want the teachers to be able to teach instead of constantly being harassed by this government. They want to be partners in education, and yet we see policies implemented by this government and just the general attitude toward members of the teaching profession which discourage them and lower morale within that group of people.

Hospital restructuring has been somewhat of a disaster. We now have a former Minister of Health in the Conservative government of Bill Davis, Dennis Timbrell, in our area looking at the system. I think he's got the status now of investigator. One of my recommendations would be that there be a very significant infusion of provincial funding in the area to assist us in meeting the needs of the people of Niagara, because we have in our area probably the oldest population, on a per capita basis, in Ontario.

I want to look at, because I have to mention this with the minister here, the massive and damaging cuts to the Ministry of the Environment where—well, that was the Honourable Ernie Eves, as Minister of Finance. I know that as minister, the Honourable Norm Sterling was fighting against those cuts behind closed doors and that the Minister of Finance, the Honourable Ernie Eves, was the one with the hatchet out, cutting fully one third of the staff of the Ministry of the Environment and 50% of the operating budget. An interesting fact that a lot of people don't know: the operating budget of the Ministry of the Environment today is lower than it was back in 1976. So we are talking a long time ago. We are talking 26 years ago. The budget of the Ministry of the Environment was higher than it is today. So there is going to have to be a massive investment, not only in the Ministry of the Environment, but a restoration of the staff and funding to the Ministry of Natural Resources, which of course had a lot to do with water protection in this province, and to the conservation authorities.

Neither this bill nor the so-called Safe Drinking Water Act deals with the sources of contamination. The Minister of Natural Resources is listening carefully—I want to give him his credit—because he knows that his ministry has received the hatchet and so much has been taken away from it. I want to help him out, to have restored to his ministry some of the staff and clout and the financial resources he needs to his job properly. He'll want to work as a partner with the conservation authorities, who are only too eager to access the funding that the provincial government can provide for the purposes of defending our raw water supply from contaminants that would come into it. That is clearly missing from all this legislation.

I want to say as well to the minister—he will extol the virtues of the Nutrient Management Act, a management act which allows raw sewage from what we would call outhouses to be spread on farmland at this time for five years. If it were treated sewage, one would say that may have some merit. In days gone by, when there was a staff available to police this, they couldn't get away with some of the things that are happening today. But without the staff there, it's wink, wink, nod, nod and spray all over the province of Ontario. I want to say that the regulations surrounding this act are not in effect yet. They talk about it, but it's really not in effect, not having its major effect. I don't know who the minister is making reference to, but there we are.

What can the minister do? Where can he find some of this money to do this? Well, he can forgo the corporate tax cut to the friends of the Conservative government. A $2.2-billion corporate tax cut is to be implemented in this province. There's also a tax credit to go to private schools in this province. With that kind of funding available, there's a lot of reallocation of funds that could be brought about to assist the Ministry of the Environment, the Ministry of Natural Resources and our conservation authorities.

I want to say as well that when we look at general health care in the province we look at medical officers of health. It was pointed out many times, including by Dr Richard Schabas, the former esteemed and highly regarded chief medical officer of health in Ontario, who said that Mike Harris's government turned its back on the people of the province of Ontario and public health in Ontario—he noted that we have to have all of those positions of medical officer of health filled in the province. I think that the minister is now talking about doing so.

I want to say as well that there is a discussion about implementing every recommendation of the O'Connor report. Well, if they are going to do so, there is going to be a significant amount of money that is going to be required to do that. I suspect it's going to be a wink and a nod to many of those recommendations and not really full implementation. The minister will check it off, but if those who have the time and wherewithal to do so check carefully, they will note, in fact, that those provisions have not been implemented.

I say that there is a lot that can be done in the province of Ontario. I look at this bill, and one of the parts I worry about—it obviously doesn't worry some on the government side—is the spectre of privatization of water systems. You have experienced that in Hamilton in an unfortunate circumstance, I think most people would say. Surely one basic thing can be said: that municipalities or some public sector entity should own the water systems in this province. That's a basic. I have a personal bias in favour of owning and operating by municipalities and by OCWA, which is a quasi-government agency. That's the clean water agency. But the least I can say from this government is, I would hope they would include in this bill eventually a provision that all water systems must be publicly owned, at the very least. I think that would be important.

As I say, there are a lot of recommendations in the O'Connor report that will require some scrutiny. I know the minister has been reluctant to move forward on water source protection. He said he's taking a bold new step: he's going to set up a committee. Well, he's the only one who thought it was a bold new step, if he thinks setting up a committee is that. I lament the fact that the government is not moving more quickly, more comprehensively. I do want to say, because I'm a very fair person, that some of the provisions, both in this bill and in the so-called Safe Drinking Water Act, are worthy of support and are to be recommended to the public of Ontario, and I'd be happy to do that. I simply believe that what we're seeing so far does not meet all of the requirements we'd like to see. We know that the only reason we're seeing this kind of legislation coming forward today is because of the tragedy of Walkerton, where seven people died from drinking the water and well over a thousand people were seriously ill, some of them with complications which will last for many years, or perhaps for a lifetime. That in itself is very sad.

What a lot of people don't realize is that there was an outbreak of cryptosporidium not too far away from there previous to that, where many people became ill. You'll remember that over a hundred people in Milwaukee, those with compromised systems of protection against disease, immune systems, died, and thousands became ill because of that. We found about 20 or 30 municipalities—and these are fairly sizeable municipalities—that didn't have proper treatment systems for the water. All they did was throw some chlorine at it; there was not the full treatment system that was necessary to keep out things such as cryptosporidium.

I notice that the Minister of the Environment is nodding, obviously either in agreement or off to sleep, one of the two, but I'm sure in agreement on some of the things I have said.

The member for Scarborough talked about people in the municipal field. I think the signal is clearly out there; some moved years ago to ensure that they had adequate water systems. But the minister would know and others in this House would know that these systems require constant upgrading. If you were to check the pipes underground in many municipalities, you would find a lot of them corroded, some of them even with holes, and I think that's—

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: This is where I say, because you couldn't see them—the member for Etobicoke Centre will remember when he was on municipal council, it wasn't always attractive to spend money on those things because you couldn't see them. I think one of the benefits of legislation of this kind is that it will focus attention on those needs. I remember at one time in the late 1980s we had a program called LifeLines, where the government paid a percentage of the cost of replacing the old systems, the old pipes underground. We are obviously going to have to have those upgraded for a long period of time.

I'm glad the Minister of the Environment was able to make it in for at least a portion of the remarks that have been made by the opposition, and I look forward to his implementing all of the suggestions that we have made this afternoon.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): It is indeed a privilege to stand here today to debate this motion. I wish it was not closure that I was talking about. It seems that although I've been here some 14 months, I never had the opportunity to see this Legislature at a time when they did not impose closure literally on every bill. I have become quite used to at least making a speech on why you shouldn't be doing it.

Today I hope to talk more about the bill than the actual closure process, and before I begin, I'd like to talk a little bit about Marilyn Churley. I think very much credit should be given to her, to her Safe Drinking Water Act and the great work she has done around the issues of water, groundwater and safety for all Ontarians in being realistic and being assured that when they lift a glass such as this, they can put it to their lips and drink it and will not suffer the consequences of doing so. I will just prove I have great faith in this.

In my time on Metro council, and this has been alluded to by some of the previous speakers, we prided ourselves on how safe the water was for the 2.4 million people of Toronto and for all of those municipalities around Toronto, particularly York, the Markham area and Mississauga, which derived their water from Metropolitan Toronto. In fact, the water is absolutely pure. In tests that have been done on Toronto water versus the water one might find in a bottle that you pay a thousand times more for than what you would for the water coming out of a tap, you will find that in almost every case, the Toronto water is superior. I think we take that a little for granted in the city of Toronto, but it is also a source of huge municipal pride.

If you go to a Toronto council meeting today, at the start of that meeting there will be the singing of O Canada, and there is a screen presentation shown at the same time that O Canada is sung by the members present. In that screen presentation, one of the proudest moments is when a small child, obviously about three or four years of age, takes a glass, runs up to the tap and pours himself a glass of water totally knowing that water is safe. That is something the people of the city of Toronto and I suppose all of Ontario have come to expect.

This bill before us today has many good parts, but there are two parts that worry me. There are two parts that worry me as a former Metropolitan Toronto councillor and as a former councillor with the megacity of Toronto. The first part is that it allows the minister, at his discretion, to impose privatization on any municipality; and in line with that, it allows the minister the authority to privatize or change the business practices of any municipality. That's the first one. The second one is that it allows full-cost recovery for the water, which is a good thing, but does not include source protection, which I think is an omission of some great concern. So those are the two concepts of the bill that I believe need to be strengthened and/or altered completely.

In terms of privatization, we now live in a whole complex area of the economy of North America that is governed by NAFTA, the GATT rules, free trade, and we have to look at the consequences of privatization of our water resources in this province and the municipal water resources.

When it comes to the actual sale and export of water, I do not believe that this bill contains adequate safeguards.

It will not allow, for instance, for public accountability into the sales of water; it will not allow for the sales themselves. Once it has been privatized, people can sell enormous amounts of water south of the border or to any other jurisdiction that wants to buy it; not just water which is put into bottles and sold at $1 a crack, as one can buy in the supermarket, but water that is sent by tankers, as Newfoundland has attempted to do for the United States, or whole water systems that might be diverted, as there was talk several years ago of diverting part of the Great Lakes to feed the Mississippi when that river system was experiencing a drought.

We need to make sure that our water and our resources, which are so important to the public and people of Canada, are never controlled by a private corporation or especially by private corporations or governments that are not Canadian.

Under this bill, a private corporation will have the ability to design, approve and implement the full-cost recovery set out in the bill. I would suggest that this may in fact be problematic and may run counter to what Justice O'Connor was trying to do.

I would like to briefly quote from Mr Justice O'Connor's second report on the Walkerton inquiry, The Role of Municipal Governments, pages 312 and 313, in which he writes:

"Ideally, water rates will rise as necessary to generate adequate resources for drinking water safety while remaining within reasonable boundaries of affordability. This should be possible in the large majority of municipalities.

"That said, the financing of water systems does not occur in isolation of other pressures on municipal budgets. In light of recent restructuring in the municipal sector, especially the transfer of additional open-ended social service costs (eg, welfare) to municipalities in 1998, there is currently some uncertainty about the ability of municipalities to finance all of the programs they are responsible for, including water services. Municipalities may be reducing spending (including borrowing) to plan for potential increases in social service costs. Although I consider it beyond my mandate to make a recommendation in this area, I encourage the province to publicly review the program responsibilities and fiscal capability of municipalities in light of recent restructuring to ensure that the financial pressures on municipalities do not crowd out the adequate financing of water systems.

"I also recognize, however, that rising rates may constitute a significant burden for low-income families and individuals. I do not see it as being within my mandate to comment on the means by which this problem might be addressed. There are a variety of possible approaches. Suffice it to say that, since water is an essential need, it would be unacceptable for those who are unable to pay for safe water to go without. The provincial and municipal governments should ensure that this does not occur by whatever means they consider appropriate."

If we go into that whole flow of privatization, if this government does with water what it has purported to do with electricity, then I would suggest there are very grave consequences for our poor, for consumers, for our government and for our control of one of the most essential resources of our province and our country.

Around the world where privatization has taken effect, we can see there have often been more problems than solutions. Just to give you a few—some Canadian and some worldwide—I go no further than our sister city of Hamilton. One can go there and see that they have gone through a succession of private owners or private companies that have managed the water system. That system is now in the hands of a private company called RWE, but there have been many, as you well know.

What we have seen in Hamilton is a whole history of sewage spills, dumping of toxic wastes, poor treatment of waste water and a municipality struggling to get back control of its vital water supplies. We have seen that the private corporations, far from being the answer to the problems facing that city, have actually exacerbated the very problems they were hired to solve.

We go then to the town of Goderich, not too far from here, and we see that they have recently hired a firm, Vivendi of France, to try to treat the water, to get a handle on the municipal costs in that town. Vivendi is a very large corporation, known worldwide. Just so people might understand what they have done or what they have not done in the past number of years, this firm that has been hired by the good people of Goderich is being investigated for six cases of corruption in France and is under French judicial review, mostly for attempting to form cartels to hike up the price of water, to stop municipalities from questioning what they were doing and to ensure that they would get rich while people would have a very difficult time getting water that was affordable and, in many cases, decent. This all occurred between 1989 and 1996.

But this company, Vivendi, went even further. They had a policy where they charged an extra 2% for water in order to take that money and that profit and disburse it among political parties. They did that to make sure that the message they were sending out was not challenged by any of the political parties. That, too, is being investigated. I guess it's all part of being a privatized company in that country and I'm afraid might all too readily become a priority of any privatized company in this one.

From that same company, we also see the problem they had in Tréguex, France, which in a three-year period, between 1990 and 1993, served the poor people of that town some 476 days of water not fit for human consumption. So for 476 days out of some 1,000 days, they failed in their duty. As I said, a very large French corporation that made huge amounts of money is now being investigated.

We go to Sydney, Australia, and we see what happened there. They hired a company called Suez-Lyonnaise des Eaux. That city was quite famous a few years ago for having cryptosporidium in the water for about a month before that company even told anyone they had found it in large concentrations. People were starting to get sick before any medical doctors or medical officers of health or the equivalent that we have here in Ontario were even notified. They did that because it was going to hurt the bottom line.

In Britain, we see what happened after Margaret Thatcher privatized the water. We can see that the water quality in that country has not gone up, but down. We can see that the lower-income people are often cut off water, much as some Ontarians today are being cut off electricity, because they cannot afford it. We see that the infrastructure that was once the hallmark of the British water system, as it was being built and replaced, is no longer being replaced. We can see that there is far less focus on the environment and the environmental concerns around water in Britain than there was before when it was publicly owned.

There are some problems with this bill. I think the major problems are that it does not give the municipalities sufficient control and gives too much ministerial prerogative, but the greatest problem of all is that of potential privatization. The good people of Toronto will be wrestling with this this very month as we debate this in the House and as there are public meetings held, starting on November 20. That coincides almost to the day with the city of Toronto's questioning about what they're going to do with their water sources; whether they're going to contract them out, in line with what this bill allows; whether they're going to have an arm's-length agency and get the politicians off the hook; and whether they are going to be able to raise the necessary funds.

In fact, the public needs to be aware of that. This is far too important an issue to simply be decided in this chamber and this chamber alone. It is an issue that literally affects every single person and the health of every citizen of Ontario. We need to speak out. We need to say that the systems that have worked in this province for 200 years, which provide safe, clean, pure drinking water, need to be preserved. There is nothing wrong with the system. It is not broken. If the pipes are old, then the pipes will need to be replaced. If the water sources cannot be totally protected the way they are, then moves will have to be made to protect them. But we cannot allow this to fall into private hands and suffer the same consequences as happened in Hamilton, France, Germany, Britain, Australia and in every other place that has tinkered with this, trying to save money. There is no sense in saving money when public health is at risk.

The whole factor of what took place in Walkerton has brought us here today. Let us never forget that the water that is safest is that which is controlled by municipal governments directly responsible to the people who live there.

With that, I'm going to stop because I would like to give maximum time to my colleague Marilyn Churley to deal with this. She is, after all, probably the expert in this House.

Mr Joseph Spina (Brampton Centre): Rather than getting into the immediate comments I have before me, I just want to respond for a moment to the member for Beaches-East York and also to the member for Timmins-James Bay, both respectable, honourable colleagues.

The member for Beaches-East York mentioned that the biggest problem their caucus has with this bill is privatization. I would remind the member for Beaches-East York, who was not around in the days that you were an honourable minister of the government, Speaker, that the NDP government of the day in fact were the ones that permitted municipalities to use private sector laboratories instead of government labs, and they did it with just guidelines. When they downloaded that to the municipalities and gave them the flexibility to use private sector labs, they did it with just guidelines—no regulations, no legislation, just guidelines.

However, to their credit, they did indicate that the individuals responsible for the safety of the water system, for the reporting structure and the testing, had to be qualified individuals—an admirable goal, absolutely—and they should be. However, they grandfathered the existing individuals. Hence, when the people from Walkerton, particularly the Koebel brothers, were allowed to remain in their positions, notwithstanding the other problems they had—and that was clearly brought out in the Walkerton inquiry—the reality was that Stan Koebel was unqualified to do the job for which he was responsible.

How did the system work? The system was that the people in charge of the water system do the testing and file a report. The report goes to the medical officer of health and to Ministry of the Environment inspectors. Did the system work? The member for Beaches-East York said it very well. He said, if I may paraphrase him, "The system worked well for 200 years and the problem is not with the system." Perhaps it wasn't, but the reality is that it was people within the system who made it go awry, who caused the deaths that were there. Even with the guidelines the NDP government put in place at the time which allowed municipalities to use private sector labs, it worked when the individuals acted in a responsible, qualified, trained manner.

Do we need proof of this? Of course. There were many other municipalities in this province that from time to time encountered water-table problems. I'll give you an example that I experienced, as many of us did if we travelled at any time during 1997 or 1998. If you went to Thunder Bay, landed at Thunder Bay airport and went into the washroom, there was a sticker in the washroom that said, "It's non-potable water. Don't drink the water." If you stayed at the Valhalla Inn or one of the other hotels near the airport, on the old Fort William side of the city, they supplied bottled water for drinking, for brushing your teeth and so forth.

Non-potable water: why did this happen? Well, you know why. I remember very distinctly this case. I was at an awards banquet for northern Ontario businesses in North Bay, and the mayor of Thunder Bay at the time, before Mayor Boshcoff, was sitting at the same table I was. Three times he was interrupted by a cellphone call which was clearly a very urgent situation. Who was he on the phone with? Well, I can tell you in retrospect, afterwards obviously speaking with the mayor, he was speaking with the medical officer of health for Thunder Bay district. His last comment on his last call was this: "If that's the case, shut 'er down."

They shut down the water system in Fort William. Why? When Fort William and Port Arthur amalgamated, just to give you a little historical perspective, Port Arthur was on lake water and had a fully treated sewage system, water treatment system; Fort William did not. They were on well water. As with well water in many environments, of course, you run the risk of runoff and so forth, which is part of what happened in Thunder Bay; you run the risk of elements getting into the well system that can contaminate it. But they were bright enough, smart enough, trained enough and qualified enough to (a) detect it early and (b) report it accurately to the medical officer of health. Therefore they nipped it in the bud, as it were. They shut the water system down and issued a boil-water warning. For the nine or 10 months that we were on committee, I think, at one point we travelled through there, and we were not permitted or able to consume the water, because the boil-water warning was in effect and the Fort William side of town had to be upgraded and brought into the proper and complete system for the city.

So there's an example of where the system worked, and even with the guidelines it was the people portion of the system that made it work. Conversely, in Walkerton it was the people portion of the system that allowed it to fail.

Safe drinking water: this Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act is a very important bill. One of the elements that is critical of today's debate is that it's another time allocation motion. The honourable member for St Catharines is probably one of our biggest critics when it comes to time allocation motions. Well, if anybody in this House fundamentally supports the context, the objectives and the value of this bill in meeting the recommendations of Justice O'Connor on the report from the inquiry, then don't drag it out with debate. Let's get on with it. Let's get the bill passed here and sent to committee for the five or six days that the House leaders have agreed it is to be at committee for public hearings and, in addition to that, of course, clause-by-clause and amendments. Let's get on with it. If we did that, we wouldn't have to resort to another time allocation motion.

This bill continues the decisive action we have taken since 2000. It demonstrates that this government is sparing no effort to give Ontarians access to clean, safe drinking water. The Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act makes for good planning, promotes water conservation and is an integral part of this government's clean water strategy.

I commend the member from Toronto-Danforth—I almost called you by your old riding—because she really started this ball rolling a few years ago and is a committed crusader. You like that, don't you? Yes. She's a committed crusader on the issue of safe water. I would hope, therefore, that she would be very supportive of the objectives and the details in this bill. I know it may not be perfect, but I know that the member will have her opportunity, as her party will, to propose amendments to the bill when it gets to the committee stage.

Commissioner O'Connor said this would address many of the important issues concerning the financing of water systems. "The requirements for a full-cost report and a cost recovery plan, as generally expressed in this proposed act," are, in his view, "appropriate." I am pleased that Justice O'Connor made that comment, because this act has now been reintroduced to give legal authority to the Ministry of the Environment, as announced by the Premier earlier this year, and it delivers on the Premier's announcement.

We're moving forward in such a way as to ensure a full and robust consultation process. As I indicated earlier, we want to continue to meet with our key stakeholders, particularly people from the municipalities, who unquestionably will have ramifications as a result of this bill. A critical part is that many of them will have to invest major capital dollars to not only upgrade their water treatment and sewage systems, but they are also going to have to invest in either the front end, back end or both ends of the testing process of their municipal water.

We also have a number of small businesses across this province that are being impacted by this bill. We want to ensure that we don't put them out of business but at the same time have some responsible delivery of water services for their people. These are business people like trailer parks, for example. Trailer parks can be severely impacted if we put undue pressure on them to have to test water coming, going and so forth. We want to make sure that we implement a system in this bill that gives them the flexibility to deliver good, safe, clean water to the tenants of their trailer park and that at the same time it doesn't become a burden of cost to the trailer park tenant or to the business owner who runs the park.

We also agree that a fundamental cornerstone needed to ensure safe and clean drinking water is the sustainable financing of municipal water and sewer services. This is absolutely essential. The proposed bill is a tangible recognition of that requirement and is the government's next step in fulfilling O'Connor's recommendations.

We believe that one of the critical success factors behind implementing Commissioner O'Connor's recommendations is the proposed act. The driving force behind this act is the concept of full-cost accounting and recovery. The government believes that legislating full-cost accounting and recovery for municipal water and sewage services is one of the best ways to protect public health and our environment.

The principles of full-cost accounting and recovery are fundamental to sustainability and are key aspects of O'Connor's recommendations in his Walkerton report, part two. Full-cost accounting and recovery provides us with an accurate picture and a transparent method for identifying all the costs, both operational and capital, associated with water and sewage. They must be distinguished so that, first of all, it's a very transparent process and, secondly, so that we can better address the issue of who pays for what.

1720

I know one of the elements that the member for Timmins-James Bay mentioned earlier was the difference between user fees and taxes. Well, there is a very distinct difference between user fees and taxes. He claims that user fees are in fact taxes and that they're somehow unfair. Well, I beg to differ on this fundamental underlying point. A tax is something that is paid by everyone who pays taxes. A user fee is something that is paid for by the individual who is using the service.

Interjection: Hence the term "user fee."

Mr Spina: Thank you, Minister: "Hence the term 'user fee.'" Well, do you know what? I think that's an even fairer system than taxes, because when certain individuals do not want to support the usage by people or others who are using a service, then why should I as a taxpayer support or subsidize that particular usage?

In Brampton, for example, we have probably one of the best parks and recreation systems, second to virtually no other city in Canada. It is the legacy of our city, it is something to be proud of, and I can tell you that as a taxpayer I know that a substantial chunk of my property taxes go toward carrying the cost of these parks and recreation systems. They are great systems, but nevertheless, folks, there are users of that system and there are non-users, and at the same time, virtually none of our recreation centres, with the exception of one or two, are profit-making. They don't even break even. But the reality is that if we enrol our children there for swimming classes or if we ourselves take the opportunity to go to a senior swimming class or a water fitness workout, whatever the element is, I should have to pay for the use of that pool. I don't have a fundamental problem with that, but at the same time, if I have retired seniors or people on fixed incomes or low-income people, it's not fair; if they are not using the system, they shouldn't have to pay and subsidize it with their taxes. User uses, user pays; big difference from taxpayers.

As you've undoubtedly heard, Justice O'Connor made several references in his report to the need for municipalities to ensure that the systems are adequately financed. To quote him, "Over the long term, safety depends on stable and adequate financing to maintain the system's infrastructure and its operational capacity to supply high-quality water consistently." If passed, this act will make it mandatory for municipalities to assess and cost-recover the full amount of water and sewer services. This act will ensure that water and sewer systems generate sufficient revenue to fully recover all their long-term operating and capital costs.

The concept of full-cost recovery is not new. Municipalities are already able to apply full-cost recovery if they wish and, in fact, some have implemented this to varying degrees. But, as the saying goes, the devil is in the details, and although some municipalities claim to be recovering full costs, they really don't know the extent to which they are recovering all of their long-term investment needs. It's easy enough to get a quote to build something and to then run it for two, three, four, five years, but sometimes, when you get into the third, fourth or fifth year of operating that pool, park and rec centre, sewage disposal plant or whatever it is, you kind of forget that you floated a debenture to finance this thing, but when somebody is asked, at the end of the line, "How much did it cost to build that sewage treatment plant?", well, it was $25 million or $45 million, whatever the case may be. They floated a debenture, and 10 years down the road you've got a change in council, you have a change in administration, and all they know is they're still carrying this debenture they floated 10 years ago that they've got to pay off and they forget, often, what it was for.

So we want to make sure that the reporting requirements and the detailed analyses of full-cost accounting would include things like all operating and capital costs, financing costs, renewal, replacement and improvement costs, infrastructure and investments required to maintain and expand the system, and in addition all sources of revenue.

Just on that point, I got a letter today from the chair of the region of Peel. It may sound critical in some way, but I think of it as a very forward-thinking government that is very interested in what is happening as part of this act. I'm going to read as much of it as I can, given the time. This is from the acting regional chair and Matt Zamojcz, who is the commissioner of public works:

"I am writing to advise that regional council approved the following resolution at its meeting held on August 8, 2002:

"That regional council request the Minister of Environment and Energy" at the time "to advise the region of Peel on the status of the overall guidelines review of land application of biosolids, given the outcome of the Walkerton recommendations;

"And further, that the region of Peel express its concerns about the specific site described by the delegation of Mr David Hughes of Sewage Sludge Application ... St Andrew's Road, Caledon as the information provided indicates serious watershed/groundwater issues;

"And further, that the region of Peel request the opportunity"—this is key—"to be involved in both the guideline and application review by the MOEE and that consideration of the environmental process be applied;

"And further, that a copy of the subject resolution be forwarded to the Peel area MPPs and the Peel Federation of Agriculture."

I just give that as an example. There is a perceived problem here in Caledon, within the region, and they are making it very clear and very succinct that they want to be involved in the process of evaluating what is happening in this, but also how what we are doing here impacts on what they are trying to do for the citizens.

We want this act to pass very quickly, because it's important for the people of our province. It is a perfect response to Justice O'Connor's recommendations, but clearly any member of this Legislature who applauds the objectives of the Walkerton inquiry should support this bill.

The Acting Speaker: The floor is now open for further debate. The chair recognizes the member for Toronto-Danforth.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): Thank you, Mr Speaker. You got the name of my riding correct. I appreciate that. But I still do prefer the name of the riding previously. Of course, it was Broadview-Greenwood and before that Riverdale. Dennis Mills, the Liberal member, unilaterally changed the name after the Harris government made the ridings the same as the federal ones, without consulting me or the constituents in the community. None of us were amused by this because we thought—Donna is agreeing with you; you have to be good over there, you're in the audience—that it would have been a perfect opportunity, since the riding came together—Riverdale and East York—to call it East York-Riverdale, Riverdale-East York or something like that, a perfect opportunity to include the names of the two ridings that were jelled. But no, now we're called Toronto-Danforth. I'm sure the people on the Danforth appreciate that. It's a great street—Greek restaurants and all kinds of other diversity on that street—and it's good for them, so maybe we could have gotten Danforth in there as well because it's the middle of the riding. But no, we're called Toronto-Danforth. Anyway, that's what we're called and I am the member for Toronto-Danforth. I had to get that out because I'm really annoyed by it. I must say, psychologically—I haven't even changed my sign yet, but I know I have to do it and we're about to make that change. Finally I'm catching up with reality here.

I was listening earlier to the Minister of the Environment and just then to the member for Brampton—where is he from? Brampton something. I understand that we are actually debating the bill, I suppose, in a way, but what we're debating here is yet again another time allocation motion. Is that what we are doing here today? I was home sick today and I came in so that I could participate in this debate and finish my leadoff on the Safe Drinking Water Act tonight.

I did catch your question. I just want to let you know it showed up on TV when you said the line about keeping their heat on all summer and after you sat down you immediately corrected it and said, "I meant winter." I heard it loud and clear. I just want you to know that it came across on TV.

I'm just really dismayed that here we are again debating a time allocation motion on an important bill like this and already the minister has decided on how many days of hearings we are going to have across the province. We also have to figure out how many days we have for the Safe Drinking Water Act. These bills are of monumental importance to the people of Ontario. I would say to the minister that this particular bill is of great concern to individuals and municipalities across the province.

It seems that what we've all tended, for obvious reasons, to focus on with this bill more than anything, although there is a need for a great deal of discussion on many aspects to this bill, is full-cost recovery. We are going to have to have a very good discussion about this and what we mean by it. It's so easy for the government members and everybody to stand up—almost everybody seems to be onside with full-cost recovery. Justice O'Connor recommended it, I know the environmental community likes it, and we in general are saying the concept sounds good that we should be conserving our water and taking care of our water and not taking it for granted. But when we start throwing out the term "full-cost recovery", what do we mean by that?

Can you imagine how people in municipalities must be feeling as they listen to us get up and lightly talk about how we are going to pass this bill and we are moving to full-cost recovery, when they are getting the hydro bills they are getting now with the excuse from the government that, "It's just full-cost recovery; people have to pay the amount it costs to produce the energy"? Can you imagine what they must be thinking? "Oh no, now they are going to stick it to us with water." They have reason to be legitimately concerned here.

I want to hear from the public, and I don't think five days is going to do it. Is this when we are in session here in the Legislature? Is it going to be after we meet here at 3:30 or 4? Are we going to travel the province so that people have an opportunity to talk about this bill and to talk about what they would see as a fair funding formula, ie the province coming back into that partnership that used to be there when you and I were in government and governments before us, a fair-funding partnership between the province and municipalities? If this is an excuse now for this government to walk away from that fair-funding partnership that used to exist, then that is just not on. We have to have a discussion of what we mean by this.

When the member from Brampton—I have to find out where he is from, because it is going to show up; can you tell me where he is from?—talks about user fees, he says "Well, you know, user fees are user fees. They are not taxes," I wish he had been in this House or had been listening when we were over there—

Interjection: Brampton Centre.

Ms Churley: Brampton Centre—and every time there was any discussion about a user fee in any capacity on our side of the House, they would get up on their hind legs—do you remember this, Mr Speaker?—and start going on and on: "User fees are just another tax. There is only one taxpayer in this province." Now suddenly: "User fees are different, and if you are not using it, you shouldn't have to pay for it." What a change in values we are seeing here today.

Mr Bisson: But that was then.

Ms Churley: But that was then, that's right. They should not be allowed to get away with that. I believe that user fees are applicable in many situations, and I believe that there should be full-cost recovery for water. But what does it mean? Perhaps it means that the government's got to get back into establishing what I call a safe drinking water fund, which was part of my safe drinking water bill and it's no longer included in the government's bill, where the government comes in and spends under general revenues the amount of money that needs to be spent to upgrade our systems clear across the province. Indeed, what the province has been doing is just the opposite. The Tory government brought in new regulations after the tragedy in Walkerton and then did not supply the funding for municipalities, particularly the smaller ones, which needed to upgrade their systems. What did the government do instead of giving them the money? They extended the deadline. So some of these communities may have unsafe drinking water. They may not know whether it's safe or not. Instead of giving them the funding they needed to upgrade their systems, they walked away from it and said, "We'll give you a longer time to meet the requirements of the new regulations."

Perhaps what we should be talking about when we're talking about full-cost recovery is the government spending whatever it takes to upgrade the system so that the systems are safe and we're paying the costs of source protection, which isn't included, by the way, in this bill in cost-recovery, nor is it included in the Safe Drinking Water Act. We're still not talking about how we're going to pay for the cost of protecting our water at its source. It's left out of this bill as well.

I'm sure the public, environmental groups, municipalities, the AMO and all kinds of people will give us different models as to how we should implement a full-cost recovery system—it not only means when you turn on your tap. Here in Toronto, of course, we already pay. We can afford it, but we certainly don't want to see our rates go through the roof either; nor does anybody. What we should be talking about is who uses water. It's not just you and me when we turn on our taps, it's all the industry out there using water for free. They just have to pay for a permit to take water. I know that would make them nervous as well, thinking that they may suddenly have to start paying. It could be a small amount, but you can't just say it's municipalities, you and I, when we turn on our water. We have to figure out what a fair share is that the government should be paying under a fund set up specifically to deal with safe drinking water.

I would say to the Minister of the Environment and the government, when you get up and start talking about the full-cost recovery, bear in mind that you cannot get away with doing what you've just done to hydro rates. That is just not on, and people out there, I can tell you, will guarantee it.

Let's say in principle we agree to some kind of full-cost recovery, basically so that we don't take water so for granted any more, but at the same time really stringent conservation and efficiency measures are brought in, like the NDP did when we brought in OCWA, the Ontario Clean Water Agency. In order for municipalities to get funding to upgrade their systems, they actually had to build in a conservation plan, which worked; it saved them money down the road.

That should be true of all water users as well. We should have incentives from the government. They should be helping us. The government should be helping people conserve and take care of our water.

I just want to say to the people out there who are concerned and nervous about this, we will be fighting hard to make sure that those systems are put in place and you do not end up being stiffed with huge water bills like you are for hydro right now. For heaven's sake, nobody can afford it. That is not to say we don't need programs in place, jointly shared with the government, to make sure our water is safe to drink. That should be what this and the other bills are all about.

I've talked quite a bit about this bill in the past, and I'm not going to go into a lot of detail about it today, but I do want to respond to—where did you say he was from, Brampton North?

Mr Prue: Brampton Centre.

Ms Churley:—the member for Brampton Centre, who talked about, when we were discussing the safe drinking water bill the other day, when the minister introduced it—and you'll hear more from me about this tonight; I have about a half-hour or so left on my leadoff for the NDP caucus—coming full circle, like these books, like all the work and money that went into the inquiry that happened under Justice O'Connor, didn't happen. I'm hearing government members now saying—it has become a mantra—"Let's come full circle; let's go back to blaming the Koebel brothers completely," and going back to, "Well, the NDP privatized some labs in the first place." Remember, that's where Mike Harris started. One of the reasons why we had this inquiry was to find out what went wrong so we'll never repeat those mistakes again.

I advise all members, if you're really interested in knowing what happened with the privatizations of the labs and what went wrong, read the Report of the Walkerton Inquiry, part one. Turn to page 372, 10.3.2: "The Failure to Regulate Private Laboratories." Justice O'Connor goes on at great length about what happened there. It's not a pretty sight when he outlines in great detail the way this government did it.

Yes, when we were in government the NDP allowed certain labs to do some of the water testing in this province. But we kept the four labs open; not only that, but there were 13 Ministry of Health labs. You don't hear about those at all. We focus on the four Ministry of the Environment labs that we shut down, but there were 13 Ministry of Health labs that also did water testing. In fact, that's where Walkerton used to get its water tested.

They were not consulted with. This is not me saying this alone. This is in Justice O'Connor's report. The Ministry of Health were told that they had to do it. They were not consulted with around the possible health implications. Neither did the ministry nor the government of the day listen to warnings from officials that closing them down so quickly—there was a directive in 1994-95 about the possibility of privatizing all the labs that tested water, but it said it would take two to three years to get it right, to get an accreditation system and all of the regulations in place, the reporting, all of that; two to three years. The government reduced it to four to eight weeks. All of a sudden, every jurisdiction in this province was told, "You have to privatize right now. We're shutting down the labs." The Ministry of Health labs closed down a few months later. So there was nothing left. The infrastructure that had been built up over the years that tested the water of most of the municipalities, particularly the smaller ones, in this province was shut down almost overnight with nothing in place. There were warnings given to the government and nobody paid attention.

As you know, I was one of those people on my feet warning the government back when they closed those labs in 1996. In fact, it was cited that when former Premier Harris was being questioned at the inquiry—I was there—there were four or five warning bells in a couple of questions I directly asked the then minister, Mr Sterling, and the Premier about the closing of these labs. The possible dangers were just sloughed off and Eva Ligeti's report was sloughed off. There were warnings; they can't say that there weren't.

So I want to say to the members, when they get up and try to bring this full circle again and say it was just the Koebel brothers—oh, absolutely they played a big role in this; nobody is denying that. But the reality is that these two reports go into great detail about this government's role and the downsizing, the downloading, the deregulation, all of those things. The privatization of the labs played a key role in what happened in Walkerton, and we're supposed to be learning from that. It doesn't do any good for government members to now be trying to get the mantra out that it was really just the Koebel brothers.

I also want to point out, and I've pointed it out many times in this Legislature and I'm going to do it again, that these are important reports for people to read. On pages 312 and 313 in part two of the Walkerton Inquiry report—I'm coming back to cost recovery, which Justice O'Connor talked about, although he didn't recommend a particular model; again, that's something we need to discuss when we go out there in the public, and I just don't think four or five days is enough time to do that—he raises serious concerns about downloading. He calls it "restructuring," but really it's the downloading that the government imposed on municipalities.

On page 313 he says, "The financing of water systems does not occur in isolation of other pressures on municipal budgets. In light of recent restructuring in the municipal sector, especially the transfer of additional open-ended social service costs (eg, welfare) to municipalities in 1998, there is currently some uncertainty about the ability of municipalities to finance all of the programs they are responsible for, including water services. Municipalities may be reducing spending (including borrowing) to plan for potential increases in social service costs. Although I consider it beyond my mandate to make a recommendation in this area, I encourage the province to publicly review the program responsibilities and fiscal capability of municipalities in light of recent restructuring to ensure that the financial pressures on municipalities do not crowd out the adequate financing of water systems."

So let me make it abundantly clear that we in the New Democratic Party will not put up with having this government go out and do to people exactly what they did to them on hydro, saying that Justice O'Connor and environmentalists support full cost recovery, in isolation of the other parts of the Justice O'Connor report that talk about the problems that municipalities already have in dealing with the costs that have been downloaded.

There are a lot of other things I could say about this particular bill before us. I will talk more about the Safe Drinking Water Act tonight, but I would say to the government that the Ministry of the Environment was more severely cut than any other ministry, regulatory-wise, staff-wise and resource-wise. That's documented in Justice O'Connor's reports as well.

If we are really sincere, all three parties, in trying to make sure that what happened in Walkerton never happens again, we have to get out there and listen to the people in Walkerton and to the people across the province, to their criticisms of this bill and their ideas of how we can bring in such a bill, bring in some kind of full cost recovery, but in full partnership with the government so people don't literally have their water turned off. Can you imagine that? That's what's happening with hydro right now.

I want to say to everybody who is in favour of full cost recovery of our water services, bear in mind that we in this party are not going to allow any kind of full cost recovery to go ahead without built-in mechanisms to support those municipalities and individuals who need some kind of funding and resources from the government to make sure that they adhere to stricter conditions to make their water safe and that they can pay for those and that their water will never be turned off.

I look forward to this bill going out to hearings so we can hear from the people of Ontario.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Monday 4 November 2002

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Lundi 4 novembre 2002

The House met at 1845.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA SALUBRITÉ DE L'EAU POTABLE

Resuming the debate adjourned on October 31, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 195, An Act respecting safe drinking water / Projet de loi 195, Loi ayant trait à la salubrité de l'eau potable.

The Acting Speaker (Mr David Christopherson): I'm advised that the member for Toronto-Danforth last had the floor when this bill was before us. You have about 41 minutes for the third party leadoff. You may now continue that speech.

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I left off on Thursday talking about some of the cuts and down-loading that happened under this government's watch, the Mike Harris government's watch, and gave that as a backdrop, but I also took the time, and I want to do it again now, to acknowledge the people of Walkerton and to thank them for their response to the terrible tragedy that happened in their town. Their perseverance and their dignity and their ability to carry on, despite this horrible thing that happened to them, to make sure that this never happens to another community in the province of Ontario is to be admired. I'm sure we all want to pay homage to all of the people of Walkerton but particularly to those who lost loved ones or whose loved ones are ill.

Last Thursday, I talked quite a bit about what led us to Walkerton although I still recommend to everybody to read these reports. They're very easy to read, quite comprehensive, and it really gives in stark detail what went wrong in parts one and two, and the role that his government played, the role that the municipality played, the role that everybody played in the terrible things that lead to that disaster.

Today, I want to talk specifically about the bill before us and compare it to the bill that I proposed, which did pass second reading in this House, and that was Bill 3. I do appreciate the fact that the Premier and the Minister of the Environment and others have acknowledged the role that I played in leading us to be here in the Legislature, way too late, but finally, debating a Safe Drinking Water Act.

Again I'm going to say, before I launch into the comparison, to be fair to the government, because I am a fair person, that my Safe Drinking Water Act was written without the benefit of the Justice O'Connor inquiry and the reports. Indeed, I started working on that bill some time before the terrible events happened in Walkerton. I knew that when we were in government, as we all knew, there was a patchwork of guidelines and regulations and laws under several different ministries that didn't come together, and at that time I was aware—we all were—that we needed to do something to bring these acts together. One of the things we did as a government to start us in that direction was to bring in the Ontario Clean Water Agency. In fact we took, I think it was, $200 million out of the ministry. The government, Mike Harris, by the way, first said that we'd cut the ministry by that amount. Remember that, when he was trying to blame the NDP for what happened? As it turned out, we demanded a correction and we got it, that that $200 million went directly into setting up the Ontario Clean Water Agency to begin that process of having an agency whose prime purpose was to take care of and deal with safe drinking water in this province.

The other thing that we did was to bring in a green planning act. You will recall, Mr Speaker, because you were there, John Sewell, Toby Vigod from CELA, and others crisscrossed the province for, I believe it was a year or two, a long time—and they came in under budget. I always have to put that in because they're very proud of that and they also did an incredible—we were proud of them too, given that there was a recession at the time. They came forward with recommendations and we created a green planning act as a result of that which all stakeholders could live with.

There were some developers who weren't happy with parts of it. There were some environmentalists who weren't happy with parts of it. There were some communities that weren't happy with parts of it. But the bottom line was, it was a pretty darned good bill that actually did protect the environment and also protected the water at its source, which is a big piece that's missing from this bill, the nutrient management bill, the sewer and water bill that we were debating earlier today. That piece had been started by our government under the green planning act, because of course when you start talking about protecting the source of the water, you have to deal with development in any environmentally sensitive areas. We brought in that act, which this government completely cancelled. It just left no aspect of it and went back to the previous Planning Act and in fact changed that regressively, so we went back even before that previous Planning Act. That went a long, long way in terms of starting the process of protecting water at the source.

We also provided adequate funding for conservation authorities, which this government cut by I believe about 70%, plus huge cuts to the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Natural Resources. And they cut another program that the NDP brought in. We called it CURB, Clean Up Rural Beaches. Yes, it cost dollars, and I know we were in a recession. When that party was over here at the time where I'm standing now, everything we did that actually cost some money, even if it meant protecting the environment or providing housing for vulnerable people or providing adequate health care, all those things, we were slammed every day in this Legislature for letting the deficit go up, while this government borrows money to give tax cuts to the wealthy. I still stand by what we did when I think about the things we spent that money on: keeping people afloat, trying to keep jobs, saving companies up north and indeed protecting the environment.

So, yes, we brought in many new programs. In fact, we gave the largest amount of funding ever to the Ministry of the Environment when we were in government. One of the little programs we brought in was CURB, Clean Up Rural Beaches. It dealt specifically, once again, with source protection. In this case, it was very specific: keeping cow and other animal manure out of wells and other drinking sources. It made a lot of sense and it was some millions of dollars; I can't remember the amount. But we went out into the farm community and worked with the farmers to figure out where the water source was vulnerable and to help them fence off and do education programs.

Those are the kinds of things we did, when we were in government, to start that process of source protection. When this government stands, which it frequently does, including the minister the other day, and points accusingly across the floor, "What did you guys do when you were in government? You did nothing," he is so wrong. We indeed did a lot—not enough; more to come.

We also brought in the Environmental Bill of Rights. I as the Minister of Consumer and Commercial Relations—few people know about this. I know you will remember, Mr Speaker, because I was very proud of this other little source protection piece I did that doesn't get talked about. It's known as LUST. Do you remember LUST? You don't have to answer that, Mr Speaker. LUST is leaking underground storage tanks. I brought in the toughest regulations for leaking underground storage tanks in I believe all of North America. It was little noticed. It wasn't a sexy program, even though it was called LUST. It didn't get a lot of media—I made him smile. I worked very hard on that program, along with John Swaigen, who is a local environmental lawyer who had written a book about the subject and had lobbied previous governments before to do something about this tremendous problem of the old tanks. We don't even know where they're all buried, unfortunately. It's not an issue that comes up a lot in this House, but it too has led to contamination of our groundwater. Bringing in new regulations and trying to deal with all the old ones that are leaking was another key piece of the work our government did on source protection.

Right now I have named three pieces. There are more, but those are the three significant pieces that our government did: the green planning act; LUST, leaking underground storage tanks; and CURB, Clean Up Rural Beaches. There was more, but I just wanted to say that again for the record tonight because I know there will be government members up with their canned speeches ready to read. I hope they're not going to go there again tonight but I just wanted to make sure that was on the record.

I was very pleased to finally see a Safe Drinking Water Act before us. After working so hard on that—and as you know, we're a very small caucus. I think we were a little bigger when I started to write that bill, but there weren't a lot of resources in our research and caucus staff to help me very much with that bill. Basically I did it on my own with Sean Morton, who was then my legislative assistant and an environmental lawyer, as well as Chris Watson, who you'll recall was with us then and was the researcher for many areas—because we're spread pretty thin in that little caucus—and a very hard worker. He did a very good job, and of course is now off in Ottawa being the principal secretary to the federal NDP at this very exciting time in the party's history.

Anyway, it was me, Chris Watson and Sean Morton, together with some experts in the field—Rick Lindgren from CELA, in particular—that we drew on. We drew on his expertise, Paul Muldoon's and others; not, of course, in any partisan way, because they're a non-partisan organization that would deal with any member in this House from any party. If you should come to them and ask for their advice, I say to the government, on amendments to the bill, which I will be doing, asking them for their advice, they would give their advice for free to any of us because it's their goal to further the enhancement and protection of the environment.

So we worked very hard for days and weeks and months on that bill to get it as good as we could, with the help of our very good legislative services, which drafted the bill and dealt with us time and time again, to try to get it right. So those are the people I want to thank for helping me write this bill, which was a pretty good bill at the end of the day.

It was based on US safe drinking water legislation, which celebrated its 25th anniversary at about the time I was bringing forward my bill. My bill drew a lot, as well, on the track record that has been available to us from the US for some time, and I did add some made-in-Ontario pieces. But we drew on that particular bill.

It's important to point out that Justice O'Connor came at his recommendations from a somewhat different point of view. And this is why I say I want to be fair to the government here because, as I said, I did mine trying to bring everything that I could, as best I could as a private member, into one piece of legislation. What Justice O'Connor does in part two of his report is basically recommend coming at all of the water pieces under four different pieces of legislation, instead of trying to do it in one piece. Between both the part one and part two reports, he comes up with a number of recommendations that make it easy for the government to follow. Indeed, his version of a Safe Drinking Water Act dealt mostly with pipes and pumps. That is the reality. Mine tried to deal with other things, including some source protection in the best way I could, and other items.

But what I want to say to the government is that because they did not bring forward source protection—understand, with the nutrient management bill, which is now out there and the minister is still consulting about, the regulations that would do any kind of source protection still have not been brought into force. The Safe Drinking Water Act does not even mention source protection. We're dealing with a sewer and water bill that is more nuts and bolts, but also doesn't deal with it. It talks about full cost recovery, but without talking about who's going to pay, for instance, for the expenses involved in source protection.

The bill the government brought forward does deal with, fundamentally, the pipes and pumps, the safe delivery of our water, but doesn't deal with keeping that water safe and clean before it actually goes into the pipes, which is what Justice O'Connor talked a lot about throughout both his reports. He talked about a multi-barrier approach. The single thread throughout both the reports, in fact, dwelt on source protection and multi-barrier, source protection being the first part of the multi-barrier approach to protecting our water. It's a key piece, and it's the piece that's left out of this bill.

The government does say, to be fair, that Justice O'Connor recommended doing the source protection under a different act. He recommends amending the EPA, the Environmental Protection Act, to deal with source protection, and that's what the minister says he's doing. But what is alarming is that, here it is, what, two and a half years now since the tragedy in Walkerton, and Tony Clement, a former Minister of the Environment said, I believe it was in 1999, that they were starting to do work on source protection. Then Walkerton happened. And what did the minister and the Premier announce the other day? What did he announce, Mr Speaker, do you know? He announced that they're about to put together an advisory committee on source protection. We don't even know who's on the committee. There is no committee. An advisory committee at this late date? What have they been doing over there? This is the government that cancelled the green planning act, got rid of CURB, and now we hear that, after Walkerton happened, they're just putting together an advisory committee to tell them how to do source protection.

If they wanted to follow to the letter Justice O'Connor's recommendations and had come in and tabled a source protection bill or the amendments to the Environmental Protection Act at the same time, then I would have been quite comfortable with that, but I have grave concerns and fears—there is an election looming, we all know that—this advisory committee that is to be put together is to tide the government over until the next election and to say, "Well, we're working on source protection. We've got this great advisory committee." It's in the hopper and will be in the election platform, but it won't have been done.

The reason why I'm so concerned about that not being part of this bill—and no bill before us in the near future—is that Justice O'Connor and others have said the bills that have already passed, particularly the Nutrient Management Act, and this bill as proposed, the Safe Drinking Water Act, if passed, will not prevent another Walkerton. That's what we're supposed to be doing here: pulling all these threads together and bringing in legislation that would put in all the barriers that would prevent another tragedy like that from happening.

There's a big hole in the bucket, so to speak, in this piece of legislation before us. We have to understand that. You can't help but make these analogies, as I drink this water, which could be considered a demonstration at this point. This glass of water right now is full, but with the legislation we have before us, this glass is not full: it's half full or half empty. As I've said before, I prefer to think of it as half full. We have an opportunity to fill the rest of that glass.

I'm extremely disappointed that they have watered down this bill, my Bill 3, after the minister said in this House and the Premier started by saying they liked it, wanted to improve it and to pass that bill, and the Premier directed Chris Stockwell, the Minister of the Environment, to work with me in bringing forward my bill with amendments to strengthen it. That's not what happened.

Perhaps this is a good opportunity actually, on the side for a minute, to put on the record as well that I am not being appointed by the Tories to be the czar of some new water agency they're creating. I've heard that, particularly from a lot of Liberals. I've been getting calls from their ridings saying, "My member told me that the Tories are going to be appointing you to be the head of some big new water agency," and everybody out there is believing it. For a few weeks I was returning calls all over the province, and mostly, I've got to be honest with you, they came from Liberal members. I don't know what that was all about, but I want to put it on the record that it is not true and I would rather jump off the Peace Tower—is that what the famous Liberal in Ottawa said?—than go work—and I'm sure they feel the same way about having me as the head of one of their agencies. So just for the record: no, no, no. This is a groundless rumour. I don't know that they're creating a new agency, except for the one in Walkerton, which I support, but (a) I doubt very much they'd ask me to run it, and (b) I know that they would know I wouldn't take an appointment from them.

Having said that, I want to point out that the content of Bill 3 never came to pass. A few good pieces of it were incorporated into the new bill that was introduced.

I'm going to say this for the Minister of the Environment: he did not work with me, as the Premier said when he made the announcement. I went out to Oakville last Tuesday morning to hear the announcement and the Premier did say that I worked closely, or something to that effect, with the minister in developing this bill. Not true. I was shut out of the loop after they decided to bring in their own bill and I want that on the record as well, because I would have fought hard to keep some of the components of my bill that aren't in the government bill, but I never had that opportunity. You will recall that Janet Ecker, the Minister of Finance, mentioned in the throne speech—I guess it was in the budget; it has been mentioned on several occasions, in the budget, in the throne speech—that my bill would be strengthened and brought forward.

Well, that's not what happened. My bill was weakened. Although the government bill has components on pipes and pumps, delivery of water, training, certification and all that kind of stuff, which is vitally important, that is part of their bill. It wasn't in mine. I would have been happy to put it into mine, now having the information before us from Justice O'Connor. What happened was, that was put in, and only a couple of pieces—important pieces—from my bill were put in.

I want to say this about Justice O'Connor's report—and it also applies to another committee I sat on, the alternative fuel committee, which I signed off on. I have now heard members of the government say, in response to me, that I would like to do things differently from the report on alternative fuels I signed off on, as well as the Walkerton report. "You signed off on the alternative fuel report and we agreed in that committee that we would shut the coal plants down in 15 years," or whatever, and since then our party has come out with a policy to shut them down sooner. They say, "Didn't you believe what you signed off on?"

I just want to make it clear, in terms of that report and these reports, that I see those reports as the floor we can improve on. It's really dangerous when governments take reports and then decide that nothing else can be added to improve upon recommendations. I see the recommendations in these two reports from Justice O'Connor in many cases as the floor that can be improved upon, not the ceiling, as the government sees it. "We're going to follow it to the letter," says the government. Indeed, the bill they put forward doesn't exactly and precisely do that for the Safe Drinking Water Act, but it goes a long way to doing that. I want to make it clear that I see it as the floor that we can build upon.

There is absolutely nothing in Justice O'Connor's recommendations around the Safe Drinking Water Act or treatment or distribution or pipes and pumps that says it should not address additional drinking water matters in this bill. In my view, it should not be restricted to pipes and pumps just because Justice O'Connor said that's where you deal with this piece, particularly because you don't have the other pieces before the legislation.

I'm going to tell you some of the things in my Bill 3 that would have made this a much stronger bill had they been incorporated into the government's bill, and why I'll be working with the government now to see if we can make those amendments and get them included. The highlights of Bill 3, which had been introduced earlier as Bill 96, include water testing by accredited labs—well, the government has done that—strict notification requirements; strong community right-to-know provisions; making it an offence to pollute water; significant fines; judicial review of the actions of the Ministry of the Environment; establishing a water advisory council; requiring the minister to undertake research on water issues and do work around source management and source protection; annual state-of-safe-drinking-water report; annual review of regulations; and a Safe Drinking Water Act fund, which is so critical. Some of those things have been included in this bill, but not many.

As I said, a key recommendation, the source protection, is a glaring omission. It could easily have been incorporated into this bill. There's no reason why it has to wait for an amendment to the EPA. I find it absolutely astonishing that two and a half years after people died in Walkerton, we have before us no source protection plan yet and a non-existent advisory committee. The government should have used the past two and a half years—especially because Tony Clement, a former minister, said that he was working on source protection—to develop this policy for clean water. They should have started funding the conservation authorities again and doing the kind of work that needed to be done.

Also a key piece missing from my bill that I think is critical—and it is certainly a key piece of the American Safe Drinking Water Act—is upholding the community's right to know the status of their drinking water and to give an airtight process for notifying the public of adverse tests, producing consumer confidence reports, and maintaining an electronic drinking water registry.

I'm going to talk a bit more about that in a minute, but another huge hole in the bucket is the lack of provincial funding to help municipalities meet their infrastructure and water quality commitments, nor is there any talk about investment in rebuilding the scientific infrastructure at the Ministry of the Environment following its destruction by this government. Justice O'Connor specifically stated—and we cannot cherry-pick from this report when it suits the government to say, "Oh, well, Marilyn, you're wrong. We followed the recommendations for the Safe Drinking Water Act," but then to not pay attention to some of the other key recommendations or advice. He did specifically state, "The funding cuts to the MOEE were part of the reason for Walkerton," and recommends that the whole system be adequately funded. This bill says nothing about money and resources.

I say to the government: you can have really tough legislation and really tough regulations, but if you don't have the resources, if you don't have the front-line workers to enforce it, to do the inspections, to do the testing, to lay the charges, to do all of those things, it's not worth the paper it's printed on. We've seen that, in fact, time and time again since the government cut such massive resources from the Ministry of the Environment. So we need to see that safe drinking water fund incorporated into this bill.

The other bill that's before us, that we were debating—actually, it was a time allocation motion. The government's trying to ram that one through as well. We debated that time allocation motion this afternoon. I raised that concern as well, because the new buzzword is “full cost recovery.” I pointed out this afternoon and on Thursday when I talked about full cost recovery, some of the not necessarily recommendations—because there are some cases where Mr Justice O'Connor said, “I don't feel it's within my mandate to give a specific recommendation on this, but I do want to point out to the government that I have concerns about the” downloading—he called it “restructuring”—“to the municipalities since this government came to power, particularly around social services,” and expressed the concern that the municipalities should not be asked to meet new requirements to keep their drinking water safe unless the government does a review of the kind of what he called “restructuring” that downloaded a lot of services to the municipalities. It's causing a great deal of economic problems for these municipalities.

When we talk about full cost recovery, especially in light of the terrible situation that people are now in because of the privatization of our energy system, which the NDP, from day one, said would be a problem—and we are the only party in this House who stood up at that time. And you know what? We were laughed at at the time. We were laughed at by Liberals; we were laughed at by Tories; we were laughed at by some in the press. When we started to look at what happened in California and other jurisdictions and said, “It is going to happen here”—and we pointed out all the reasons. I remember I had Matt Freedman come up from California, a young lawyer who has been involved with the citizens' group there who were fighting the very fight that we were having. He came up and watched us making all the same mistakes and tried to warn us. I had a public meeting. We've been working with lots of others who have been trying to stop this deregulation and privatization.

I have to hand it to my leader, Howard Hampton, who kept on that issue day after day; and all of our caucus kept on it, before we had the proof, even though we could show from other jurisdictions what happened. We could see it coming, and nobody wanted to listen then.

Now the Liberals are scrambling. Some members are getting up in question period and in members' statements and doing their best to try to again ridicule the NDP position on this. Our position was right then and our position is right now. It's about time that everybody in this House understood that the deregulation and privatization of our energy system is wrong. It's going to create havoc in this province and people are going to have their power cut off. Jobs are already being lost; we're all hearing it. It's time we all agreed that the NDP was right all along on this one and reverse this stupid decision that is so badly hurting our constituents.

So coming back now, I get very nervous when I hear these guys talking about full cost recovery, watching what's going on with hydro, because it's in their interest to embrace full cost recovery.

Mr Frank Mazzilli (London-Fanshawe): And those guys too.

Ms Churley: And the Liberals too at this point, yes. But when I hear—

Interjection.

Ms Churley: The Liberals have been attacking us lately. I don't do this a lot, but I have heard the attacks on us by the Liberals and I'm going to say that the Liberals are trying to have it both ways on this and they're not going to get away with it on this one. I say to the members who were asking questions today about how badly their constituents are being hurt and that we need to give incentives to private companies to come in and do this and that, it's not going to work. Energy is something that's life-sustaining. We need it. It should be a public system.

Yes, we said that the public system we had needed to be changed so we could bring in green power and we needed to deal with the nuclear debt and all of those things. We would change the system as it is now because we knew very well when we were in government how difficult it was under that system to bring green power on the grid. But now when I hear the government talk about full cost recovery on water, well, what an excuse it is to suddenly get out of providing the funding that they should be providing to jurisdictions across this province, which they got out of from day one. We used to have a partnership with those municipalities and we had a dedicated fund that went to improving water and sewer systems. They got rid of that.

So now I hear this, when we know that there's a lot to be done and it's going to be expensive to upgrade our water system to make sure Walkerton never happens again, we hear government members: “We really like this full cost recovery; that sounds good. People should be paying for their water.” Well, you know what? I agree in principle, as we all do, that we have to stop taking our water for granted. That's part of what led us to Walkerton.

You read these reports, and it's shocking throughout the whole system what happened that led to this, not just the Koebel brothers, as you like to say again over there. All the pieces are shocking. Dan Newman was the minister then. He knows all of the pieces that went wrong. The need to do something about it is going to be expensive. For the government members to stand up and say, “Oh, well, it's just full cost recovery; everybody's got to pay for their water,” we pay for our water here in Toronto, as we should, but now we know that there has to be tremendous infrastructure work done. But across the province in the smaller municipalities—these rural areas, the little campsites, trailer parks, all of those water systems in poorer municipalities—what does it mean to them when they're told that they're going to have to start paying for all of this? They're not going to be able to do it. So does that mean, if they can't do it, the government will do under the Safe Drinking Water Act what they did under regulations? Although it's harder to do under legislation; it's one of the problems I have with just regulations, because the government can come in with a stroke of a pen, which they did when they brought in the new regulations after Walkerton happened. It was one of my concerns and complaints about it. They did exactly what I said they might do; that is, some municipalities could not afford to meet the requirements of the new regulations. So what did the government do? Instead of giving them the resources, the funds that they needed, they postponed the date for when those municipalities would have to upgrade their systems. Who knows how safe that drinking water is in those jurisdictions? We just can't have that.

The time is marching along and I wanted to speak a bit about a part of the bill that's left out that really means a lot to me, and that is the public right to know. One of the big pieces of the American legislation deals with that, and it goes quite far. President Clinton made some amendments to the Safe Drinking Water Act, I think it was in 1996, and the public right to know was a big component of that.

I'm trying to find a sample paper that I have. Of course I can't find it in all these pieces of paper; here it is. When I first announced my Safe Drinking Water Act, two and half years or so ago, I had some big posters made to demonstrate graphically what I mean by those things, so people would understand. I know I'm not supposed to hold these things up, Mr Speaker, and you probably can't see it anyway, but what it says is, "Sample Public Notice: Drinking Water Warning," and under that, as an example, "Spring field water has high levels of nitrate." Then it gives very specific instructions: "Do not give the water to infants under six months old or use it to make infant formula."

It goes on even in the language of that particular community, Spanish, to talk about how there's information for Spanish speakers—in my community it would be Chinese, Greek, Indian and some other language—potential health effects, actions consumers should take, when the violation or situation occurred, whether alternative water supplies should be used, what is being done to correct the situation or violation, and the name, phone number and business address for more information. That's the kind of information that's automatically given out in the US in communities where there's any adverse water report whatsoever.

Then the other side is a mock-up that I did: "Water quality registry." It says, "Welcome to the Ontario water quality registry. Clean, safe drinking water is a basic human entitlement and essential for the protection of public health. The Safe Drinking Water Act recognizes that people who use the public water systems in Ontario have the right to clean and safe drinking water." Then it says that it "provides Ontario residents with access to vital information about the quality of drinking water in their community." This registry would have "What's on tap"—I kind of like that line—"at the OWQR: drinking water alerts." And you could find anything, like a database of drinking water tests, listed by community; index of certified water laboratories in Ontario; index of water notices issued, listed by community; index of convictions under the act and judicial reviews; drinking water and health basics; report on the state of drinking water in Ontario and report on the water advisory council.

That's some idea of what I mean by the public right to know. That's something from my bill that's been left out and that's something that I'm hoping very, very much that the government will agree to put back in, because I think we would all agree that one of the pieces that went wrong out of the many in Walkerton was not only the labs having been privatized and the system breaking down so that the reporting wasn't done properly to the Ministry of the Environment and the Ministry of Health, but also that there was a delay in notifying the community. And although Justice O'Connor says he didn't think lives would be saved, he thought some people could have avoided getting sick had they been advised earlier. So that's a piece that I hope to get back in the bill.

The right to sue is a contentious one—that's part of the US legislation—and Justice O'Connor did not recommend that. He was concerned that there would be frivolous cases brought forward and he came up with a standard of care which the government did incorporate into their safe drinking water bill. But I still take the position that there needs to be a right to sue. When something that horrible happens to you, as it did in Walkerton, I think that right should be there. There's a way around this that's a compromise which I will be proposing to the government, and it's put forward by CELA, the Canadian Environmental Law Association. Let me take this opportunity to thank them. The Sierra Legal Defence Fund, OPSEU and AMO have already put in preliminary responses to the draft that came out a while ago.

On the right to sue, what CELA recommended—and I think it's a good recommendation—is that the whole Safe Drinking Water Act come under the Environmental Bill of Rights. Once something comes under the Environmental Bill of Rights, it means that act is part of that whole infrastructure and the public can ask for an investigation under that act and indeed can sue under certain conditions under the act. That might be the best way to go about that, because I would see it as a vital piece to come back in the act.

The Safe Drinking Water Act before us today goes about, I would say, two thirds there, but it needs some work and it needs to have some amendments made. I'd like to see the things that I talked about initially as missing from this bill, which were in my bill that was applauded widely across the province by the same people who have put in their initial thoughts on the government's safe drinking water bill, clear across the province—I think people would like to see that in the bill. So what I would say to the government is, make absolutely sure—no negotiating on public hearings. I want the government to commit, as the Premier said and the minister has said—because they're starting to back down now—that there will be full, comprehensive hearings across this province. This is an important bill, and people have the right to have their say. We need to hear indeed from the public. So the New Democratic caucus is demanding that there be full public hearings clear across this province until we get it right.

The Acting Speaker: Members now have up to two minutes, for a total of 10, for questions and comments.

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): I am pleased to take a moment on the member's comments on the Safe Drinking Water Act, Bill 195. The comments made were very thoughtful indeed.

I want to speak a bit about the support that I think is required, and that many are calling for, for rural communities and smaller communities when it comes to the cost of their water in the future. This has been a significant issue in my riding. I wrote to past ministers about this situation, and in particular about communal wells in small rural areas and the need for financial assistance.

Here in Ontario today we see the prices for some of the modern basics of our life in the 21st century, such as natural gas, escalating. We see hydro rates going through the roof, causing a lot of concern, to say the very least, among large and small business owners, rural communities—natural gas and hydro rates going through the roof. These communities were in the past worried and particularly now with this bill are worried about the future cost of water, their ability to maintain the small villages and towns that they have in their area and keep them thriving to attract more people to their area, those who want to live in rural and small-town Ontario. I want to also mention that in recent days, almost since the long weekend in September, I've been hearing about gasoline prices, prices that are approaching almost 80 cents a litre. This government has done nothing to alleviate that. Natural gas, hydro, gasoline and water prices are escalating, and this government has failed to grapple with those issues.

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): It's an honour to rise to comment on my colleague the member for Toronto-Danforth and her very excellent speech. She said three things that I think are worthy of comment in the two minutes allotted to me. The first was the public's right to sue and the difficulty in getting into that entire area of litigious practice that seems to be creeping ever so slowly, or perhaps ever too quickly, from the United States. It is a very difficult prospect, but I know there always has to be a public right to seek redress through the courts. I'm not sure exactly how we do it, but I do understand the conundrum of which she spoke.

What was far more important was the public right to know. That is not in this legislation. I will tell you that people everywhere want to know what they are ingesting. They want to know about the food they are eating, whether it has been genetically modified. They want to know about the water and what the content of the water is, whether it has any contaminants or any things that they think might be at too high a level, such as lead or iron. They want to know that, and it is becoming increasingly difficult for municipalities to provide that kind of information with the monies they have available to them.

But most importantly, she talked about full cost recovery, and I am in total agreement with her. If the direction of this government is to go the route of privatization as they have with hydro, you are going to be making the same huge mistake with the same disastrous consequences. People will not stand for a public service such as water going the same way you are proposing hydro to go.

It is important to charge sufficient money to maintain the services. I would agree with that. I would agree with that in a flash. In fact, when I was mayor of East York, we ensured that the money spent on water was sufficient to cover the cost of repairing the pipes. It is in the best public domain to do exactly that. My colleague is exactly right, and I commend her for her speech tonight.

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): It's a pleasure to rise this evening to make a few comments on the member for Toronto-Danforth's speech. I didn't get the first 20 minutes last week, but certainly I know that you have a lot of passion for clean drinking water and that was reflected in your private member's bill. However, I have to tell you that I was somewhat disappointed you didn't feel that your bill was included in this piece of legislation. We on this side of the House took your recommendations and your bill very, very seriously. I can get into this a little bit later on, when I'm making some comparisons, but certainly we think your input was very valuable as we drafted this piece of legislation.

As you know, after Walkerton, which is something we never want to ever see happen again—not only in our province or our country but anywhere in the world—we want to make sure that the recommendations of people like Justice O'Connor are taken very seriously and, as a result, we think that a lot of his recommendations are exactly the reason why we are in fact here tonight debating the second reading of Bill 195.

I'm going to be making a few other comments when my turn comes up here just in a few minutes, but I wanted to say that we understand your passion for clean water. Again, we did take very seriously the recommendations of your private member's bill into many aspects of this particular piece of legislation. I'll be happy to make a few comments in a few minutes.

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): I am pleased to make some comment on the one-hour lead for the third party. I did have the opportunity to be here for the first 20 minutes and then for the 40 minutes this evening. I think everyone in the Legislature recognizes the commitment of this particular member to the issue and to environmental issues. I would like to echo the remarks that the member made with regard to the people of Walkerton, who have paid the greatest price of all for the fact that we have to entertain this kind of legislation here at this time, sadly.

My colleague Mr Bradley has also highlighted the fact that it was the Tory administration that cut the resources for the Ministry of the Environment by some 50% and fired 900 employees out the door, employees who provided the kind of services that very probably would have prevented the tragedy. It's only after that and with this hindsight and with the very dear price that has been paid by the people of Walkerton that we are here to debate Bill 195, the Safe Drinking Water Act.

I do appreciate most of the comments that were made by the member of the third party that related to this particular act. I certainly don't agree with the comments she made when she sort of digressed to debate some hydro issues. But in any case, I'm going to try and focus my comments on her remarks to the act and also share some concerns that our caucus has already voiced around the affordability of safe drinking water. We certainly hope that it will be the goal of the government to ensure that in whatever community someone would live in Ontario, whether they were a rich community or not, they would be able to access safe drinking water.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Toronto-Danforth now has up to two minutes to respond to the questions.

Ms Churley: I'd like to thank all members of the House for their indulgence tonight. I particularly want to thank the members for Chatham-Kent, Beaches-East York, Simcoe North, and Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington for their comments.

I would like to say that I don't know how I feel about always being referred to as passionate. It's true, I can be very passionate about a number of things—

Mr Dunlop: It was a compliment.

Ms Churley: No, I do take it as a compliment; don't get me wrong. But I also want to point out that I have some knowledge about these issues. I am very passionate about the environment and environmental protection. That's what brought me here. That's what made me a politician. I still fight for these things. But I also have a basic knowledge that I hope members, particularly of the government, will understand has not just been plucked out of the air. I do know a few things about this issue.

I'm pleased to hear that the member for Simcoe North said that he feels as though the government did try to work with my bill and based their bill upon it. I would like to say that I appreciate that. I believe I said earlier that I appreciate the amount of work that was done in relationship to my bill. But what I'm pointing out is that it's missing some key components that I think are important. Because they are not showing up in any other bill, this is a good opportunity to take the Justice O'Connor recommendations, my bill and the US bill, which I based mine on, and make the best possible safe drinking water bill.

I'm still hopeful, and I was happy to hear the member for Simcoe North say that we might be able to make some amendments that can be accepted to indeed improve upon the bill that's before us today.

The Acting Speaker: The floor is now open for further debate.

Mr Dunlop: I just want to say what a pleasure it is to rise this evening to open our second reading debate, the rotation portion of it, on Bill 195, the Safe Drinking Water Act.

First of all, I want to thank everyone who is here tonight, and Minister Stockwell for bringing forth this piece of legislation. As I said a little earlier, 50 recommendations from the O'Connor report are included in this legislation.

We mentioned a little earlier how important it was that we implement a system here in Ontario that is second to no other jurisdiction anywhere in the world, and that what happened at Walkerton never happens in any other jurisdiction in Ontario or in the world. I do hope that we in fact are world leaders in water quality as a result of this legislation and other legislation and recommendations that will follow.

I'll focus a lot of my comments tonight on the new licensing requirements for drinking water, but I'd also like to talk a little bit this evening about my experience as a municipal council member for 18½ years and as a plumbing and heating contractor, as someone who has actually at one time or another worked on many water systems in my particular small part of Ontario. I've got some interesting stories that I think you might want to hear about how far we have come in the last 20 or 25 years on some of our municipal systems here in the province.

I would also like to mention some key points that the government is very concerned about. Also, I'd like to mention a few comments from stakeholders and show their interest in the introduction of Bill 195, and some of the positive comments we've heard from different stakeholders across the province.

The proposed Safe Drinking Water Act would require owners of municipal water systems to obtain an owner's licence for the operation of their waterworks. This licence would not be required for non-municipal systems. Non-municipal systems would be required to follow the current regulatory requirements, which include a certificate of approval.

When I mentioned earlier about how far we've come, I wanted to mention some of the water systems we have had. I've got to tell you, when Walkerton broke out and we heard about the Koebel brothers and neglect and that type of thing and whoever was responsible for inspections, all the different issues that surrounded the inspections and the maintenance of the water systems, it brought back a lot of memories for me.

In 1980, I was elected as the reeve of the small village of Coldwater. It's still a nice little village, but now it's part of a restructured township called the township of Severn, in Simcoe county. It's a beautiful little community on a river. It's surrounded by high hills. Some of the hills are the Mount St Louis and Moonstone ski resorts. If you're heading up Highway 400, there's a long hill for many miles that is filled with artesian wells, and water bubbles out of the sides of the hills.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: Sorry to interrupt you. Take your seat, please. I'm sure the opposition benches would want to give the same courtesy that the government benches have given this evening to the speaker, so if you could keep it down, please, that would be really helpful. Sorry for the interruption. Please continue.

Mr Dunlop: Thank you very much, Mr Speaker. Maybe some people aren't interested in these municipal stories, but I find them very important. This particular stretch of hill is where, around the turn of the century, the people who were the forefathers, the town fathers of the little community of Coldwater, built a reservoir up on the top of the hill, and water flowed from these artesian wells and springs into this huge reservoir tank, an open reservoir. The reservoir allowed the water to flow by gravity into the community, probably 400 feet below it, where the little village was. The community had good water pressure at the taps. It was certainly a system that was good for many years and very cheap. People had water at ridiculously low prices, like $5 a month, this type of price, for years because all that really occurred was that the water flowed into the tanks. I guess about 30 years ago they added a chlorinator at the bottom of the hill. There was no filtration of any kind or anything like that, just an in-line chlorinator. That's how it got to the houses.

When I first took over as the reeve of this municipality, they'd get strong areas of the town for chlorine and weak areas. But the fact of the matter was that people drank the water; they loved the water. The health unit checked it, I believe, once a month. If they had a bad test from the health unit, they'd call out to the municipality and the inspector would say, "You've got a bad test." The council and administrators at the office would phone the local radio station, and the radio station would just simply put it across the airwaves for the people in Coldwater to boil their water for a few days until they got some better tests. That is how it was done.

I can remember that someone from the Ministry of the Environment came along about 1988 or 1990—it was either the Liberal or the NDP government; I'm not sure—and said, "You know, we consider that a pretty dangerous system. You're going to have to put this new state-of-the-art system in at the bottom of the hill or find other options. And we're going to give you $1 million or something to help you along with the construction of this facility."

We looked at all the options and followed the protocol back then—because I was the head of council—and we looked at taking water out of the river, at piping it back from Georgian Bay, and finally we came across the proposal of possibly drilling wells. But so many people in the community thought that was so wrong at the time, because there we were actually going to drill wells when we had what everyone considered to be a perfectly good system at the top of the hill. However, the old guys in the community would come forward and say, "Oh, yeah, but we used to swim up there. We used to swim in the reservoir," and this type of thing. That didn't sound that wonderful but the water tasted good and it was chlorinated.

In the end, about 1993, we drilled beautiful wells. I think they produced about 150 gallons a minute. It was water out of the Oro moraine, something that we're very proud of up in that area. It's ice-cold water. But the water bills went up quite a bit. There was a lot more testing involved; there was a backup generator system in it. There was pressure enough to run fire trucks and fire pumps and all those sorts of things, but in the end we had to put this system in and the people were disappointed in the price of the system. But the reason we had to put it in was very simple: it was an open reservoir and they are simply not allowed any more in the province of Ontario.

When I think of what happened at Walkerton and the criticism I took as the reeve of the village for installing this new system, I just thank God every time I think of it, because it could have been us, with bad water tests and maybe an E coli problem or something like that in that community. We were fortunate enough that we went ahead, and now, after the restructuring of the county of Simcoe, the township of Severn, that I became the deputy mayor of, we put in state-of-the-art systems and we have staff on duty that do the complete checkups all the time. They're highly regarded and they're well trained to the latest standards that the Ministry of the Environment has.

I wanted to pass that on, that little story, because I thought it was important as a mayor or a deputy mayor to look back and think how we could have been in trouble and how you could feel for somebody like the Keobel brothers over in Walkerton because I think at some time it was bound to happen somewhere. In the end, it's so unfortunate what happened in Walkerton but it's a lesson that all of us will never be able to ever forget.

I wanted to say a few words about—and I'll get back to some notes I've got but I kind of find these stories a little bit interesting—our particular business in north Simcoe and south Muskoka. We were plumbing contractors and of course we looked after many, many systems for cottagers. I'm not trying to give an ad here or anything like that; I'm just saying the type of work we've done. We did a lot of resort work and worked on some of the water systems in the major resorts and a lot of the developments around Simcoe County, but we also looked after some municipal systems for the adjoining townships. I have to tell you that there really was never an inspection system put in place where we'd see people from the township or the health unit or the environment come out. We just went ahead and looked after the chlorinator systems and some of the filtration systems that were put on. The odd time, maybe every couple of years, you'd hear a report that "Environment wants something done" on a certain system.

So there was certainly never any regular inspection or detailed analysis of what was happening with all the water systems in that particular part of the province. Now maybe that happened in other communities, but in Simcoe County we generally had really good drinking water wherever the wells or the water systems were. We didn't see a lot of the inspections that we would of course see under the new regulations and what the townships have to follow today.

I wanted to say another few things about the particular piece of legislation and some of the people who have commented on Bill 195. I'm looking at an editorial here from the Toronto Star and I want to quote from it: "There's a lot to like in the Ontario government's proposed safe drinking water introduced yesterday." This was an editorial last week. "On the positive side, the act would force testing laboratories to be accredited and all operators of water systems to be licensed. It would also impose a 'standard of care' to ensure municipalities act 'honestly, competently, and with integrity.' In addition, it would require all waterworks operators to pass formal testing to become licensed. It would boost enforcement provisions and appoint a chief inspector to oversee training and inspection policies. These are all good, necessary steps."

This was from the Toronto Star's editorial section last week, after the introduction of Bill 195.

1950

The Globe and Mail also reported, and this is a quote from Bruce Davidson, the vice-chairman of the Concerned Walkerton Citizens group, someone that Mr Murdoch would certainly know: "Mr Davidson praised the legislation that was introduced yesterday for 'ensuring the people working in the water facilities are well trained,' and for requiring that 'equipment has to be maintained and the appropriate equipment has to be in use.' A lack of training and lack of functioning equipment were among the causes of the Walkerton tragedy." That's a quote from Mr Davidson.

The Toronto Star also quoted Mayor Dave Thomas. Mayor Dave Thomas calls the legislation a very, very "positive move."

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): Thomson.

Mr Dunlop: I'm sorry, Mr Thomson.

I'll go on with the Star again: "Tim Lotimer, chair of the Ontario Water Works Association, said the proposed legislation is a 'great step' forward that will help ensure the safety of drinking water for Ontario. 'I think it is high time that the cost of water went up. Water is a very valuable thing,' he said." That's from Tim Lotimer.

A quote from The Brantford Expositor: "The province's commitment to a watershed-based protection plan is being warmly welcomed by the GRCA. Peter Krause, chairman of the Grand River Conservation Authority, said Tuesday that Premier Ernie Eves' announcement serves as an important reinforcement of ideas presented by Justice Dennis O'Connor in part two of his Walkerton recommendations.

"'The Ontario government's actions today are an excellent step forward,' said Kraus, who is also chairman of Conservation Ontario. The group represents the province's 36 conservation authorities.

"Source protection on a watershed basis is the first critical barrier in a multi-barrier approach to the safety of our water supply."

The Guelph Mercury says: "City waterworks superintendent Peter Busatto said the legislation raises the bar. 'It goes way beyond any legislation I'm aware of in Canada and in the United States.'

The legislation got high marks from retired University of Guelph water resources engineering professor Hugh Whitely. 'It is definitely a good move to recognize requirements for the various steps in delivering safe water,' said Whitely, particularly pleased with the licensing and certification ideas."

And finally, from Broadcast News—maybe I've given too many quotes, but I thought it was important that these be put on the Hansard, if it's at all possible—"A Vancouver Island MP is calling for national drinking water standards based on the findings of the Walkerton inquiry. Alliance MP Keith Martin, who is a medical doctor, calls the Ontario report a useful document. He says the Ontario government took a leadership role by adopting its recommendations."

Those are some of the quotes from people who supported the introduction of this bill last week. I'll get back to my other notes.

While all proponents of the proposed bill clearly define various roles and responsibilities, the new licensing requirements for municipalities clearly define the accountabilities and responsibilities of municipal owners.

The proposed licensing scheme requires the owner of municipal drinking water system to obtain a certificate of approval, a permit to take water, an operational plan, a financial plan and an accredited operating agency to operate the facility.

The proposed licensing requirement is the first of any jurisdiction in our country. Commissioner O'Connor makes a number of key recommendations relating to new requirements for municipalities. These recommendations are hinged primarily on the concept of an owner's licence, as articulated in recommendation 71. In recommendation 71, Commissioner O'Connor suggests that municipalities should be required to obtain a license for each drinking water system that they own, and that such a license should be made up of five distinct pieces. The proposed Safe Drinking Water Act embraces this recommendation by requiring a municipal drinking water license built upon five mandatory components. The first two components of the new license replace the current certificate of approval process by separating the physical hardware elements into what will be called a drinking water works permit and the ongoing operational practices into an operational plan. Both of these new components will require separate approval from the ministry.

Drinking water works permits: in the proposed act, we propose that anyone who intends to establish a new municipal drinking water system must apply to the ministry for a drinking water works permit before doing so.

An operational plan, another part of the drinking water works plan: operational plans must be developed by the owner of each municipal drinking water system. Those operational plans will include sampling planning, real-time monitoring and emergency planning, in addition to day-to-day operational processes specific to the characteristics of each system.

A permit to take water: a valid permit to take water is the third mandatory component of proposed new licences. The permit is an existing approval process for regulating substantial water takings in the province through the Ontario Water Resources Act.

The fourth and fifth components of the proposed new licence are new areas of oversight in the regulation of municipal systems.

Financial plans will demonstrate the long-term viability of drinking water delivery for each system. Commissioner O'Connor highlighted the importance of this component by saying, "Over the long term, safety depends on stable and adequate financing to maintain the water system's infrastructure and its operational capacity to supply high-quality water consistently."

This proposed act supports this assertion by requiring owners of municipal drinking water systems to demonstrate the financial viability of their service. This theme of financial sustainability relates directly to our proposed Sustainable Water and Sewage Systems Act that was introduced in this House a few weeks ago. The proposed bill would require owners of water and sewer systems, mainly municipalities, to undertake full cost accounting of their systems. I'm running out of time here. They would conduct a detailed analysis of their system, including operating and capital costs, all sources of revenue and the investment required to maintain and expand their system. O'Connor clearly indicated his support for full cost reporting and cost recovery plans as outlined in this bill.

The accredited operating authority: the final component of the proposed new licence is a requirement for the owner of the drinking water system to secure the services of an accredited operating authority for the operation of the system. Accreditation is an important step forward, one that recognizes that running these drinking water systems is a complex business that requires specialized knowledge and coordinated management. Operating authorities, whether internal departments or hired service providers, will be required to have accreditation from a designated accrediting body before operating a municipal drinking water system.

I thank you for the opportunity to say a few words tonight.

The Acting Speaker: Members now have up to two minutes for questions and comments.

Mrs Lyn McLeod (Thunder Bay-Atikokan): I'm sure it comes as something of a relief for the member from Simcoe North to be able to talk positively about his government's approach to dealing with safe drinking water. It has been a long time coming for this government to table some legislation that even begins to address the issues of what's needed to ensure that Ontarians can actually trust the water they're about to drink.

We've had a long history from this government of taking exactly the opposite direction. I remember the arguments we made in this place when this government decided they were going to privatize the water testing labs. We even tried to argue it on the government's own grounds. We were able to show, to bring in evidence, that it was going to be more expensive to do the testing of water in private labs. But this government was so hell-bent on privatization of whatever they could privatize that they weren't interested in either the safety considerations or the cost considerations of privatizing the water labs.

I won't dwell tonight on whether a different decision on the government's part back then, some six years ago, might have averted the terrible tragedy of Walkerton. But I do want to acknowledge that it was only the terrible tragedy of Walkerton that in fact led the government to finally present the legislation we have before us tonight.

Even with this legislation, this government is hanging on to its privatization agenda. In the draft of the bill, there was a clause that would have ensured that if municipalities sold their water systems to the private sector—the government was still certainly allowing that possibility, but at least they were prepared to ensure that if the municipalities sold their water systems to the private sector, they would still have to accept responsibility to ensure that the water would be clean. There would be a legal responsibility on the public sector, maybe not the provincial government but at least on the public sector accountable to the ratepayers, to the residents, to ensure that that water was safe, even if it was being administered by private owners. They took the clause out of the bill. This government is still primarily concerned about privatization rather than public safety.

Mr Prue: I listened with some considerable interest to the member from Simcoe North. I was particularly impressed; I had no idea that you were the reeve of your township or the deputy mayor of the township of Severn.

I was also very interested in what you had to say about the costs, because this is really where it comes down to the nub of it: how much is the public willing to pay for safe, clean, pure water? How much are they willing to pay? I listened to the problems of a rural municipality that did not have a great big lake like Lake Ontario beside it. I am reminded of many small communities that do not have the luxury of having Lake Ontario at their doorstep. Be that as it may, the costs have to be balanced, and what I did not hear and am hoping to hear in further debate is the balancing that this government intends to do once costs are raised. There can be no doubt that in order to ensure the safety of all the people of this province and the drinking water, some costs are going to have to go up. It is unrealistic to think that they will not. In this party we support the fact that the costs that are charged should balance off the expenses in providing the water.

Having said that, what I need to hear and have not heard yet is that the public will continue to have accessibility to water. We have seen over the last few days and over the last few weeks ordinary residents in Ontario—people with disabilities, people on fixed incomes and pensioners—who are no longer able to afford to have hydro. I do not want to see in this bill the same thing or potentially the same thing happen to people who cannot afford to have water. There needs to be a balance between the cost feedback and the accessibility to the water itself. Until I hear that, I'm going to have to be a little bit skeptical. But I do commend the member for what he had to say.

Mr Murdoch: I too want to commend the member for Simcoe North on this bill. This is a very important bill and I'm sure all three sides will support it when it's done. I think a lot of the meat of this bill will come when we do the regulations.

We've set up a working group with AMO to work on these regulations. AMO so far has said that the bill at this point is certainly OK. As I say, when we get to the regulations we'll see what's going to happen. I'm pleased to say that Norm Miller and Morley Kells are also in that working group. Norm brings a lot of expertise from the private campgrounds association and trailer parks to water supply, and Morley, on the municipal affairs side, will bring a lot of expertise to the table. AMO has sent a co-chair, Howard Greig. Howard is the mayor of Chatsworth in Grey county. So it's going to be a good working committee, as far as I can see. It looks like we'll be able to, hopefully, come up with regulations that suit everybody and that will make this bill as important as we need it to be.

As you know, clean water is something that everyone expects. We have to make sure that's going to happen here. Also, the concerns you have with the water rates are one of the things we're going to have to look at to make sure that water doesn't become so expensive, especially in rural Ontario, that we won't be able to afford it. There are a lot of concerns with individual wells and we'll have to look at those at a later date in another bill.

The member for Simcoe North spoke well about this bill and I think he brought a lot of things to light. I'm looking forward to all three parties supporting this bill when it comes to a vote.

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I also found the comments by the member for Simcoe North interesting. I do think we need to remind ourselves of how we got to the need for this new bill. Many people who are watching perhaps don't understand that education changes in this province have not been done by educators but by politicians. Health care changes have been done not by health care providers but by politicians. The change in the water of Ontario was done not by engineers from the Ministry of the Environment but by politicians.

There are some things engineers do that they test by actually building models. If you're going to design a car muffler, you build a car muffler and see how it sounds. If you're going to design a nuclear bomb, you don't build a nuclear bomb and set it off and then take it back to the shop to see how it works. You model it. You do computer models; you do approaches to it. I would suggest that Ontario would have been different had the approach not been, "Let's change everything." There's a model I like very much that says if you want to truly understand something, try to change it. There were massive changes made to the water system in Ontario. Quite frankly, before 1995 no one thought about the water and there were not major problems with it that we were aware of. In 1995 and following, there were massive cuts done to the Ministry of the Environment that caused people to question the water.

I would like to humbly suggest that in future an approach to change be to make haste slowly and to look carefully at a change and that a change should not be done strictly for budgetary reasons: "We can save a lot of money by not testing water," "We can save a lot of money by closing all the labs" etc.

I would like to suggest more openness, where there actually would have been consultation with the experts in the field rather than a financial decision that has brought about the urgency for this bill to now be passed.

Certainly, this bill is supported by us, but there really shouldn't have been a need for this massive change.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Simcoe North now has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr Dunlop: I do appreciate the responses from everyone: the members for Thunder Bay-Atikokan, Beaches-East York, Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound and Prince Edward-Hastings.

I'll just basically repeat what I've said earlier: what happened in Walkerton can never happen again, and this bill will in fact work in implementing close to 50 of the 93 recommendations made by Justice O'Connor.

I think we, the members from rural Ontario—at least in my part of the province—take the water quality and the clean water in our lakes, rivers and wells very seriously. I'm really pleased with what we've seen occurring over the last four or five years with remedial action plans. I know we've done a great job in the Severn Sound Environmental Association cleaning up, removing a part of Georgian Bay as one of the environmental hot spots on the Great Lakes. We're very proud of that, all the communities that have worked together, the province and the federal government. It's a great project.

I'm pleased that we've been able to get some substantial money from the Ministry of the Environment through Minister Witmer, and she was there, for the groundwater monitoring of the volumes. I think it was about $600,000 in testing for that. That was part of her $10-million project, which I think is the largest groundwater monitoring project in the province's history; and of course the healthy futures program, which protected a lot of water at the wellheads and gave best-management practice plans to a number of farms throughout a number of the watersheds that are in my riding. I'm pleased at that.

I'd ask that we take this very seriously as we go through the hearings. I'd call on all members of the Legislature to support Bill 195, the Safe Drinking Water Act.

The Acting Speaker: The floor is now open for further debate.

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): I rise to speak on Bill 195, the Safe Drinking Water Act, with both a sense of positive direction that has been finally brought to bear two and a half years after Walkerton and also with a great deal of sadness that we are now, in a reactive way, forced by an inquiry to say that a government has to bring in a Safe Drinking Water Act to protect our drinking water for the future.

I say this because, first of all, we must remember why we're bringing in this legislation at this time. I think remembering that shows we didn't have a proactive approach in this province in protecting environment and water. We thus have to have now a reactive approach, after tragic consequences of very poor planning when it came to cuts that were made in the Ministry of the Environment.

When you take a ministry, such as the Ministry of the Environment, that has a very specific public—if you want to call it, protecting the public interest—and you cut it to the extent that it was cut, it shows fundamentally that the public interest is not on the agenda of what this government did in the mid-1990s. Today the Ministry of the Environment still receives less funding than Bill Davis provided to the ministry in 1976. I believe, as Justice O'Connor says, that those cuts, in part, have been to blame for the consequences of the Walkerton tragedies.

This bill does provide for a number of suggestions or a number of regulations that will protect drinking water. One of the fundamental key recommendations in reversing—because that's what this is: it's reversing this government's neglect of our drinking water. It's an attempt to reverse it. What we haven't done in this bill is the source protection. Source protection is fundamental to ensuring safe drinking water. This is the third of four legislative instalments that have arisen from Justice O'Connor's recommendations, and this act does provide a framework for matters concerning the treatment and distribution of drinking water in Ontario.

One of the things that is important and that I believe I have yet to see is one of the recommendations in part two of Justice O'Connor's report that states, "The provincial government should ensure that programs relating to the safety of drinking water are adequately funded." The government has yet to make that financial commitment to ensure the appropriate implementation of this Safe Drinking Water Act.

My colleague from Thunder Bay-Atikokan spoke about the concern with privatization. Bill 195 does not prohibit municipalities from selling off their water and sewer systems. I understand this was one of the more disturbing changes in the draft of the bill that was sent out for public consultation this summer. That consultation draft included a provision that would have ensured that municipalities would still have a legal responsibility to ensure clean water even if they sold it off to the private sector. This provision has been eliminated from Bill 195.

There is an ideological bent the Conservatives have, and that is that privatization is a panacea to all the problems. Privatization is not a panacea. Often there has to be a thoughtful approach about what the role of government is and what the role of the private sector is. In my view, this government is of the view that privatization is the answer to all of the problems.

Probably what concerns me more is that in this the government has consistently talked about cost-cutting. In this area, particularly with the cost of the Walkerton tragedy, it shows that the government was probably very short-sighted; so short-sighted that cutting the Ministry of the Environment was a cost-saving when in actual fact it wasn't a cost-saving, because the consequences of those cuts indeed have a great cost long term. Probably the economic impact of the Walkerton water tragedy is estimated at more than $64 million. That cost, though, doesn't include the tragic cost of lives. You can't possibly provide any estimate on what that is.

I've dealt with this on many occasions in this House. When we talk about source protection, for instance, in my riding we have a huge hazardous waste landfill. It was fast-tracked in 1997 through order in council. It did not go through the previously lengthy procedure of environmental assessments with public hearings and all of those things because we had to fast-track this, or at least the government wanted to fast-track it at that time. So we have a huge site. It says right in the review that was done that in the long term there is going to be a potential contamination of the groundwater. We have a site that is over 300 acres. They bought another 1,000 acres. It's huge.

What's even worse about this site is that we are still the only jurisdiction in North America that hasn't moved to treat hazardous waste before we landfill it. We simply dig the hole and just dump it into the ground. That site has had some problems. There was a leak in the site and they had to put in a remediation of sorts. What the manager told me was that they now have to pump the groundwater upwards so the contamination doesn't go down, and they have to do it in perpetuity. What does "perpetuity" mean? That it's irreparable. That's my understanding of what that means.

Where is this site? It's close to the Great Lakes. It has a great aquifer underneath, of course, that's there, and do you know what? When I have brought it up to the various Ministers of the Environment since I've been in this House, there has been an indifference to this. It's quite astonishing. There is no political will to change the regulations to ensure we don't have something that's worse than Walkerton in that area, long-term. It is so nearsighted. I cannot for the life of me understand why there is no action here.

Unfortunately the costs of the Walkerton tragedy, both in human life and in financial cost, have been huge. Why? Because there has been a narrow approach, a very narrow approach to the governing of this province. What do we have in my riding? It's happening now. There is potential, long-term, for a tremendous environmental impact that's there and the government seems to be reluctant to do anything. They just stand there and say, "We're going to review it again," even though the Environmental Commissioner has spoken on this. Here we are talking about a water source. We're saying that it will be impossible to clean up that mess because it is so large.

Do you know what else is even worse? Most of that hazardous waste is coming from outside the province. We're in the business of hazardous waste, apparently. It's cheap to do hazardous waste in Ontario because in every other jurisdiction it costs money to treat it so it's less toxic it before you landfill it. But we wouldn't want that in this province because we want to be a haven for hazardous waste for some reason that I fundamentally cannot understand. I have attempted on numerous occasions to have the Minister of the Environment address this very serious issue because I think that's the responsibility of government. It's to protect the public interest and public health and safety before there are tragic consequences from the lack of political will to move forward.

One of the areas that really concerns me, not so much this bill, because this bill was forced on the government, as I said, after two and a half years, and they had no option but to bring it in—and again, the responsibility that the government must shoulder as being partly the cause of that tragic, tragic consequence must be something that I don't know how they can bear.

One of the issues is about source water protection, because the Safe Drinking Water Act is completely silent on those issues relating to the first barrier of drinking water protection. I wonder, if there are issues in that source of drinking water, whether at that time they will move to deal with some of the huge issues that I certainly have in my riding regarding the landfill that is there and that is, as I said, in the Dark Ages of regulation relative to any other jurisdiction on the continent. When it comes to source water protection, you don't just protect water because you bring in strict regulation. It has to have what you call a multi-barrier approach to drinking water protection, again emphasizing source protection as the logical first step in building a drinking water regimen. The Ontario Medical Association suggests that the bill should not be delivered without laying the essential foundation of source protection first. When Commissioner O'Connor tabled this groundbreaking report in May, he stressed that the key to avoiding drinking water contamination was protecting drinking water sources. We're very concerned that a key recommendation such as this is missing from this current proposal.

The government has had a great deal of time for soul-searching and thoughtful approach to begin rectifying the mistakes that were made, and yet it seems to be at a snail's pace. They were very, very quick when it came to cutting, when it came to slashing without consideration of what the consequences were going to be, but they appear to be at a snail's pace when it comes to the remediation, to fixing up some of those mistakes they made in the past.

I don't know what the rationale is. I know that the notion of saving money—I read a book called The Cult of Efficiency. The cult of efficiency is that efficiencies are an end in and of themselves. It's not a means to an end; it's an end. In other words, if we can save some money somewhere, it doesn't matter what the consequences are going to be in the saving of that money. As long as we can do that, that's fine. It's an end in itself, without balancing the values of what a government is here for, of why legislators and people who represent the public at this level are here. It's not just about cost-cutting. It's about understanding what the consequences are going to be. You have to have that balance.

Efficiencies without effectiveness—what does "efficiency" mean? Does "efficiency" mean that we're going to cut the ministry, that it's going to be efficient, but then the effectiveness of being able to monitor—we have cut a tremendous number of monitoring wells in this province. I believe the monitoring wells went from 730 to 240. That's 500 water monitoring stations cut. That's efficiency, but is it effectiveness? I don't think so. Is it good government? I don't think so. Efficiency is not a panacea, even though we use that word. Politicians love that word because that word somehow gives the impression that you're doing everything right. But efficiency without values, efficiency without understanding what the long-term consequences are going to be to human health and to human life, in my opinion, is a cult. I agree with the writer of The Cult of Efficiency. We can have the most efficient hospital in the world without any patients. It would be really efficient. It wouldn't cost very much. But is it effective? This Safe Drinking Water Act is a result of efficiencies that were not in place, which led to the Walkerton inquiry that forced the government to finally say, "You know what? Our drinking water is important. Our environment is important."

We still hear today this thing about Kyoto, for instance, and we say, "Oh no, you can't sign on because you don't know this, that and the other thing." The Kyoto Protocol is a target and it's an agreement to say we've got to cut these emissions because if we don't cut these emissions, jobs are not going to be worth anything because we will not be able to live on this planet. It's very serious, and if you understood that, then you would try, instead of digging your heels in and saying, "These lobbyists are saying we shouldn't buy into Kyoto. We'll just have to find lots of reasons not to"—because we can.

We can find tremendous reasons not to do it. What I call the intellectual integrity of public service would try to find out how we can do it, not how we can't do it, because we can find more reasons not to and yet we have to try to find the reasons how to.

I was at a meeting with the local council for economic renewal and one of the discussions was how can we tap in on the opportunities provided in reducing emissions. How can we tap in economically to the benefits that would come out of the change of dealing with a new way to do business? There are opportunities there and there are other jobs created because of a change that would take place in emissions reduction and a different way to drive our cars etc.

Anyway, I would like to say in conclusion that the Liberals do support this bill, but this bill unfortunately is a consequence of a very, very tragic situation that took place two and a half years ago, and I do hope it will never happen again.

The Acting Speaker: Members may now take up to two minutes for questions or comments.

Mr Prue: It's my pleasure to rise and speak about the member for Sarnia-Lambton, who gave a very good 20-minute presentation on her party's take on this bill. I was particularly interested in the comments that came out at the beginning of the speech, when she talked about cuts to the environment. We all know that the cuts to the environment have been legendary. They've been huge. They were part of the legacy of what the members opposite like to call the previous government—that is, the Mike Harris regime—when in a swath and with a cavalier attitude, hundreds of people were cut from the environment department. Hundreds of people who were out there to test the wells and the water were summarily let go and were never replaced by anything other than a few private sector labs.

In fact, what surprised me and what I was impressed by most from the speech was that less money is being spent on the environment today by the ministry than was spent in the time of Bill Davis way back in 1976. Those, I guess, were halcyon days, days when all of us looked at Ontario as a place to live and a place to grow and all that stuff, and certainly not what has happened today. The cuts are very much to blame for what happened at Walkerton. In fact, in spite of what the members opposite might say about the Koebel brothers, I would think the cuts had far more to do with what actually happened in Walkerton than the misdeeds of two brothers.

But what also impressed me with the member's speech was her talk about waste disposal and about the way we continue in this society to bury our garbage in dumps, with all the leachate problems from them and the flow of the leachate out into our drinking water. Surely, as a society, we need to deal with our waste disposal in much better ways than that. I commend her for what she has said, and when I get a chance to speak to this issue myself, I would also like to talk about those dumps and the leachates that are causing problems to our water.

Mr Johnson: I just wanted to add my comments to the debate tonight and particularly to mention the debate by the member from Sarnia-Lambton. Indeed she touched on many things in this bill, the Kyoto accord, and I wasn't sure if the McLeod-McGuinty leadership wrote her notes on that or whether she got them directly from Ottawa, but they were the party line on that. I guess if I were going to respond to that, I would just say to her that if I was trying to sell her a car, I assume the she'd just say, "Yes, I want to buy it, Bert," and it wouldn't matter how much it cost or whether it had tires on it or anything else. She also touched on the landfill at Sarnia, the high-level one.

But I did want to raise the point that if it was just because of Walkerton that we were bringing this safe drinking water bill in, I wouldn't support it. If it wasn't good legislation and if wasn't a good place to go, then I wouldn't support it, but I think it is. I think that the people of Ontario deserve to be able to know that when they turn on the tap, the water is safe. That is what this bill is intended to do. It touches on a few things, and I just wanted to comment on the framework that the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound is bringing forward and that a colleague of mine, Vince Judge, the mayor of North Perth, is on it. I am glad that he will bring a perspective to this of small communities on communal wells. I just wanted to add those comments.

Mrs McLeod: I, too, want to underscore a very important point that my colleague has brought out in this debate, and that is the underfunding by the Harris-Eves government of the whole issue of water and sewer management, and indeed the entire Ministry of the Environment. To quote again what she has read into the record, "Today the Ministry of the Environment still receives less funding than Bill Davis provided to the ministry in 1976." I would submit, along the the lines of my colleague's arguments, that this government's agenda has basically not changed very much. I commented earlier this evening on how we still see the emphasis on privatization running through this very bill. Despite the concerns that Justice O'Connor had expressed about the dangers in having privatized water and sewer systems, the government is still looking at private labs. As they privatize the labs, they are still, in this bill, looking at private water monitoring. They are still looking at the ability of the municipalities to sell their systems to the private sector. I think they are still looking at how they can cut or reduce costs.

My colleague has touched on the fact that rates for water may increase: they could double; they could triple. It doesn't seem to bother Mr Eves very much. However, it was a very real concern to Justice O'Connor, and Justice O'Connor said that the government should be looking to ensure that the rates for safe drinking water don't become prohibitive for people.

The whole issue of what it's going to cost to provide water is directly related to how much it's going to cost the municipalities to provide the infrastructure for safe drinking water, and whether or not that infrastructure is going to lead to higher rates for individuals is dependent again on whether this government is actually prepared to put some money into safe drinking water. Despite the fact that Justice O'Connor has clearly outlined the costs involved in providing safe drinking water, there is no evidence in this bill that the government has committed to meet that funding obligation.

The Acting Speaker: Just before I go to the next speaker, we have at least three discussions going on on the government side. If you could just either keep it down or take them outside the chamber, that would be really appreciated.

Sorry, the member for Timmins-James Bay.

Mr Bisson: Not a problem, Mr Speaker. I know the only conversation you care about is the one that's about to happen here. Sorry, it's just one of those nights; I've got a cold.

Anyway, I want to say to the member from Sarnia-Lambton that I agree with most of what she said and specifically the point she was trying to make, which is that much of what we have to deal with in regard to the tragedy of Walkerton quite frankly has been as a result of many of the decisions this government has made, and specifically the large cuts that happened at the Ministry of the Environment after 1995. The member reminded us that after 1995 we had about 50% cut in both the operational dollars and staff levels of the Ministry of the Environment, and when you make those kinds of cuts at the Ministry of the Environment, it means that people who run the ministry have got to make some decisions. They've got to make decisions about what they can and they can't do, and there were a number of things that they couldn't do when it came to water testing. Again, much of what was the result in the tragedy of Walkerton is because of the decisions of this government to curtail much of the activity that the ministry was involved with when it came to water testing. I think she's right in that.

So yes, the government is bringing forward a bill to try to deal with this, but I just want to agree with the member: I think we can't forget that much of why we're here is because the Tories messed up in the first place. If the Tories hadn't done what they did when they ran in here in 1995 as the common sense revolutionists and decided to cut 50% of the ministry and cut 50% of the staff and do away with all that red tape that they talk about, that they say is a nuisance, much of this wouldn't have happened, because what we begin to realize after awhile is that regulation is not exactly as the Tories would purport it to be, which is just red tape and a hindrance to business, a hindrance to whatever; it's there to protect people from the kinds of things that happened in Walkerton. I thought the member from Lambton made some very good points and I agree with her on that particular point.

Interjections.

The Acting Speaker: We'll all wait until you two are done.

The member for Sarnia-Lambton now has up to two minutes to respond.

Ms Di Cocco: I want to thank the member for Beaches-East York for his kind comments.

To the member from Perth-Middlesex, I just want to say that my comments are not about a party line; they're about a level of values and about what I believe. I say that fundamentally because unfortunately I believe that in this House too many times it is only ideology and not about what one believes. It's important that I put on the record that it is about my values. That's why I say the things that I do.

I thank the member from Thunder Bay-Atikokan. Again, the whole notion is that the reason that we're here today speaking to this bill has a lot to do with mistakes, mistakes because of a tremendous underfunding of a ministry that was to protect the public. It is unbelievable that a ministry that important has funding that is less than in 1976 under Bill Davis. I agree with her that the commitment to safe drinking water is suspect, because the government has to put their money where their mouth is, and unfortunately we have the rhetoric, but we don't have the dollars to follow to assist, as stated in the inquiry report.

The member from Timmins-James Bay also spoke about the cuts that had a long-term impact. So I say that this legislation is an attempt to reverse this government's neglect of our drinking water and of our environment. I certainly hope that we can at some point in time begin to reverse it.

The Acting Speaker: The floor is open for further debate. I believe the rotation is over here; that's what I'm being advised. So if you'll take your seat and you'll take your seat—you might think we're going to debate this, but we aren't. You're not getting the floor. The member for Kitchener Centre, however, is.

Mr Wettlaufer: Thank you, Speaker. I appreciate that.

I'm delighted to have this opportunity to discuss what I think to be a fairly strong piece of legislation, the proposed Safe Drinking Water Act that was introduced on October 29 by the Honourable Chris Stockwell, Ontario's Minister of the Environment.

Our government, the Ernie Eves government, takes the issue of the safety and protection of Ontario's drinking water very seriously. We are committed to ensuring that Ontario has and enforces the best and toughest clean water policies in the world. And make no mistake: we are committed to passing this important legislation as soon as possible.

One of the reasons that the proposed bill is so strong is that its roots are firmly grounded in the solid recommendations made by Commissioner O'Connor last May in part two of the Report of the Walkerton Inquiry. He made 93 recommendations regarding the safe delivery of drinking water in his part two. It is this government's intent to implement all of them.

A second reason the proposed bill is so strong is that it reflects this government's commitment to consult with key stakeholders and the public on the technical details concerning the implementation of the proposed Safe Drinking Water Act. Some of this consultation has already taken place through postings on the Environmental Bill of Rights registry. Through these postings and other consultations, the common thread of partnership has been woven into the very fabric of this proposed legislation.

Our government has already made reporting of all adverse water results a legal requirement. Regulations 459/00 and 505/01 require that information, including the water testing results, be made available to the public within the next day by the owner and municipality. It also requires that laboratories and owners report all adverse water results immediately to the ministry and to the local medical officer of health.

Key components of the Safe Drinking Water Act as proposed by O'Connor include mandatory licensing of laboratories by the ministry and mandatory accreditation for all testing parameters, authority to establish drinking water standards, and a mandatory requirement to establish an advisory council to advise the minister on standards.

The proposed Safe Drinking Water Act links directly to recommendation 67 of the report. Within recommendation 67, Commissioner O'Connor made several key observations. One of those observations identified the need to establish the advisory council on standards. During this debate, I will focus my comments on the Advisory Council on Drinking Water Quality and Testing Standards and the legislative authority to establish several standards regarding the distribution, treatment and monitoring of drinking water.

The implementation of the drinking water standards can be related to a number of key recommendations made in part two of Commissioner O'Connor's report. In his recommendations, he outlines what he believes, and we agree, are the government's responsibilities in this critical area.

Some of those key recommendations relating to drinking water standards state:

"The provincial government should continue to be responsible for setting legally binding ... standards" through regulation. That was his recommendation 24.

The second one is, "In setting drinking water quality standards for Ontario, the Minister of the Environment should be advised by an advisory council on standards." That was his recommendation 25.

Third, "The advisory council on standards should have the authority to recommend that the provincial government adopt standards for contaminants that are not on the current federal-provincial agenda." That was recommendation 26.

Fourth, "All municipal water providers in Ontario should have, as a minimum, continuous inline monitoring of turbidity, disinfectant residual, and pressure at the treatment plant, together with alarms that signal immediately when any regulatory parameters are exceeded. The disinfectant residual should be continuously or frequently measured in the distribution system. Where needed, alarms should be accompanied by automatic shut-off mechanisms." That was his recommendation 36.

Fifth, the drinking water protection regulation "should be modified to require standard protocols for the collection, transport, custody, labelling, testing, and reporting of drinking water samples, and for testing all scheduled contaminants, that meet or better the protocols in standard methods." That was his recommendation number 39.

As mentioned earlier, a number of Commissioner O'Connor's comments regarding the establishment of an advisory council on standards are also nested with his overarching recommendation number 67. The proposed advisory council on drinking water quality and testing standards will be composed of a blue-ribbon team of experts who understand both the spirit and law of our drinking water protection regulations. Its functions, to be outlined in the terms of reference, will include consultation and providing advice on policy, procedures and standards. The council will be visible in Ontario's communities and will actively seek public input.

The advisory council on drinking water quality and testing standards will be a council with clout. It will be supported by a strong regulatory regime. While setting high environmental standards for our drinking water is critical, the standards alone are not sufficient to ensure compliance. To ensure compliance, waterworks owners, accredited operating authorities and labs must report prescribed adverse test results immediately to the Ministry of the Environment and the medical officer of health.

Through the proposed advisory council on drinking water quality and testing standards, the government will provide both municipal and non-municipal waterworks facilities with the information they need to comply with these stringent requirements. As the council will also have a mandate to protect, to provide advice and consult with the public on our standards and regulations, they will be in an excellent position to actively ensure that Ontario's standards reflect the most up-to-date information and practices, and that these standards are consistently applied and enforceable. An advisory council will provide a broader range of expertise in the provincial standard-setting process and allow the province to obtain more assistance at little cost in this critical area.

We will also continue to seek out ways to keep the public informed about water quality, including the use of electronic systems, such as the Ministry of the Environment's Web site, which currently includes up-to-date information on adverse water quality on a site-by-site basis across Ontario. We will soon be announcing details of an advisory committee which has been established to guide the development of a framework to implement Justice O'Connor's recommendations on watershed-based source protection planning.

Also concerning source protection: in June of this year, this government announced an additional $5-million investment in 2002-03 for groundwater studies to support the development of source water protection plans. That's a total now of $19.3 million since November 1998. I believe the proposed drinking water distribution, treatment and monitoring standards proposed in the Safe Drinking Water Act, combined with an advisory council on standards, will lead to even greater environmental protection.

The Safe Drinking Water Act is a forward-looking piece of legislation that also reflects our commitment to transparency and public consultation. I urge members to support this progressive bill.

The Acting Speaker: Questions and comments?

Mr Parsons: As I said several minutes ago, certainly this bill goes a long way to address the Safe Drinking Water Act, but as a rural member, the fact that they have woefully neglected the protection of our water is a significant and major difficulty. We are seeing in rural Ontario continued energies that are detrimental to our water. I would suggest that the practice of cities of shipping garbage out and burying it in our fields is detrimental to us.

Each member has a role, not to protect the water in their riding but to protect the water in Ontario. Garbage dumps have a tremendous record of leaching into the ground, sometimes in the short term. Now we have technology that delays it over a number of years, but it will still come and haunt us, or perhaps not us but our children, grandchildren or great-grandchildren. To wilfully neglect that is to weaken what could otherwise have been a decent bill.

We have seen initiative. We have seen the Ministry of Agriculture put forward a program that would provide farmers with incentives to protect the groundwater. There was funding that encouraged them to buy no-till agricultural equipment, funding that allowed them to replace septic systems, funding that allowed them to build shelters over manure piles for awhile—all things that didn't benefit the farmer as much as they benefited the environment. The Ministry of Agriculture put this in place and allowed farmers to spend the money, knowing that it would better the water protection of all Ontario, and then retroactively came back about a week or two weeks ago and said, "Well, you can't spend as much as we told you you could spend. We won't fund any projects that were started before June 28. We won't pay for this equipment. We capped that at $5,000." Here we have farmers trying to protect the water, and this government encouraged them and then reneged on their commitments to the people of Ontario for clean water.

Mr Bisson: I listened somewhat to the comments made by the member across—I forget the riding.

Mr Wettlaufer: Kitchener Centre.

Mr Bisson: Kitchener Centre. I'm sorry, I should know the name of the riding. It's covered here with a bunch of books and stuff.

I just want the member to comment on a couple of things. I agree with you that there are a number of things in this legislation that are quite frankly a step forward. I don't think anybody in this Legislature argues that what's contained in this bill is part of what Justice O'Connor asked to have happen when it comes to the issue of making sure we have safe, clean drinking water in the province of Ontario. But what I want to hear the member talk about is why as a government member, when his government was first elected in 1995—because he came here in the class of 1995, and I remember well that he was one of the members who cancelled the leaking underground storage tank program that was put in place by Marilyn Churley, the then Minister of Consumer and Corporate Relations, which is exactly one of those issues that deals with contaminated water—I want to know why he as a government member cut the CURB program, another one of the programs that was put in place by the provincial government of Bob Rae to deal with clean drinking water.

He was a member of the government. I don't remember if he was a member of that committee, but I know he was a member of the government that voted to repeal the green planning act that was put in place by the NDP government by then Minister Dave Cooke that dealt with much of what issues of planning are and also, to an extent, how it affects water. I want to know why he was a member of a government that voted in favour of cutting by 70% the funding for the conservation authorities in the province of Ontario. We all know that conservation authorities play a very large role when it comes to ensuring that the groundwater is made safe.

So I just want to ask the member by way of these opportunities that we get for questions and comments to comment on those points of why he would, as a member of the Conservative government, have voted against all those initiatives that protected water in the first place.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I was drawn into this discussion by the member from Kitchener Centre.

This is a comprehensive bill to address the issues from the Justice O'Connor commission report. It's my understanding that 50 of the 93 recommendations in the O'Connor part two report have been addressed.

But I was drawn even more intensely to—the act authorizes inspections of drinking water systems and laboratories. You can't legislate against stupidity, but in the case of the Koebels, clearly the case had been made there. I would say to you that I think of all issues about my riding of Durham—and I'm meeting this week with the members from the Fralicks Beach Shel's Wood Water Co-op in Port Perry. This is a specific case, as most members here would know, that is inherent upon—this is a co-op where they have about 60-some homes, and those homes are all off a common well in the area. It's my understanding that if it weren't for Minister Stockwell's intervention, they would have had $8,000 a year in charges on tests when this well—I lived there. In fact, my home was there for some time before I was elected here, because I can't afford to live there now. The fact is—

Interjection.

Mr O'Toole: I couldn't afford it now because $8,000—can you imagine my constituents and their concern about it? Their wells have not been tested negatively and now they have to have these tests to ensure that the tests are negative.

I think that our Premier, Ernie Eves, and Minister Stockwell have fully assured the people of Ontario that this province will have the safest drinking water. I put to the people of Ontario, what is the cost at the end of the day? That's what we should be considering here.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): Do I still have two extra minutes? Do we have another rotation?

Hon Brad Clark (Minister of Labour): Yes, go ahead, rotate.

Mr Sergio: Well, if it weren't the member for Kitchener Centre, I would perhaps reconsider.

I do indeed concur and sympathize with a lot of the remarks made by the member, but let me say to the member and the members of the government that if indeed we have the basis for a strong bill here, it will not be complete until we have the bill approved, and until it includes all the other recommendations that this side of the House is proposing and all the recommendations from Justice O'Connor. There are some key points missing in the legislation as it has been proposed. I'm not saying—

Hon Mr Clark: What have you got against it?

Mr Sergio: No, you'll have to wait to hear that when I do my 20 minutes or so and you hear my comments, but let me say that this is a beginning. As the government knows, if they really want to make this bill watertight, they'd better go back and reread Justice O'Connor's reports, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, the OMA—the Ontario Medical Association of Ontario—and other agencies—

Hon Mr Clark: Did you read it?

Mr Sergio: Yes, I have read it, and you will hear my comments—because you cannot provide safe drinking water to the people of Ontario until you provide that at the sources. I can tell the minister—unfortunately, the minister is here and he keeps yapping about whether I've read the bill—that the key recommendation is not in the bill as you have provided it. That is one key recommendation—

Hon Mr Clark: Did you read the Walkerton report?

Mr Sergio: Mr Minister, if you don't want to listen—it's a recommendation by Justice O'Connor, and you have failed to include it in this piece of legislation.

The Acting Speaker: The member for Kitchener Centre now has up to two minutes to respond.

Mr Wettlaufer: I'd like to thank the members for Prince Edward-Hastings, Timmins-James Bay, Durham and York West for participating.

I think it's important to point out what I had said earlier, that earlier this year, in June, the government announced an additional $5-million investment for ground-water studies to support the development of source water protection plans, bringing it to a total of $19.3 million in the last four years.

The member for Timmins-James Bay: I guess I would like to draw his attention to the fact that his government spent $10 billion in excess of revenue each year for five years. That's $1,000 for every single man, woman and child in this province. They had their priorities. The people of Ontario had their priorities, and they expected a government to be a little bit more responsible fiscally. When we came to power in 1995, we attempted to do the right things.

The situation in Walkerton would never have arisen had it not been for the gross negligence of a couple of people by the name of Koebel. This started long before this government ever came into power. This continued through the Peterson government of the Liberals and the Rae government of the NDP.

Hon Mr Clark: It started in 1978.

Mr Wettlaufer: It started in 1978. It would have continued, unfortunately, through this government's mandate if this had not taken place, this terrible tragedy in Walkerton. As a result of the tragedy in Walkerton, Justice O'Connor has made his recommendations, and this government is committed to carrying out every single one of those 110 recommendations.

The Acting Speaker: The floor is open for further debate.

Mr Sergio: I'll try and use my few minutes to make some key points on the major points of Bill 195. Sometimes we get wrapped up in our presentation and we forget some of the important things that we want to say or important points that we want to address on various legislation.

Let me say at the outset that I will be voting in support of this proposed legislation. But of course, I would be very ecstatic to say, "Yes, I'm supporting it wholeheartedly because it contains every recommendation of Justice O'Connor's report; it meets the approval of every agency and municipality." The opposition says, "No, it does not do that." We have concerns. I think the public has concerns. The various agencies have concerns. But having said that, we have to support it.

It is two and a half years late. It's got some good recommendations that stem from Justice O'Connor's report, and I'm pleased to see that the bill is here for some very limited debate. But I hope that the Premier and members on the government side will take to heart what we have to say on this side, that indeed they will go back and say, "You know, there is a lot of concern here." If we propose to make this particular bill indeed the Safe Drinking Water Act, then I think we have to include these particular key points, which I will try and address during my presentation.

As I was saying before, just in case I run out of time and I forget to make those salient points that are missing in the legislation, what are they? Raw water supply is not addressed in the bill, and I think that's a key point: if we cannot address the raw water supply, then it means down the line we're going to have problems. Source water protection: if we cannot have a set of regulations, standard laws, that will protect our water at source, then we're going to have problems later on. Sale of water: we're going to have a problem in the future if the government insists on going on with the sale of Ontario water.

This bill is silent on the one third of staff they have cut. The bill is silent on staff and resources, which means funding. We've been saying that. Our leader, Dalton McGuinty, has been saying that for a long time, that you cannot provide protection through the Ministry of the Environment, not only on drinking water, when you cut one third of staff and millions from the environmental budget. So I believe that is important and it's not in the bill.

I don't know how they're going to address cost. How are they going to recoup and who is going to pay? We have to keep in mind that it is going to cost absolutely hundreds of millions of dollars, and it's something that this government must address and must address heavily, very actively, progressively and, if I may say, soon, without falling on the backs of the smaller municipalities, because we know where it's going to end up: on the shoulders of the individual consumer.

Those are, very quickly, some of the things of terrible importance, and in going through the bill I have found they're missing. As I said before, these are key elements that Justice O'Connor has addressed in the report. Protecting the water at source is something that AMO, the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, said, "You cannot send this bill forward unless you address the problem at the source," and they're not doing that. The Ontario Medical Association says that you cannot say you are providing safety for the health of Ontarians through the drinking water unless you take care of water at source. That is why it's important.

Bill 195 was introduced this past October. In doing so, the government has been trying to frame on a comprehensive basis, but it's missing many of those ingredients, the whole report of Justice O'Connor. We not only recognize the importance of the recommendations of Mr O'Connor, but we recognize fully—Dalton McGuinty, our leader, has said this many times—that it's something we cannot fool with. We're not going to accuse the Conservatives and say, "What happened at Walkerton is directly your fault." Perhaps it was brewing long before. But as the report says, they had plenty to do with it, and they had plenty of warning as well from all sides: all sides of the opposition, the various agencies, people working in the ministry. You cannot have a different effect, you cannot have a different result, when you cut the funding and the manpower so deeply, and then on top of that, in five years you have cut 500 monitoring stations. You just cannot believe that everything is going to be the same, that it's going to be rosy, that the water is going to be the same, that the water is going to be checked, and that when you open your tap you're going to get the same water that you were getting before or the water that you expect to get. It is just impossible.

We support this bill because it's got some of the recommendations. It includes some of the things we've been saying to produce safe drinking water. But we hope that while supporting the initial bill here, whenever the government decides, they will do it better, they will go ahead and include some of the other things that not only we have been saying but that Justice O'Connor has been saying as well.

Not only that; I think given the particular situation very recently and the ineptness of the government—what did they do? They appointed a commissioner. We have all seen the report of that commissioner as well, with great reservation with respect to the water conditions, saying that perhaps it's even worse than before. Having said that, I will not be going into the complete report because I only have about 10 minutes left.

The protection of drinking water: while we support the intent, while we support the elements of the bill, as Liberals we request, on behalf of making this bill better, on behalf of the people of Ontario, to include some key points. These key points, as I said, we have already raised. They are there to be used, to be incorporated and to be put forward. We demand that these key points—two or three I've mentioned. It is not to privatize the water and sewer system. It is absolutely not a benefit for the consumers, for the business people in Ontario. I think our position has been, and we would like to make this clear, that there is always a factor, there is always a part, a role that our businesses, our industries, our expertise, our expert people have. They have a role in that. But publicly, water and sewers must be in our domain. We cannot concede on that. We must have control; the public must have control. We have well-qualified individuals and agencies, and as I said, they have a role to play. But privatizing the entire thing—it absolutely does not benefit the people, the consumers of Ontario.

Financial support is something we would like to see. Financial support for the water and sewer infrastructure is important. If I have time, I'll read from the report from Justice O'Connor. It will cost, if not in the billions, in the multi-millions of dollars to bring up to par and repair infrastructure, especially in those municipalities where the infrastructures are so old that I believe every one should be checked.

Important as well is affordability, affordable water rates. Not that I don't trust the capacity of the public sector, but I believe we have a responsibility to provide the people of Ontario—the seniors, the pensioners, the working-class people, industry as well—with a fair, acceptable water rate. Even Justice O'Connor said so. Again I refer to the report. I know the Premier and members of the government are well aware of the report, in which Justice O'Connor says you cannot make it a burden on the less fortunate. I think the government must be aware of that.

I am not going to attack the government for the reckless cuts, because we all know now where the cuts were made and how deep those cuts were. Even Justice O'Connor addressed the situation when he said it was the reckless cuts that have been putting public health at risk.

Finally, now we have this partial bill, if you will. They promised to include funding. This is of interest, because over two and a half years ago we had the Walkerton tragedy. We have had two and a half years of inaction from the government. In 2000, they announced they were going to take care, were going to fund programs, stuff like that. We haven't seen anything yet. We have not seen anything yet from this government to correct some of the problems that brought about the tragedy in Walkerton.

Bill 195 is practically only half, if I can say that, of going through the recommendations of Justice O'Connor. It includes and addresses only about half of Justice O'Connor's recommendations. We believe that the best and most effective way to ensure safe drinking water is at the source; we have to provide safe drinking water at the source. This is a key recommendation by Justice O'Connor. It is something we have been saying, and I do hope that indeed the government will be listening.

Costs borne by the consumer: I am a bit—I wouldn't even say irritated any more by what the Premier has said. He says, "The consumer will pay whatever it costs. If it doubles, they have to pay. If it triples, they have to pay." That assertion doesn't sit well with me, my colleagues or with the people of Ontario, especially at this particular time when we are going through the convoluted mismanagement of Ontario Hydro deregulation, Hydro One rates, if you will. That is a huge problem. When you combine the difficulty our consumers are facing with respect to high hydro bills—doubling—they cannot afford gas, electricity, water and everything else. What are we doing to our people? Are we saying, "We have to recoup the cost, and if it's going to double, you've got to pay; If it's going to triple, you've got to pay?"

Well, Mr Premier, let me say this: it's not sitting well. It is not becoming to the leader, the Premier of Ontario, when he says, "Whatever the cost will be, that's too bad. Whoever gets hurt, it doesn't matter." It does matter, because there are people out there, plenty of seniors, who can't afford paying double for one utility, that being hydro.

I didn't have a chance earlier, but I received this today. A senior couple, constituents of mine, pensioners, live in a 900-square-foot, or maybe even less, pre-war bungalow, five rooms, two bedrooms. Their last bill was $378.16. The previous one was $199. Why? How can we justify such a big jump to our seniors? These are the things that are missing.

Evidently I will not have the time to go into the rest of my presentation, but I want to say that one of the important elements of Bill 195 is its components. What are those components?

—One is to license and accredit the water labs, the technicians and so forth. That's fine. I think it is good that they all become accredited and licensed.

—Standards and distribution, treatment and monitoring of the same.

—Certification and training of the operators. I think it's high time.

—Owners' licences and certification of approval as well. That should have been done a long time ago.

—Statutory standards of care for municipalities. That is very interesting, and that must be done together with the various municipalities, especially those small municipalities where we know they don't have the manpower, the funds, and their infrastructure is—they really are in need of money.

—The Ministry of the Environment will ultimately—this is good—develop and issue an annual state-of-Ontario-drinking-water report to the Ontario Legislature, of course not only to us but to the people of Ontario.

That is why, as I said before, we are willing to support Bill 195. It includes some of those key recommendations, but what is missing so far are the other key elements included in Justice O'Connor's report. What is included at this stage is the goodwill, the basis. As my colleague the member for Kitchener Centre said, "It's solid." Well, maybe one leg is standing on solid ground, but let me tell you, unless we address the whole issue, we're going to be having holes later on. Knowing the history of the last two or three years, we don't want that to happen again, do we? I don't think so.

I would say to you, Premier, and to the members on the government side, take a second look at all the recommendations of Justice O'Connor. Make sure that when this bill goes ahead and is approved, it will do what Justice O'Connor wanted in his report, what the people of Walkerton expect us to do and what the rest of the people in Ontario expect us to do with this safe drinking water bill. After all, it's a very important need, as Justice O'Connor said. Wouldn't we say, Premier and members of the government, that water indeed is a very important need?

I would say yes, get on with it, come back with some of those exclusions and make the bill better so we can all say we have done our best.

The Acting Speaker: It's now time for questions and comments.

Mr Bisson: I listened to the comments made by my colleague in the Liberal opposition and I probably agree with most of what he has to say. But again I want to put the question to him, because the question was never really answered earlier, and that is why he thinks the government, which now purports to bring this legislation forward—and it's not bad legislation, I wouldn't argue; they see the necessity for the government to play some regulatory role and also some legislative role in making sure that we have safe drinking water—why he thinks the government, which on being elected in 1995 made all the changes it did through the Red Tape Commission, slashing and cutting regulation and red tape, as they called it, by way of moving toward privatization in the water testing field, by way of 50% cuts in the Ministry of the Environment at both staffing levels and financial levels, all of a sudden seems to have realized that maybe it has made an error, that the government probably was wrong to do what they did back in 1995 and that those things they cut were the very things we needed to make sure that drinking water in Ontario is made safe?

I'm just wondering what he thinks of the government's move back in 1996 to cut the funding of the conservation authorities of this province by almost 70%, the funding they need to make sure that groundwater is made safe—we all know, as members of the assembly who work with conservation authorities fairly regularly, that they have a very specific responsibility when it comes to water—and why this government didn't recognize that cutting their funding in 1996 by 70% would have a negative effect on the quality of drinking water in Ontario.

I'm just wondering what the member has to say about those issues because it seems to me a little bit passing strange that all of a sudden the Tories have turned a new leaf and understand that the government can, should and must play a role when it comes to preserving safe drinking water in this province.

Hon Mr Clark: I have just a couple of comments and perhaps questions to the member for Timmins-James Bay. I'm finding it curious why you would raise some of those questions when in fact it was the NDP government that actually allowed privatization of water and sewage treatment plants to occur initially. You can shake your head, but I live in Hamilton. As a matter of fact, the Hamilton Woodward Avenue sewage treatment plant went through privatization under your government. You actually allowed that to happen. You can sit there and be critical now, but in reality you allowed it to happen. If you check the record back in 1993, it was Minister Ruth Grier who eliminated the water inspector schools, where they actually taught the water inspectors how to do their job. I would just point out that it was your government that did that.

I bring that all around because the Walkerton report actually talks about this issue starting in 1978. So every government had their hand in the pie and had an opportunity to fix the problem. It just continued on and no one fixed it. We're now fixing it.

As for the member opposite and his position that they're going to support the bill in principle, with the greatest of respect, water source protection is not a part of the bill because Justice O'Connor stated very clearly it should be under the EPA. If you know anything about hydrogeology—and the member from Sarnia-Lambton would know this because she has a landfill in her community—actually looking at hydrogeology and how the water flows under the ground in an aquifer is probably the most complicated, comprehensive thing to do. In most communities in Ontario, hydrogeologists will tell you that it is incomprehensible to predict with any degree of certainty where the water will flow under the ground.

That's why we're doing a study. That's why we're asking people to look at the groundwater and find out exactly what needs to be done to ascertain where the water's moving before one would try to protect it. That seems eminently reasonable to me. I know you don't agree, but on our side we like to get things right.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): I want to compliment my colleague from York West on his comments on this bill and for pointing out some of the deficiencies in the bill. I want to bring the attention of this Legislature and particularly this government to those deficiencies that aren't addressed when it comes to a small community like Pelee Island.

I looked through the costs that are involved in bringing this bill to fruition. Under municipal costs: "All municipal water providers in Ontario should have, as a minimum, continuous in-line monitoring of turbidity, disinfectant residual, and pressure at the treatment plant, together with alarms that signal immediately when any regulatory parameters are exceeded." How is a community of fewer than 200 people on Pelee Island going to do this unless the provincial government provides the funding?

Another one under municipal costs: "Municipalities should review the management and operating structure for their water system to ensure that it is capable of providing safe drinking water on a reliable basis." I agree with that, but the community of Pelee Island has fewer permanent residents than most streets in urban municipalities in this province.

Another one under municipal costs: "The provincial government should require municipalities to have operational plans for their water systems by a date to be fixed by the provincial government." Again, this is a cost that a municipality of under 2,000 people can't afford.

"The provincial government should require all owners of municipal water systems, as condition of their licence ... to have an accredited operating agency, whether internal or external," again, something this municipality will need a great deal of assistance with.

Mr Murdoch: Again I'm up to talk about this bill. The member who just spoke was worried about the costs. I'm sure he knows, as he said, that there will be costs to small municipalities. I have many of those small municipalities in my riding also and we are concerned about the costs, but I have talked to the minister and there will be ways to address these costs. There has already been some money that has gone out to some municipalities under the legislation, under the grants we have put out. So I'm quite confident that when everything is done, when the regulations are passed, when the bill is passed, with the help of the opposition, we will be able to address these costs to small municipalities.

In the O'Connor report, he mentioned that people spend money on many things, but maybe not enough money on water. Well, people will have to pay some money for their water, for clean water, but I want to assure the member on the opposite side that this government will make sure there are funds to help out smaller municipalities. There's no doubt that is going to have to happen.

We also need the co-operation of the opposition to make sure this bill gets through and we can start working on the next bill that will come to look at the watershed: we will be looking at water there. When we get into this House, we get fighting back and forth about silly little things. I'm hoping this time, with your help, we will be able to do that and we will be able to look after the smaller municipalities. As I said, I have lots of those in my riding. As you know, Walters Falls has made some news. They have quite a problem right there, and there are very few people—only about 60 people—on the system. With this bill being introduced, I'm sure we'll be able to look after those problems. Again, when the regulations come forward, I hope we get support from the other side.

The Acting Speaker: The member for York West for up to two minutes.

Mr Sergio: Briefly, I think it's the intent of every member of the House to see that the bill goes through and represents the beginning of something that we all aspire to provide for the people of Ontario. I'm sure it's going to go through, maybe as it is but hopefully with some improvements.

I want to thank the members for Essex, Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound and Stoney Creek—the minister himself.

Just to respond to my colleague from Timmins-James Bay as to why the government is doing this at this particular time, I should say it's better late than never, perhaps because they finally believe that this is really too important to put in abeyance any further. Yes, of course, time goes fast and there is a lot of preparation, a lot of research, a lot of reports, but two and a half years is a long time and it's time that we move on.

I'm sure, to appease the concerns of the Minister of Labour, we will be supporting this bill. It is in the interest of the people of Ontario that we seal this bill as watertight as possible, delivering safe drinking water to the people of Ontario.

I have about 10 minutes. We all want to go home. I will stop right here, Mr Speaker, and I appreciate your time in the House today.

The Acting Speaker: Thank you very much. It now being after 9:30 of the clock, this House will stand adjourned until 1:30 of the clock tomorrow afternoon.

The House adjourned at 2131.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

Tuesday 5 November 2002

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mardi 5 novembre 2002

*The House met at 1330.
Prayers.*

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

ONTARIANS WITH DISABILITIES LEGISLATION

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): One year ago today, Citizenship Minister Cam Jackson introduced the Ontarians with Disabilities Act. This, by the way, is the minister who gave new meaning to the phrase "meeting with stakeholders." Many of my Conservative colleagues have said, "How is the act working? Can we have an update on it?" I'm pleased to provide that today.

Since one year ago today, of the 13 major new commitments that were promised to Ontarians with disabilities, none have been kept.

One year after appointing a new provincial advisory council, only five of 12 have been appointed—not one woman.

One year ago today, this government committed to working to launch an incentive program to get all sectors to work together to remove and prevent barriers. No program has been announced. Cam Jackson promised no new barriers. Fifty special education teachers were laid off in Ottawa, a major barrier to special-ed students.

Former Citizenship Minister Isabel Bassett committed to amend the Ontario building code. Consultation took place in the winter of 2001. The reforms were passed in the spring of this year. Not one new measure included anything on disability access.

Your government said that you would lead by example. Over the seven years, you are still working to try to make your own Web sites accessible.

As far as private industry goes, Pizza Pizza in Toronto clearly demonstrated that they will not provide access to Ontarians with disabilities.

Ontarians with disabilities say to your government, "Where's the beef?"

WIFE ASSAULT PREVENTION MONTH

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): Honourable members, I rise to remind members that November is Wife Assault Prevention Month in Ontario. This is the 17th year that we have recognized this month to highlight the gravity of domestic violence. As we increase awareness, we also underline our commitment to ending it.

Every person has the right to live in safety. The government of Ontario does not tolerate violence against women or their children. Preventing domestic violence is everyone's responsibility. We need to engage all Ontarians to end domestic violence.

Last September, this government expanded its commitment with a series of new initiatives, bringing spending for 2002-03 to more than $160 million. Since 1995, spending to combat domestic violence has increased by 70%. While this government continues to improve supports and services for women who experience violence, provincial ministries, community agencies, courts and lawmakers alone cannot solve this problem. It is a challenge that must be tackled by the whole community. We know there is more to be done, and I encourage all Ontarians to play a part in stopping violence against women and children and to help make Ontario a safer place for everyone.

A husband and father's first role is to protect his family. Let's end the abuse now.

COST OF ELECTRICAL POWER

Mr Michael A. Brown (Algoma-Manitoulin): The latest attack on our families, on our businesses and on our communities continues as the Harris-Eves government's electricity fiasco is nearly bankrupting Ontarians.

Yesterday I met with close to 200 constituents, a lot of them unable to afford to pay their electricity bills. Most of the people I met with are Great Lakes Power customers. Great Lakes Power is a private company—I repeat, private company. It was before; it still is. Great Lakes Power used to provide power to customers at very competitive rates and did so for many decades. I assume they made a profit doing it. However, the Harris-Eves government has forced Great Lakes Power rates through the roof.

Premier, you have rushed forward in this ideologically driven government without regard for the people of Ontario, and it must be reconsidered. For example, Dubreuil Forest Products has now announced layoffs. They have announced these layoffs because of a 154% increase in the price of their electricity. Russell Reid of the Algoma public school board warned of school closures, teacher layoffs and classroom cutbacks because of increases to the school system's electrical bills. Frank Buerkle of Lady Dunn Hospital says he will have to cut services just to keep the lights on. Gilles Begin of the Wawa Valu-Mart tells us that his bill has gone from $5,000 to $10,000 a month. He will not be able to keep his grocery store open.

Stop the rip-off. We need the rebates now and affordable electricity rates right now.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): I just returned from the Kimberly Rogers inquest in Sudbury. Kimberly died while pregnant and living in inhumane conditions as a result of the Conservative government's social assistance policies and cuts. I find it disturbing that a woman and her unborn child died. This government's policies likely contributed to their deaths, and Premier Eves doesn't even think the ministry responsible needs to be at the inquest. Conservative government policies are costing people their lives. Premier Eves should take responsibility for his government's mistakes, send representation from the ministry to take part in the inquest and implement the major policy changes needed to ensure that no one else dies.

Speaking of dying, have you heard the one about the homeless people who found an abandoned building and fixed it up so that they didn't have to live on the streets? All Premier Eves needs to do is sign the building over to the city of Toronto, who have agreed to turn it into affordable housing. Has he done this? No. Just as the weather is turning cold and the nights are going below freezing, the Conservative government ordered the forceful eviction of the people living there. People are freezing to death on our streets and Premier Eves still thinks investing in social programs is a joke. Nothing about the Conservative government's actions is funny.

It's time for Premier Eves to show some leadership. Invest in affordable housing. Stop the lifetime ban on social assistance, and commit right here today to sign over the Pope Squat property to the city of Toronto so they can immediately begin to build affordable housing so that more people don't die on the streets this winter.

OWEN SOUND SALMON SPECTACULAR FISHING DERBY

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): I rise in the House today to congratulate the success of an event in my riding of Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound which took place on Saturday, August 31. It was the 15th annual Owen Sound Salmon Spectacular fishing derby. Many members in this House took time to enjoy the festivities and travelled to Owen Sound for the event. I would like to thank Minister Jerry Ouellette, Morley Kells, Minister Frank Klees, Gary Carr, Joe Tascona and Ted Arnott for joining in. You all made the day more spectacular.

The 10-day event is one of the largest and longest-running fishing derbies across North America. Co-chairs of the event Fred Geberdt and Rob Wilson, the derby committee and the hundreds of volunteers are to be commended for their long, hard work and dedication throughout the year in preparation for this event.

The event is held annually by the Sydenham Sportsmen's Association, which is an active outdoor club across Ontario of which I am a proud member. The derby attracts anglers from all over North America and Europe. The proceeds go toward helping many fisheries and conservation projects, including operating the club's salmon and trout hatcheries. The success of these hatcheries includes the production of over 300,000 salmon and trout a year, all maintained through volunteer work.

The Sydenham Sportsmen's Association is to be praised for their ongoing contribution and dedication to local conservation. I look forward to next year's salmon spectacular and hope all members of this House will be able to attend the 16th annual fishing derby.

Mr Speaker, as I say, this is one of the great derbies across Canada, and I thank you for being there also.

MUNICIPAL TAXATION

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): There is a strong wind blowing from the Kawarthas, bringing the call for change, a call for a return to democracy in Lindsay, Bobcaygeon, Fenelon Falls, Omemee, Sturgeon Point and Bexley. All across the Kawarthas people are fed up with a government that didn't listen to them, that forced amalgamation on them. Former Minister Clement didn't give them a say on amalgamation.

Now they're saying they're fed up with this megacity, where their taxes have gone up 30%, 40% and 50% in these small towns. The people in Fenelon are fed up. The people in Bobcaygeon are saying that this undemocratic dictatorship out of Queen's Park never gave them a say. In fact, Minister Clement even took away their name and gave them a name they didn't want. They want a return to Victoria county. They want their identity back. They want their low taxes back. They are calling for a full-fledged referendum so they can have a say on how they're governed in those small communities. They're fed up with being dictated to by the present member, who doesn't listen to them.

We had crowds here asking to be heard and petitions from Fenelon and Bobcaygeon. There were 650 people in the local arena in Manvers saying, "We want our democracy back." They're going to get it back. We're supporting a call for a referendum in Victoria county.

Long live Victoria county—forever. Long live democracy.

STRATFORD FESTIVAL

Mr Bert Johnson (Perth-Middlesex): The 50th season of the Stratford Festival opened on April 24 with All's Well that Ends Well. As this historic season draws to an end, it's apparent that the Stratford Festival is very well indeed.

This year the Stratford Festival once again sold more than 600,000 tickets and opened a fourth theatre.

The Stratford Festival success also means success for countless bed and breakfasts, hotels, motels, restaurants and shops in Stratford and the surrounding area. Visitors to the festival account for about 12% of southwestern Ontario's tourism. They spend an estimated $12.5 million on accommodation and a total of about $170 million in the region.

This year the program was scheduled to end on November 10. However, demand for tickets was so high that they've added two extra weeks of My Fair Lady. If any members of this House have yet to make it to the performance this year, there is still time left to see Cynthia Dale recite and sing, "The rain in Spain stays mainly in the plain."

I want to take this opportunity to congratulate the management of the Stratford Festival, especially artistic director Richard Monette and executive director Antoni Cimolino, and thank everyone involved in the festival for their contributions.

HYDRO RATES

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): Murray Campbell from the Globe dubbed the government "the Seinfeld administration" because it's about nothing. These days, the government caucus is doing their best imitation of George Costanza.

People like Frank Mazzilli, Cam Jackson and Brad Clark are so worried about themselves that they're panicking. They're pushing everyone aside to get out of the way of the Ernie Eves hydro disaster. They remind me of that Seinfeld episode where a fire starts at a children's birthday party. Instead of calmly leading the children to safety, George panics. He rushes out the door, pushes the children aside, tramples his girlfriend and breaks her grandmother's arm.

Interjection: Your name is George.

Mr Smitherman: I don't have a girlfriend. When the police question George about his cowardly behaviour and knocking over a grandmother, George's excuse is, "We needed a leader." My only hope these days is that the so-called leaders rushing to abandon Ernie Eves and his hydro rate hijacking don't injure Margaret Marland when they bolt for the door.

And poor Ernie. He clearly is no longer master of his domain. The outcry against his hydro rate hijacking has gotten so bad, I hear he's got them answering the phone in the Premier's office, "Vandelay Industries."

The Ernie Eves government truly is the Seinfeld administration.

WILMOT CREEK VETERANS PROJECT

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): That's a difficult act to follow. I am pleased to rise in the House today to pay tribute to a project in the Wilmot Creek community that honours allied veterans of World War II and those who served in the Korean conflict.

The Wilmot Creek adult community has compiled the names of 201 veterans who are current or former residents. These names have been inscribed on a memorial scroll that is to be hung in a place of honour in the Wheelhouse Auditorium. The veterans in many communities are part of a living heritage, and I would like to congratulate all the residents of Wilmot Creek for their support of this project.

Special thanks are due to Madge Cadan, who first suggested the idea of the honour roll to the homeowners' association. Her committee members include Norm Baker, Frank Smith, Frank Boyle, Doreen Carpenter and others too numerous to mention. I would also like to commend David Rice and Ridge Pine Park for their contribution to the project by framing the scroll and building a memorial garden with a plaque in honour of this special purpose. Thanks also go to Bruce Hadji, president of the Wilmot Creek homeowners' association, and members of the board such as Don Bower, who supports the project enthusiastically.

The honour roll and plaque will be dedicated this Saturday, November 9, in a ceremony that will include the federal Minister of Veterans Affairs, Rey Pagtakhan, invited guests and the Wilmot Creek community. I will look forward to attending myself. This is just one of the many events taking place in my riding of Durham this weekend. All of us paid time to respect the veterans who gave their lives to support our freedoms.

VISITORS

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'm proud to have from the great riding of Essex a legislative page, Maureen Balsillie. With us today in the members' west gallery are her mother Leslie, father Doug, sister Janelle and sister Amelia. Please welcome the Balsillie family from Essex.

WEARING OF PINS

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I have two points of order relating to the same issue. Number one, November is Adoption Awareness Month and I would ask for unanimous consent to wear this multi-coloured pin to represent this month. That's the first point.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed.

DISTRIBUTION OF LETTER

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): The second point of order—and I just want some clarification on this. I came in before the Legislature opened this afternoon and distributed from me, an honourable member in this Legislature, on every member's desk a letter from me about my adoption bill, Bill 77. When I came back in I found that they had all been picked up, that the pages were ordered to collect them and I had to redistribute them, which I just did.

I want some clarification. I have done this before in the past. I am an honourable member here. I provided a letter from me to all other honourable members in this chamber and I'd like to know what the problem is.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): It is that you can do that to the members when they're here. We don't allow any member to distribute anything before because if we do that, the desks will become cluttered, with all members doing that. The only thing we do is, as you know, there is advisement relating to the Legislature to remind members for committee work. If you need to do that, you have to do it when the members are here. If they come in early and they are laid on the members' desks, we will remove them. So I would ask all members' co-operation in that. We don't allow anyone to do that. If you have gotten away with that in the past, it was only inadvertently that we didn't catch it. So I would ask all members' co-operation. If you want to distribute something, you must do it after we begin seating, not before.

Ms Churley: On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I just wanted to thank you for your ruling and to thank Mr Murdoch from the Tory caucus for distributing these to his caucus.

The Speaker: I thank the member, who is always helpful.

VISITORS

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: I'd like to bring the attention of the House to visitors up in the gallery today. They are grade 11 students from Pauline Johnson Collegiate in Brantford, my alma mater, and their teacher, Jeff Goodall. They got lost in the mall or something and that's why they're a little late, but I'd like to welcome them to the House to watch democracy in action.

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: I would like to welcome the grade 10 class from Oakwood Collegiate, who have come here today to pay us a visit. Let's welcome them as well.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): Donald and Kathleen Robertson and Martha Lewis, grandparents and aunt to our page Alexander Steele, are in the House today from Cambridge and Ingersoll. Welcome.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I would draw to the attention to the members of the House in the opposition gallery, although constituents of the Honourable Brad Clark of the riding of Stoney Creek: my partner, Denise Doyle's family, Paul and Helen Brenton and their two children, Lucas and Kelli, are here today. Welcome.

1350

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): Mr Speaker, I am rising on a point of order. The member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale referred to something about me being hit as somebody was coming through a door. I just wanted to assure the House that I'm actually very fit, capable and able and I have not sustained such an injury to which he refers.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Let's not get into it. It's OK. It was all done in fun, I believe.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO RATES

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My questions today are to the Premier and they are on a matter of the utmost importance to the people of our province, families and businesses alike: hydro.

Premier, people all across Ontario are expressing their outrage at what you have done to their hydro bills. We've heard from families, seniors on fixed incomes, small and large businesses, charities, and even legion halls who are telling us that they simply cannot afford to pay their hydro bills.

Here's a specific case. Suzanne Fairweather lives in Richmond Hill. She was laid off in April and she's trying to find work. She is struggling to make ends meet. Her hydro bill has now doubled on your watch. She is terrified that she will no longer be able to afford her house.

There are hundreds and thousands of people like Suzanne right across the province. They can't wait any longer for help. They're looking to you. You created this mess; it's up to you to take responsibility. They want to know about this rebate you've been talking about. When, Premier, are you going to help these people by providing them with a rebate?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): There are many factors that go into determining what hydro rates are. We acknowledge and we understand that there are many people across the province who are having difficulty with respect to, especially, the months of July, August and September, and the size of those bills and the amount that the rates went up. We understand that. The Minister of Energy is working with a team of individuals to produce a plan that will respond not only to the immediate situation with respect to rates but also to the intermediate and long-term solution for supply in the future as well.

Mr McGuinty: It's wonderful to hear the Premier express that he feels the pain being experienced by the people of Ontario and that he is actively pursuing some kind of a plan. Premier, why in the heck did you not prepare some kind of an intelligent, responsible plan before you let this thing unfold in the province of Ontario? You know, there was a small minority of people left in the province who assumed that somehow there was some minimum level of competence over there when it came to setting up this structure. It is non-existent.

Let me tell you about another case. The Inn of the Good Shepherd is a non-profit agency in Sarnia. They've got a client on social assistance who has a hydro bill of $600. His power is going to be shut off today. He's terrified that if he loses his power, children's aid will come and take away his children. The Inn of the Good Shepherd doesn't have enough money to help him out. The best they can do for him is to offer him a food package.

Premier, I say to you again: you created this mess. You created yet another crisis. You didn't lay the groundwork properly and the people of Ontario are paying a terrible price. I ask you again: why are you not going to help Ontarians today? Where is the rebate that they need today?

Hon Mr Eves: With respect to the specific question, I presume that the relative utility will act in a responsible fashion and the individual's power, indeed, will not be cut off.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, I have no idea why you make that assumption. Something else you had better check into: those people who are on social assistance today in the province of Ontario—you haven't made any provision whatsoever, of any kind, to help out people who find themselves on social assistance, who find themselves in dire straits as a result of one new factor you've introduced, and that's an exorbitant hydro bill. Nothing has been done on your part to help those people.

Here are a few more cases, since you seem to be unaware of what's happening on this issue. Chris Grant in Ottawa: his bill went from an average of $200 to $420 a month. Sue Clark in Ottawa, on ODSP: her bill went from $53 to $112. Mark Powell, Stoney Creek: last year's bill, $135; this year, $253. Ian McQueen, Stoney Creek: last year's bill averaged $70 a month; this year it's $180 per month. Howell Printing Co in Toronto: last year they were paying $89 per kilowatt hour; this year, $172 per kilowatt hour. People are experiencing pain as a result of your gross mismanagement and incompetence on the hydro file. These people need help, and they need it today. I ask you again, on their behalf, where is the rebate?

Hon Mr Eves: It's great to be the leader of the official opposition and take a negative point of view on every single thing that happens. I would like the leader of the official opposition to predict for the House now what the weather will be like next July, August and September. I'd like him to predict now how many megawatts of power will be coming on stream next year at this time.

The reality is that there were some 2,000 megawatts of power that Pickering was supposed to have on-line that are not on-line. The reality is that 800 megawatts of power at Bruce were off, when they were expected to be on, because of a mistake made during routine maintenance. The reality is that we had the hottest summer on record in 50 years. The reality is that rates for residential consumers between May and now have gone up about 23% on average. That is the reality. We understand that even that is too high, and we will be taking specific action to deal not only with the rebate, but with the interim and long-term supply of energy in the province as well.

ELECTRICITY SUPPLY AND DEMAND

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition):

My question is again to the Premier. The reality is that you promised us lower rates. The reality is that you failed to take the necessary and cautious steps to get this right. The reality is that the people of Ontario today are being hurt as a result of your gross mismanagement and incompetence on the hydro file. That is the painful reality.

Premier, we are now stuck in a situation where we have the worst of all worlds. We have skyrocketing hydro bills, we have a shortage of supply and we have a private sector that has effectively turned its back on you and said they wouldn't touch this situation with a 28-foot pole. You've left us with the worst of all worlds.

My question to you Premier is, now that we understand you have created a crisis in terms of a shortage of supply, what specifically is your plan to bring more supply to the province of Ontario?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): We will be delivering our plan in due course, but I want to correct a few things that he said. The leader of the official opposition—

Interjections.

Hon Mr Eves: They weren't fed today in caucus.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Member for Windsor West, come to order, please. There was patience while the leader of the official opposition asked his question. There was quiet. I'm going to insist on the other side as well. The people of the province want to hear the leader of the official opposition and the Premier, not the rest of the backbenchers yelling at each other, and if we have to throw people out, we will. They're capable of providing their own sides on the issue; they don't need the help of people shouting in their ears. Sorry, Premier.

Hon Mr Eves: The leader of the official opposition certainly will know that investment by the private sector and the energy sector is experiencing great international difficulties. According to Cambridge Energy Research Associates, in the first quarter of this year alone, 50,000 megawatts of power projects in the United States of America were cancelled or put on hold; 20,000 were cancelled outright, and 30,000 were put on hold pending changes in circumstances.

The situation we are experiencing in the province of Ontario is no different than it is in the United States of America or other places internationally at this time. We, like those other jurisdictions, will deal with the problem within our own jurisdiction.

Mr McGuinty: You tell us you're working feverishly now to develop some kind of plan to meet our supply needs. I ask you again, why did you not prepare that plan and execute it properly long before we came to this situation? Why are we desperately scrambling today to build new supply?

Here are the facts, Premier: you mismanaged Pickering. We're short some 2,000 megawatts there. We still don't have our ties in place to the province of Quebec. We're not going to get what we should be getting there. The NDP graciously cancelled any proposal we had to establish linkages with Manitoba. We find ourselves once more in a terrible crisis of shortage of supply as a result of your mismanagement. This was all able to be anticipated. You could have predicted it, Premier. I ask you again, what specifically are you going to do to bring more supply to Ontario?

Hon Mr Eves: The leader of the official opposition knows, in response to an answer to one of his first three questions, that what was supposed to be on-line was 2,000 megawatts of power at Pickering and another 800 at Bruce that was down for maintenance for tubes that were damaged during routine maintenance, and of course we needed a particularly high influx of power into this jurisdiction during the months of July, August and September because of the warmest summer on record in 50 years.

Maybe the leader of the official opposition has a great plan that is going to control temperatures in Ontario next July, August and September. I know what your plan is: your plan is to build a Beck 3, put it on-stream and create 650 megawatts of power, and take out 6,500 in coal-powered plants at the same time, leaving you with a net deficit of about 5,800 megawatts of power. That is your plan.

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (Vaughan-King-Aurora): Call an election. Take it to the people.

The Speaker: Order. The member for Vaughan-King-Aurora, come to order, please. The leader of the official opposition for his final supplementary.

Mr McGuinty: Let's see if we've got this right. The Premier blames Mother Nature for our supply problems today in the province. He blames international markets. He blames Pickering, which you happen to be responsible for, sir, ultimately. At various courses during the course of the summer you blamed Ontarians for using too much electricity. I suggest to you that what you might want to do, when it comes to assigning blame for the crisis in which we find ourselves, is take a look in a mirror. One more time, Premier, you created this mess. You have put us in a serious predicament. I ask you specifically, what are you going to do to bring more supply to the province of Ontario?

Hon Mr Eves: The only person in this Legislature assigning blame is the member sitting directly opposite. He's very good at that. You see, on this side of the House, we have to deal with the real world. We don't have Tinker Bell advising us with respect to our energy policies for the future.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Premier. May I say, it's interesting to watch Liberals and Conservatives argue back and forth about who would deregulate the most and who would privatize hydro the most.

Premier, this morning you finally admitted what everyone else in the province has known for some time: that hydro deregulation and privatization is a disaster for consumers. Your comment of, "Well, sometimes you're right and sometimes you're wrong," I think really doesn't speak to what consumers are feeling. I think your caucus members Mr Mazzilli and Mr Murdoch had it right when they said, "This is a crisis for people," because people have to pay the sky-high hydro bills. My question, Premier, is this: now that you've admitted you were wrong, will you finally do the right thing and cancel hydro deregulation and privatization?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I will give the leader of the third party this much: at least he's consistent about this issue.

Just to correct the record with respect to what was said in the scrum, what I said was, "People have to make judgment calls on the facts in front of them at the time, and there are some factors that crop up that nobody could have thought about." That is what I said in my scrum, not what he is alleging I said.

The reality is that over a period of time, we on this side of the House happen to believe that competition will be a good thing. There were several factors that intervened this summer that have resulted in a rise in electricity prices to the consumers of Ontario of about 23%, from May 1 until now. We will take steps to address that, we will take steps to address those consumers' concerns with respect to a rebate program, and we will take steps to address the intermediate and long-term supply of hydro in the province.

Mr Hampton: Premier, you talk as if suddenly you became aware of this. Were you not aware of California? Were you not aware of what happened in Alberta, that the Alberta government had to fork out over $2 billion to try to hide the deregulation fiasco from hydro consumers in Alberta? Are you not aware that today in Montana they are actually voting to do away with hydro deregulation there? Have you ignored the advice of the Consumer Federation of America which came out a year ago saying, "Don't do this. Yes, it results in huge profits for companies like Enron, but it's a disaster for consumers"?

Where were you and your government when from all across North America the warning signs were coming over the last year that hydro deregulation is a consumer disaster? Where were you? Why weren't you listening and watching? Why wasn't your government listening to what's going on elsewhere in the world? What is your excuse?

Hon Mr Eves: This isn't the state of California; this is Ontario. We're in the country of Canada. The jurisdiction in Ontario is capable of producing more power than it actually needs from time to time. Nobody could have predicted that OPG and Pickering would not be ready to go by now, nobody could have predicted that a tube would be damaged at Bruce while they were doing routine maintenance and nobody could have predicted the weather we've had, let alone the fact that the federal government would choose to charge GST on a debt reduction charge.

What we could do, though, is be guided by the IMO and the Ontario Energy Board, both of whom wrote letters to the then Minister of Energy on April 24 of this year saying that from an adequacy of supply point of view and a retail market point of view, the government would be quite proper and would be acting responsibly, as a matter of fact, to open the market on May 1.

Mr Hampton: Premier, you talk as if on the one hand it was just hot weather and on the other hand you couldn't have anticipated that maybe some generating stations would have to go down. But other jurisdictions were telling you that when you deregulate and privatize hydro, you create the incentives for profit-driven companies to do just that: to withdraw generation, to manipulate the market, to engage in price-fixing and gouging of consumers. All of that was on the record and your government did nothing.

I want to ask you from the perspective of the York region school board, whose hydro costs are up 40%—that's $2.9 million—over what they were last year at this time. They can't afford those prices. They're not getting any more money out of the funding formula. Will you finally do the right thing now—you've admitted you're wrong—and cancel hydro privatization and deregulation?

Hon Mr Eves: We are going to address the issue of a rate increase. We're going to address that. We are not going to address the issue of a volume increase—if consumers make a decision to use more electricity, that is their decision—but we will compensate them for an increase in the rate.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question, the leader of the third party.

Mr Hampton: Premier, you and the Liberals banter back and forth about, "Should it be a rebate or should it be a price cap?" I want to remind you—because your energy minister, Jim Wilson, used to remind us. He said, "Oh, don't put in place a price cap. That's what they did in California, and when they put in place a price cap the whole system melted down."

1410

You and the Liberals can banter back and forth about who wants to deregulate the fastest, who wants to privatize the fastest, who wants to deregulate the most and privatize the most, and who would give the most lucrative price cap or the most lucrative rebate, but the problem is deregulation. In Alberta, the price that people pay at the bottom of the bill is up. In California, the price that people pay at the bottom of the bill is up. In Montana, it's up four times over what it was before privatization.

Will you recognize that rebates and price caps are a temporary thing? They will not solve the endemic problems of hydro deregulation. That's what people want you to do. Will you end it?

Hon Mr Eves: As I said in response to the leader of the third party's initial question, at least he's consistent. He believes that during the past 50 years the old Ontario Hydro ringing up a debt of $38 billion wasn't costing anybody anything, just like he believed that when his party took over control of the purse strings of the province, a debt that went from about $69 billion to $114 billion or $115 billion wasn't hurting the average taxpayer at all either. As a result of those actions you took and the huge increase in debt of all kinds, whether it be with Ontario Hydro, whether it be with the province of Ontario, whether it be with the Workers' Compensation Board in terms of unfunded liability, today it costs the Ontario taxpayer over $10 billion a year in interest payments alone because of the credit card you ran up.

You sat at the cabinet table, you ran up the charge, and now you're asking everybody else to pay for it. That's where your philosophy gets you in time, but of course you aren't around to answer the bell now that you have tied the Ontario taxpayer with a debt of over $115 billion, resulting in over $10 billion a year in interest payments alone. How are you going to pay that back?

Mr Hampton: Premier, just to give you a little recollection of history, you were the government when Darlington was built. You were the government, with help from the Liberals, when Darlington went from a $5-billion nuclear plant to a $15-billion nuclear plant, a $10-billion cost overrun. That was your government, with the help of the Liberals.

You, Premier, are the one who has put almost all the money, $2.5 billion over the last three years, back into nuclear. You're the person who's running up the hydro debt and you're the person who is forcing people across this province to not only pay that, but pay the profiteers, the commission takers and the fee takers.

Premier, this question comes from the Hamilton credit counselling centre, who point out that people just can't afford to pay their bills. Will you recognize that you can't fool people with a temporary rebate and recognize that hydro deregulation and privatization is wrong for both you and the Liberals? Cancel it now.

Hon Mr Eves: It seems to me I can recall a certain party supporting everything the Liberal Party did between 1985 and 1987, when you're talking about those Darlington expenditures that David Peterson's government thought were great and invested billions of dollars in. And I seem to recall the Bob Rae government investing $5 billion in NUGs that don't produce one single kilowatt of energy. Why did you spend that $5 billion and where did that go? Why don't you tell the people in the gallery that, Howard?

HYDRO RATES

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition):

A question to the Premier: Premier, the mess you've created in hydro, as I said earlier, is hitting everybody hard: families, businesses, charities and legion halls. It's also going to affect the government's funding partners. I'm wondering if you're giving that some thought. Hydro bills are hitting your funding partners like schools, universities, colleges and hospitals. These large institutions are going to be faced with enormous hydro bills they could not possibly have anticipated.

Premier, can you tell Ontario families who rely on hospitals, who rely on our schools and who rely on our colleges and universities what exactly you are going to do to make sure programs are not cut in order to pay for your failure to control hydro costs?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): Now there doesn't appear to be too much difference between the leader of the official opposition and the leader of the third party in terms of controlling different costs. They both seem to think that by socialist intervention, they can control the price of just about everything in our society.

We will take care of hospitals, as we did this year with a 7.74% increase to their budget, an $8-billion-a-year increase in health care funding in the province of Ontario, since we became the government—$8 billion a year. If your federal cousins in Ottawa did as well, they'd be spending between $20 billion and $30 billion more a year on health care, and they're not. So I would ask you to use your good offices to phone your good friend Jean Chrétien and ask him where the $20 billion a year is.

Mr McGuinty: That is quite a creative flight of fancy. How can we go from hydro bills being paid by schools in Ontario to something somehow connected with the federal government? I can understand why the Premier doesn't want to talk about hydro, but you're going to have to sooner or later.

I'm talking about institutions that are funded by the government to provide essential services: health care for our families, education for our kids. You're putting those transfer partners into an impossible situation where they're going to have to choose between keeping the lights on or keeping the programs going.

Hamilton Health Sciences centre, an institution which is struggling today—they just recently made the decision to let 250 people go—tell us that their hydro bill this year will increase by $2.2 million. The Greater Essex County District School Board estimates their hydro bill will soar this year by more than $500,000. Every single hospital, every single school board, every single university and college is going to be hit with extravagant increases. Parents and families want some assurance from you, Premier, as the man who created this mess, that programs won't be cut in their schools, their hospitals, their colleges or their universities. Will you guarantee that right now?

Hon Mr Eves: We will take care of our transfer partners with respect to increases in hydro rates. But I don't want the leader of the official opposition to stand in his place and leave an impression with the public out there. The Hamilton Health Sciences centre, the very centre that he talks about, this year received an increase in base funding of $36 million, or 8.5%, bringing their annual total to $464.6 million, and we supplied them with an additional $2.6 million in one-time funding in this fiscal year—a far, far cry from what Elinor Caplan did when she was Minister of Health in this province. We are spending $8 billion more a year on health care; we are $8 billion more committed to health care in this province than you were.

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Come to order. We've had our little fun. Come to order. We will start the clock again.

TELEMARKETING PRACTICES

Ms Marilyn Mushinski (Scarborough Centre): My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Business Services—

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. The member for Windsor West, this is her last warning. If I have to get up again, I will remove you.

You can start all over, member for Scarborough Centre.

Ms Mushinski: My question is for the Minister of Consumer and Business Services. I'm particularly concerned about telemarketers who are using Ontario as a base to scam Americans and people in other jurisdictions. Specifically, concerns have been raised about deceptive telemarketers who are peddling phony credit cards with a one-time advance fee. These scam artists look for the most—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order.

Ms Mushinski: I wish you would stop yapping over there and listen to this very important question.

These scam artists look for the most vulnerable targets: the elderly, the poor and even working families who are struggling to make ends meet. I've also heard of scams that try and convince individuals to pay an upfront fee for an incredible loan with a really low rate, only to find out that neither the rate nor the loan ever existed. Minister, could you please tell us what this government is doing to stamp out this kind of despicable crime in our province?

Hon Tim Hudak (Minister of Consumer and Business Services): I appreciate the question from the member for Scarborough. She's right: it's a despicable crime that tends to target seniors and other vulnerable individuals and working families. Fortunately, work like Project Phonebusters is able to shut this scam down on targeting Ontarians. However, there still is an ongoing concern about using Ontario as a base to go after Americans and other jurisdictions.

The Ernie Eves government is doing its best, in co-operation with police forces and the federal government, to turn up the heat on these so-called boiler room operations. This ministry took the lead in 2000 and set up a strategic partnership with Canadian and US law enforcement. Here are some of the results. To date we have laid 134 charges and shut down 42 of these boiler rooms. The most recent bust on October 22 shut down two boiler rooms running one of these advance fee credit loan scams. We appreciate the partnership of Phonebusters and the police forces, which have commended the ministry and this government on their work in fighting these deceptive schemes.

Ms Mushinski: Minister, I'm really pleased to hear that you're taking telephone fraud so seriously. I would argue that forming a relationship involving the three levels of government in Canada as well as with US officials is definitely the best way to go. But it has also been pointed out that penalties are much tougher in the United States. I realize that most of these cases are tried under the federal Criminal Code or other statutes they administer, but I want to know, Minister, what we can do as a province through tougher laws and tougher enforcement to protect innocent victims.

Hon Mr Hudak: The member makes a very important point. In the partnership, we decide under which set of laws to prosecute, whether it's the Criminal Code or, in some cases, the Loan Brokers Act under provincial offences.

One common scam is the advance fee loan, as was mentioned by the member, where they demand a fee upfront and never deliver on the service—illegal in the province of Ontario. In fact, Bill 180, our CP21, consumer protection in the 21st century, that is before the Legislature now, if passed, will see the fines more than double as well as increased jail terms of up to two years less a day. Basically, our CP21 legislation, which I hope to see passed by all members of this House in the near future, will help us in partnership with the federal government, police forces and our colleagues across the border in the States to continue to crack down and shut down and take the steam out of these boiler room operations.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): My question is for the Premier. Week after week we have been standing on this side of the House calling for the government to roll out the rebate to compensate Ontarians for Herculean hydro prices. At first you and your energy minister thought that was a crazy idea; now you seem to think it's a pretty good idea. What people want to know now, Premier, is: when are you going to be rolling out the rebate and how much is the average rebate going to be?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): You're going to find that out in short order.

Mr Bryant: Don't you think you might have done this before you opened up the marketplace? Don't you think that when you were the finance minister sitting around the cabinet table you might have weighed in on how the marketplace was going to look? Don't you think that as the Premier of Ontario you had a responsibility not to open up a marketplace that wasn't ready?

You had an option, sir, to exercise leadership. You shouldn't have opened up a marketplace that wasn't ready for Ontario. You sold the consumers of Ontario a lemon, and now they're paying the price. You have lost the confidence of this province when it comes to the governance of Hydro and electricity. My question is, why didn't you do your homework before you opened up the marketplace in May?

Hon Mr Eves: The honourable member for St Paul's certainly does have a lot of enthusiasm. There's no doubt about that.

Throughout the last few months and throughout Ontario's electricity restructuring process, the Liberal Party of Ontario has been in favour of opening the market. That has been their stated position. Now, when there has been a fluctuation in prices, which we acknowledge and will take care of, they seem to be saying they're not in favour of opening the market. In a few more months, in six months, when all appears to be well, they'll be in favour of opening the market again.

I heard the member for St Paul's on a radio show the other day talking about, "Why don't we just split Ontario Hydro into four or five equal chunks and sell them to the nearest fire-sale bidder, and then we'll have equal competition?" That's your solution to the problem. No doubt your leader will have a different solution to the problem tomorrow, and the day after that you'll have another solution to the problem. But we're actually going to solve the problem.

BIOSOLID MANAGEMENT

Mr Garfield Dunlop (Simcoe North): My question today is for the Minister of the Environment. I was going to ask a question on Kyoto, but I think it was answered, so I'll ask a question on biosolids.

Constituents in my riding of Simcoe North have asked me about the storage and spreading of biosolids on agricultural land. I'm aware that the practice is approved by the Ministry of the Environment. Minister, can you explain what safeguards are in place to ensure that the spreading and storage is not harmful to the environment and to local residents as well?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): Many of the more rural members of my caucus have talked to me about this. The members from Northumberland, Peterborough, Grey-Owen Sound, Wellington—a few of them—have come to me with respect to the biosolids issue.

The current practice of using biosolids on agricultural land is protective of the environment when conducted within ministry guidelines and rules. Management of biosolids—

Mr Gregory S. Sorbara (Vaughan-King-Aurora): Everyone else is leaving too, Chris.

Hon Mr Stockwell: There's only one guy I wish would leave right now.

Management of biosolids is controlled under the Environmental Protection Act, part V. MOE controls transport and land application. Only when biosolids meet provincial requirements and standards can they be applied to land.

Currently, work is being done under the Nutrient Management Act, and MOE is also conducting a review of its land application programs. The standards being developed under the Nutrient Management Act will be consistent with Justice O'Connor's recommendation. Furthermore, there needs to be more information given to local municipalities that accept these biosolids and to the communities around them, so they know how much, when and where it's going to be applied.

Mr Dunlop: A biosolids hauling company in my riding is concerned that the new nutrient management—
Interjections.

Mr Dunlop: Isn't this unbelievable?

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Come to order. Order. The yelling when the microphone is on is even worse. Come to order, please.

Mr Dunlop: As the former Minister of Energy, you know the IMO—

Interjection.

The Speaker: Last warning for the member for Toronto Centre-Rosedale. If he yells again, he's out too. I'm not just going to get down and two seconds later you're yelling. Last time.

Sorry again, member for Simcoe North.

Mr Dunlop: Minister, as the former Minister of Energy you know that the IMO changes every five minutes, just about the same number of times the Liberal Party flip-flops on this issue.

A biosolids hauling company in my riding is concerned that the new nutrient management regulations will adversely affect its business. What will the new regulations mean for small waste management businesses in my riding and across the province?

Hon Mr Stockwell: The proposed regulatory requirements will mean the haulers, which are often applicators, will need to be trained and certified. MOE and the Ministry of Agriculture and Food will be consulting on these regulations in the near future. We want to hear what regular citizens and people in the industry have to say. It's important to our government to find out what questions and concerns our stakeholders have. It's why Minister Johns and I have travelled across Ontario listening to those concerns and ideas. These standards will provide clear, environmentally protective standards that apply evenly to haulers and applicators, ensuring a level playing field.

I will say that when it comes to environmental issues and concerns, it is this government that has taken a lead on Drive Clean, on the 2005 closing of coal-fired plants, on emissions into the air and on cleaning up the environment. I'm proud of the record of this government with respect to the environment. Rather than talking about the issues, which is what the opposition parties did when they were in office, this government is taking real, sincere action that can be measurable and approved for a better environment for the people of Ontario.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Michael Prue (Beaches-East York): My question is to the Premier. Finally, after months of defending the indefensible, many of your own colleagues are starting to listen to the thousands of people who are suffering on hydro privatization. The member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound says it best: if you ignore them, you ignore them at your own peril.

I have a few examples here. Sinead, who is under 30, lives in Toronto and worked so hard to start a business, said you and your government are going to bankrupt her. She asks that you call an election and she'll show you how she feels. Philip of Toronto said, "This is beyond bleeding. We are going to hemorrhage to death with privatization." Joan, a Toronto pensioner, writes, "I can't afford to pay $333 in one lump sum—the excess wipes out my entire food allowance for the month." But Glen, who used to be a Tory supporter, says it best, "This is the most obscene decision this government has made. You have disappointed, failed and misled the exact people who are responsible for you being in the position you are in. I hope you realize when election time comes anybody and everybody who is remotely"—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order. The member can't say that word, even though he's quoting somebody else. I ask him to withdraw it. He's got about five seconds to place the question as well.

Mr Prue: My question is, will you explain—

The Speaker: First—

Mr Prue: I withdraw the statement.

Will you explain today why you have not listened? Will you tell us today that you're going to cancel your plans for the sell-off and keep hydro in public hands?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): We are keeping hydro in public hands and we are going to respond to the concerns of not only his constituents but the constituents of every single member of this Legislature.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): Premier, that's not going to cut it. People across the province are hurting and you want to sit there and laugh. Do you know there are seniors who are having to choose between buying food and paying their hydro bills?

Interjections.

The Speaker: I am naming the member for Simcoe North and asking him to leave the chamber right now.

We're not going to put up with this. Yelling and screaming and anger are not going to be acceptable. When there is fun-loving humour and some yelling, that's fine, but we're not going to have yelling and anger like that. There will be no warning and you're out if you do it.

Mr Dunlop was escorted from the chamber.

Mr Christopherson: I say again to the government members, there's nothing to laugh about. There a lot of people across this province, in my community of Hamilton and in other communities, who are hurting. There are people who are having to choose between paying their hydro bill and buying food, between paying their hydro bill and buying necessary medicine. These choices are being put upon people because of your decisions. You made this decision. You can blame it on the weather all you want. Your decision is hurting people. I personally find it insulting that a lot of you want to sit there and laugh. There are a lot of people in this province who aren't laughing.

Premier, rebates are not going to do it. Tinkering with the legislation isn't going to do it. Passing a new regulation isn't going to do it. Cancelling your privatization and deregulation will.

Mr John Hastings (Etobicoke North): Wrong and wrong.

The Speaker: Take your seat. Order. I'm also naming the member for Etobicoke North and asking him to leave the chamber as well. I won't tolerate members sitting there making faces at me either. If I have to clear you all out, I'll do it.

Mr Hastings was escorted from the chamber.

The Speaker: Sorry, Premier, it was your turn to speak.

Hon Mr Eves: Nobody takes the plight of Ontarians, especially those on fixed incomes and seniors, lightly. We are going to come up with a solution that not only addresses the cash outlay that these people have made, and many of them, as I appreciate, are on fixed incomes, but we are going to come up with a solution that deals with the intermediate and long-term supply of energy in Ontario.

I understand that he has a disagreement in principle with the opening of a retail market with respect to hydro. Nobody said there wouldn't be the odd glitch along the way, and there has been. I just want to assure him that on this side of the House we all have constituents who relay their concerns to us. We all have seniors—I was at a seniors' home last Friday in my riding—who relay these concerns to us. We appreciate the sincerity and the severity of their concerns in some cases, and we are going to act as quickly as we possibly can to address them.

RACIAL PROFILING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is to the Premier. Premier, here in Ontario we enjoy the privilege of experiencing cultures from all over the globe every time we leave our home, but not every Ontarian feels that their culture is celebrated or that they are even treated equally.

You will be familiar with a series of articles that appeared in the Toronto Star recently. Those articles served to reinforce something that every black mother in this province knows: sadly, their sons are often treated differently.

Last week a coalition of leaders from the black community sent you a letter. I thought they made a very compelling argument to the effect that the time for study was over. They're asking that you take action. Premier, I'm sure you've now had a chance to review that letter. What action will you now be taking?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): This is an issue, as the leader of the official opposition points out, that I think a lot of Ontarians take very seriously, and certainly we do on this side of the House. Not only is it imperative to make sure that there is no such thing as racial profiling that goes on in this jurisdiction, or in this country for that matter, but it's also important to get home the point that it doesn't even appear to be going on, let alone going on.

I have consulted with various people in the black community and I will continue to do that. I was talking to the Honourable Lincoln Alexander just the other day. We do want to respond in a positive way to the concerns being raised by many in the black community, to make sure they can feel that there is no such special treatment, if you want to put it that way, of black youth in this province.

But I do want to say that the Toronto Police Services, I think, have an excellent reputation for dispensing justice in the largest cosmopolitan urban centre in the world. I can't think of any other city in the world that has the cultural diversity this city does and responds so well to it.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, I hope you appreciate that we have been studying this issue in one form or another since 1977. That's some 25 years. What we need now are some concrete steps that are going to restore confidence in our citizens and in our police.

I'm sure you can understand the frustration felt by members of the black community who see this come into fashion at different points in time. Then it disappears, and studies are collected and they gather dust on a shelf somewhere. We need to take those studies and turn them into action. My colleague Alvin Curling has called for an implementation task force to put those studies into effect. Premier, will you take this action so we can start addressing a very serious issue in a very serious way?

Hon Mr Eves: As I said to the leader of the official opposition in my initial response, I indicated right off the bat that I am prepared to—the very day they had their press conference here at Queen's Park I happened to be at the Royal York, speaking at the Terry Fox Foundation annual luncheon. I said immediately that I would be happy to sit down and meet with the leaders of the black community to see if we can't come to some agreement as to how we proceed from here to address the very concerns he has made.

CHATSWORTH FISH HATCHERY

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): My question is to the Minister of Natural Resources. Last week the Minister of Natural Resources was in my area—and I certainly appreciate that—and opened up a new fish hatchery which is state of the art. I understand it's probably one of the best fish hatcheries in Ontario. It has one of the best springs in Ontario.

I would like the minister to explain to the House some of the money that was spent there. Would he be interested in having a visitors' centre there so we could show the rest of the people of Ontario, not only the ones in Bruce and Grey but those all over Ontario, what a beautiful spot it is and what a great asset it is to our area?

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): I thank the member for the question. Yes, last Friday we opened a new hatchery in Chatsworth and I was very proud to be there. Something must have frozen over because I made it through the snowstorms and everything else. I wouldn't miss the member's opening up there.

It's 46,000 square feet and it cost about $6.5 million. We're increasing the number of fish that are being produced there. Up to 2.8 million fish will be released annually in Ontario, and I think that's good news for natural resources here in the province.

Mr Murdoch: As the minister knows, we did have some difficulty with some of the bureaucrats who work in his ministry. They just didn't seem to want the people of Ontario to see this spot. They have difficulty showing us. I would like to ask the minister if he's prepared to put some private discipline into this fish hatchery, or at least some partnerships with some of the sporting clubs in the area.

Hon Mr Ouellette: As I mentioned earlier, it was definitely a pleasure to be there, and I know the member is very active. We have a commonality in that youth programs are a strong initiative. I know and I expect that we will be seeing tours in that facility in the very near future. As well, we are always open to partnerships and bringing in relationships with other clubs—the clubs that were in attendance there, the Sydenham club or the Bruce Trail groups. We're always more than happy to sit down and discuss how we can best benefit natural resources in the province of Ontario.

SLOT MACHINES

Mr Monte Kwinter (York Centre): I have a question for the Premier. Last week, on Thursday, October 31, 2002, Mr Flaherty revealed that the decision to allot up to 800 slot machines to Picov Downs under certain conditions was made in December 2001. However, in a letter to Mr Norm Picov dated April 10, 2002, Minister Tim Hudak stated that in December, cabinet directed the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp to complete a business case for slots at Picov Downs and Quinte Exhibition

Raceway. Mr Hudak goes on to state that in March, four months later, cabinet reviewed and approved the business case as part of the provincial gaming strategy. It is clear from a leaked cabinet document, as revealed by Susanna Kelley of TVO's Fourth Reading, that the decision to allocate up to 800 slot machines under certain conditions was made on March 6, 2002. Premier, your Attorney General, in several responses to me, stated that no decision has been made and that one of several options being considered is not providing any slot machines to Picov Downs. Could you tell us which of these positions is the correct one?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): It is my understanding that a decision was made with respect to Picov Downs but that the decision that was made, as he pointed out, said up to a certain number of machines. There are certain protocols, procedures and processes that one normally goes through. As he would know, 15 of 18 licensed tracks in Ontario have licensed slot machines today. There are three, of which I believe Picov Downs is one, that do not. With respect to that, it's my understanding that the Ontario Racing Commission, which is a totally independent body, as I'm sure he is more than aware, has their input, and the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp has their input. That has been the way these decisions have been arrived at for every one of the other 15. I'm sure that's the same process that Picov Downs or for that matter any other track that doesn't have licensed machines but is a licensed track will have to go through.

Mr Kwinter: Premier, if I understand you correctly, you've just confirmed that the decision has been made, subject to certain conditions. If that is the case, then your Attorney General is wrong, because he keeps saying that no decision has been made. The other question I'd like to ask you is that there are two other dates that have been put on the record, one by Mr Flaherty saying the decision was made in December and another by Minister Hudak that says it wasn't done until four months later, in March. Could you please confirm today on what date that decision was made?

Hon Mr Eves: I don't believe that's what the Attorney General is saying at all. I believe what he is saying—and unfortunately he's not here today to respond himself—is that “up to 800” means that. There's a big range between zero and 800, and the number, according to the advice we receive from the Ontario Racing Commission and the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp, could be zero or it could be 799.

AGRICULTURAL EMPLOYMENT LEGISLATION

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Minister of Agriculture, Food and Rural Affairs. I know you have introduced, and we have debated here in the House, legislation that is an important part of protecting agricultural workers in this province. My thoughts immediately go out to my constituents in the riding of Durham and I think of Price's fruit and vegetable market and Pingle's fruit and vegetable market, and of course other agricultural business. I and a number of my colleagues have discussed this proposed legislation with family farms across our ridings, and there is no question that the agricultural sector supports our approach.

Minister, could you inform this Legislature of the consultations your ministry has conducted on this important legislative initiative and what you've heard during those meetings?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I'd like to thank the member from Durham for the question and thank him for his involvement with his agricultural community, which he has been doing all summer long.

Subsequent to the Supreme Court of Canada decision, our ministry has consulted widely on the legislation that's before the House. We talked to the labour issues coordinating committee, which is a coalition of farm groups all across the province. We talked to the United Food and Commercial Workers. In addition, we had public meetings in Vineland, Kemptville and Leamington during September of this year.

The farm community is very supportive of the proposed legislation. They understand that there are constitutional requirements to provide workers a framework with which to approach their employers about workplace issues, and this bill provides the opportunity for them to be able to do that. This bill is a balanced approach where the agricultural employees are treated in a consistent manner. However, it is also important to ensure that the farmers of the province are not vulnerable to risks of labour dispute.

Mr O'Toole: Thank you very much for that informative answer, Minister. I also want to compliment you on the passion and hard work that you bring to your ministry.

Minister, we know the farm community's position; you've just outlined that. Our government's position is very clear and it's clear that the NDP has a position staked out on this. But what's puzzling to me is, what is the opposition Liberals' position on this important issue to rural Ontario? It seems, like everything, they're on both sides of the picket fence. Minister, could you explain what the Liberals are doing on this proposed bill?

Hon Mrs Johns: To the honourable member, you are quite correct; the Liberal stance is quite confusing. I recall that on first reading the Liberals abstained from the vote because, as they said at the time, they hadn't sufficient information to be able to make a decision.

But as I said earlier, we had consulted quite extensively with stakeholders before the introduction of the bill, and some of those stakeholders had spoken to the Liberals. So it was surprising. Furthermore, last week as we were working on the second reading debate, the Liberals again seemed to want to derail the legislation and they asked for adjournment of the debate on second reading, which was very surprising because of course the farm community wants this bill passed.

They then voted against a time allocation motion, when the farming community had once again asked them to move forward because it is very important to the community that we get this finished before June—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the minister's time is up.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): My question is for the Premier. Premier, day by day the pressure is growing on you to stop the hydro sell-off. Bribing people with their own money isn't going to convince anyone that your scheme is good for consumers. All over the north people are suffering real financial pain because of hydro privatization. Ann and Morley warn you not to fall into the deceptive trap of privatization and deregulation of our hydro power.

All across the world they say it is being demonstrated what a mistake that is. Even now, in our own town of Wawa we have an advanced warning of just where that leads. That's Wawa, where the private company you sold to drained a lake to maximize its profits this summer and where everyone is paying more for hydro.

How many more thousands of citizens do you need to hear from before you call a halt to this silly idea of yours to sell off the people's hydro and deregulate hydro prices?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I will say this for the NDP members: at least they are very consistent on this issue. Despite what the answer is to any question that we have given in the House, they have their scripted questions and, come hell or high water, they're going to ask them.

I think I have addressed the concerns raised by the honourable member in response to the leader of the third party and in response to some of his colleagues in question period today.

First of all, nothing is being privatized in hydro. You preface every one of your questions with "privatization of hydro." What did happen of course is that the market was opened on May 1. That is not privatization; that is opening the market for competition so that other players besides Ontario Power Generation can compete with respect to generation of power in the province.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): The Premier's time is up.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): To the Premier for the supplementary: The people who have to get off their script, quite frankly, are you on your whole script of privatization and deregulation, because what's clear is that people across this province are waking up to their hydro bills. Once they open up the envelope, they're looking at it and falling to the floor.

I've got a number of examples here from people from my constituency, people from Kapuskasing. Morris, who sent me a copy of his hydro bill from September of last year, quotes his hydro bill as being $103.74 for September 2001. Guess how much his hydro bill is for September 2002? It's $322.59.

If anybody's got to get off the script, Premier, it's you, your Minister of Energy and your entire government. When are you going to cancel privatization? When are you going to get off the deregulation kick and allow people to get back to some sanity when it comes to their hydro bills?

Hon Mr Eves: We are going to respond to the concerns from Ontarians with respect to their electricity rate increase, but we are also going to try to lay out a plan with respect to the intermediate and long-term supply of energy in Ontario.

To the honourable member and the members of his caucus: I don't hear them, when they stand up and ask this question, explain how they spent $5 billion on NUGs that don't produce one kilowatt of power. Why did you do that? Why did you raise the debt in the province from $60 billion to $114 billion, $115 billion or $116 billion? Why do you think it's more important to spend over $10 billion a year on interest payments instead of spending it on the very people you claim to be concerned about?

SLOT MACHINES

Mr Monte Kwinter (York Centre): I'd like to go back to the Premier. The information that I want and haven't got from you as yet is this. We now have two options. Mr Flaherty stated last Thursday, October 31, 2002, that the decision to give Picov Downs up to 800 slot machines, under certain conditions, was made in December 2001. Mr Hudak, the Minister of Tourism, sent a letter to Mr Picov on April 10, saying the decision was made March 6. We have December 2001 and March 6, 2002. On which date was that decision made?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I don't believe that is exactly accurately what those two individuals said. I think the combination of those meetings in December and March led to the result, but the result is going to be determined by independent bodies, as it should be: by the Ontario Racing Commission and the Ontario Lottery and Gaming Corp. They are independent bodies, and they will come forward with the recommendation to the government, and the number will be somewhere between zero and 800. He will have to wait until they have finished their deliberations to give him the actual answer as to how many machines, if any, Picov Downs will be allowed.

Mr Gilles Bisson (Timmins-James Bay): On a point of order, Speaker: You know that this afternoon, unfortunately, Mr Garfield Dunlop was ejected from the House. I don't want to get into the reasons why, but the point of order I want to make is this: we're supposed to be at the estimates committee this afternoon doing the estimates for the Ministry of Intergovernmental Affairs. Mr Garfield Dunlop is the parliamentary assistant, along with Mr Raminder Gill. Does that now mean we can have Mr Gill represent the estimates on behalf of Mr Dunlop, who can't be there?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): On the same point of order, Mr Speaker: That's something we'll worry about.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Dunlop cannot go in there, unfortunately. He won't be able to be in the committee.

VISITORS

Mr Cameron Jackson (Burlington): On a point of order, Speaker: It's my distinct pleasure to welcome another Lauren as a page in the House. Lauren Wilson from Burlington is here with her father, Rick Wilson; her mother, Susan Montgomery; her sister Catherine; and her best friend, Marla Patterson, from John T. Tuck school. I know everyone in the House would like to welcome the Wilson family.

PETITIONS

HYDRO RATES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): It's time for petitions, and we'll start with the member for St Catharines.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Thank you, Mr Speaker. I will tell your mother you've been kind to me this week.

This is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas electricity bills have skyrocketed under the Harris-Eves government's flawed electricity plan; and

"Whereas some consumers have signed higher fixed-rate contracts with retailers, without adequate consumer protection; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has failed to address electricity supply shortages in Ontario, forcing the purchase of American power at premium prices, driving up prices still further; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government appointed a board of directors for Hydro One that has been paying themselves extravagant salaries, compensation packages and severances for senior executives; and

"Whereas Hydro One bought 90 municipal utilities, serving about 240,000 people across Ontario, at premium prices and with borrowed funds. These purchases with borrowed funds have increased Ontario's debt burden; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has added additional fees and taxes on to local electricity distribution companies. These charges have also been passed along to consumers;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Harris-Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair and reasonable prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario, and that the Harris-Eves government and its leader, Premier Ernie Eves, call an election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on this issue.”

I affix my signature.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): A petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas the Harris government’s plan to privatize and deregulate Ontario’s electricity system will lead to higher rates because private owners will sell more power to US customers, whose rates are typically 50% higher than Ontario’s; and

“Whereas selling coal plants like Nanticoke to the private sector will lead to more pollution because the private owners will run the plants at full capacity to earn maximum profit; and

“Whereas electricity deregulation in California has led to sky-high rates and blackouts; and

“Whereas Ontario needs a system of public power that will ensure rate stability, environmental protection and secure access to power;

“Therefore, be it resolved that the undersigned call on the government to scrap electricity deregulation and privatization and bring in a system of accountable public power. The first priority for such a public power system must be incentives for energy conservation and green power. Electricity rates and major energy projects must be subject to full public hearings and binding rulings by a public regulator instead of leaving energy rates to private profit.”

On behalf of my constituents, I add my name to this petition.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This petition is to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario and it concerns the multi-laning of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound. It is part of the 28,000-name petition I have.

“Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

“Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

“Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

“Whereas in the last three years, 46 people have lost their lives needlessly along that stretch of highway; and

“Whereas so far this year 10 people have died between Sudbury and Parry Sound on that stretch of dangerous highway; and

“Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

“Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

“Whereas it is the responsibility of any government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Eves government has failed to do so;

“Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease.”

I of course affix my signature and give it to Hin-Hey, our page, to bring to the table.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): November is Adoption Awareness Month and I have many petitions calling on the government to pass Bill 77. This petition reads:

“To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

“Whereas in Ontario adopted adults are denied a right available to all non-adoptees, that is, the unrestricted right to identifying information concerning their family of origin;

“Whereas Canada has ratified standards of civil and human rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the UN Declaration of Human Rights and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child;

“Whereas these rights are denied to persons affected by the secrecy provisions in the adoption sections of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts of the province of Ontario;

“Whereas research in other jurisdictions has demonstrated that disclosure does not cause harm, that access to such information is beneficial to adult adoptees, adoptive parents and birth parents, and that birth parents rarely requested or were promised anonymity;

“We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to enact revision of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts to permit adult adoptees unrestricted access to full personal identifying birth information; permit birth parents, grandparents and siblings access to the adopted person’s amended birth certificate when the adopted person reaches age 18; permit adoptive parents unrestricted access to identifying birth information of their minor children; allow adopted persons and birth relatives to file a contact veto restricting contact by the searching party; replace mandatory reunion counselling with optional counselling.”

Of course I will affix my signature to this petition.

SERVICES DE SANTÉ POUR ENFANTS

CHILDREN’S HEALTH SERVICES

M^{me} Claudette Boyer (Ottawa-Vanier): « À l’Assemblée législative de l’Ontario :

« Attendu que le gouvernement planifie la fermeture du service de chirurgie cardiaque à l’hôpital pour enfants de l’est de l’Ontario;

"Whereas the Conservative government plans to centralize all cardiac services for children in Toronto;

« Attendu que la chirurgie cardiaque est un service essentiel pour les enfants de l'est de l'Ontario et pour les enfants francophones de toute la province;

"Whereas the lives of children may be at risk if forced to travel to Toronto for cardiac care;

« Attendu que les enfants et leur famille se verront imposer des dépenses et des soucis inutiles s'ils doivent se rendre à Toronto pour obtenir des services cardiaques;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Ontario Legislature to demand that the Conservative government halt immediately its decision to close cardiac surgery services at the Children's Hospital of Eastern Ontario in Ottawa."

J'y appose ma signature avec fierté.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Pat Hoy (Chatham-Kent Essex): "To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Ernie Eves Conservative government has legislated the opening of the Ontario electricity market as of May 1, 2002, and the price per kilowatt hour for electricity in the province of Ontario has nearly quadrupled since May 1; and

"Whereas the Conservative government of Ontario has done very little to address key issues such as energy supply, which forces the province to import power and causes the price of electricity to skyrocket; and

"Whereas Ernie Eves has done a poor job in educating the public as to the ramifications of an open energy market in the province of Ontario and has done little to punish the unscrupulous sales practices of door-to-door energy retailers; and

"Whereas the government of Ontario has saddled the population of Ontario with additional debt reduction charges, which further increases the amount that the citizens of Ontario have to pay per kilowatt hour, yet the Hydro debt continues to increase; and

"Whereas the Mike Harris-Ernie Eves government appointed the board of directors of Hydro One, who approved exorbitant salaries and compensation packages for Hydro One executives;

"Be it resolved that the Ontario government move immediately to protect our province's electricity consumers by addressing the serious generation problem in Ontario, by punishing unscrupulous electricity retailers and by moving forward with a rebate to offset the increasing costs of electricity in Ontario."

This is signed by a number of residents from Blenheim, Charing Cross, Chatham and Morpeth. I too have signed this petition.

CHILD CARE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have petitions that have been sent to me by Mulberry school in Kingston, Norah Love Children's Centre in Sioux Lookout, CUPE

Local 1764 in Durham region, and Last Tango Productions in Toronto. The petition reads as follows:

"Whereas 70% of Ontario women with children under the age of 12 are in the paid workforce;

"Whereas high-quality, safe, affordable child care is critical to them and their families;

"Whereas the Early Years Study done for the Conservative government by Dr Fraser Mustard and the Honourable Margaret McCain concluded quality child care enhances early childhood development;

"Whereas this government has cut funding for regulated child care instead of supporting Ontario families by investing in early learning and care;

"Therefore, be it resolved that the Ontario government adopt the NDP's $10-a-day child care plan and begin implementation by reducing full child care fees to $10 a day for children aged two to five currently enrolled in regulated child care by providing capital funds to expand existing child care centres and build new ones, by funding pay equity for staff and by creating new $10-a-day child care spaces in the province."

I agree with the petitioners and I affix my name to this.

DÉRÈGLEMENTATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ

M. Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell): J'ai une pétition de 739 noms. Maintenant nous avons atteint 3 000 signatures et il y a des milliers d'autres à venir.

« À l'Assemblée législative de l'Ontario:

« Attendu que le gouvernement Harris-Eves a déréglementé le marché de l'électricité ontarien le 1^{er} mai 2002 sans que cela ait fait partie de ses programmes de 1995 ou 1999 et sans mandat de la population de l'Ontario;

« Attendu que le prix de l'électricité a atteint des niveaux outrageux, augmentant parfois de 100 % depuis le 1^{er} mai 2002 et causant de graves difficultés financières aux Ontariens et Ontariennes;

« Attendu qu'Ontario Power Generation (qui appartient au gouvernement de l'Ontario) a demandé à la Commission de l'énergie de l'Ontario la permission de réduire de 20 % le rabais promis aux Ontariens et Ontariennes si le prix de l'électricité dépassait les 3,8 cents le kilowattheure...;

« Attendu que le gouvernement Harris-Eves a autorisé le versement de salaires et primes exorbitants de l'ordre de 2,2 $ millions par année à l'ancienne présidente de Hydro One et au-delà de 1,6 $ millions par année au vice-président d'Ontario Power Generation;

« Nous, soussignés, demandons au gouvernement Harris-Eves de prendre des mesures immédiates pour faire en sorte que les Ontariens et Ontariennes payent ce service essentiel qu'est l'électricité à un juste prix et demandons également que le gouvernement conservateur et son chef, Ernie Eves, déclenchent une élection générale sur l'instabilité du marché de l'énergie pour ainsi donner aux Ontariens et Ontariennes la parole à ce sujet. »

J'y ajoute ma signature.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have another petition that reads as follows:

“To the Ontario Legislature:

“Whereas the Harris government’s plan to privatize and deregulate Ontario’s electricity system will lead to higher rates because private owners will sell more power to US customers whose rates are typically 50% higher than Ontario’s; and

“Whereas selling coal plants like Nanticoke to the private sector will lead to more pollution because the private owners will run the plants at full capacity to earn a profit; and

“Whereas electricity deregulation in California has led to sky-high rates and blackouts; and

“Whereas Ontario needs a system of public power that will ensure rate stability, environmental protection and secure access to power;

“Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, call on the government to scrap electricity deregulation and privatization and bring in a system of accountable public power. The first priority for such a public power system must be incentives for energy conservation and green power. Electricity rates and major energy projects must be subject to full public hearings and binding rulings by a public regulator instead of leaving energy rates to private profit.”

I agree with the petitioners and I’ve signed my name to this petition.

CHILDREN’S HEALTH SERVICES

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): I have close to 1,000 signatures out of over 120,000 submissions from people from the Ottawa area. It has to do with the children’s hospital, and it says:

“Whereas the Ontario government is shutting down the heart surgery unit at the Children’s Hospital of Eastern Ontario; and

“Whereas the closure of this program will restrict the accessibility” for children facing surgery; and

“Whereas every year CHEO treats 140 cases of seriously ill children close to home; and “Whereas centralization of children’s heart surgery in Toronto would force patients and their families to travel 400 to 600 kilometres away from home....

“We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to immediately override the government’s decision to close this life-saving program and to ensure that top-quality accessible health care remains available to every child in eastern Ontario.”

I affix my signature to this petition as well.

LONG-TERM CARE

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): The petition reads as follows:

“Whereas the Conservative government increased fees paid by Ontario seniors and other vulnerable people living in long-term-care facilities by 15%, instead of providing adequate government funding for long-term care; and

“Whereas the Conservative government has therefore shifted the cost of long-term care on to the backs of the frail elderly and their families; and

“Whereas this increase is 11.1% above the rent increase guidelines for tenants in the province of Ontario; and

“Whereas in 1996 Ontario abandoned its minimum requirement of 2.25 hours of nursing care per nursing home resident; and

“Whereas the Ontario government’s own contribution to raise the level of long-term-care services this year is less than $2 per resident per day; and

“Whereas, according to the government’s own study, government cutbacks have resulted in Ontario seniors receiving just 14 minutes a day of care from a registered nurse ... ; and

“Whereas the report also found that Ontario residents receive the least nursing, bathing and general care of nine other comparable locations;

“Therefore we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

“We demand the Conservative government eliminate the 15% fee increase for residents in long-term-care facilities, increase the number of nursing care hours for each resident to a minimum of 3.5 hours per day, and provide stable, increased funding to ensure quality care is there for Ontario residents in long-term-care facilities.”

I agree with the petitioners. I’ve signed my name to this.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TIME ALLOCATION

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): I move that, pursuant to standing order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 148, An Act to provide for declarations of death in certain circumstances and to amend the Emergency Plans Act, when Bill 148 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

That the vote on third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred until the next sessional day during the routine proceeding “Deferred Votes”; and

That in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Just before the member begins, and it apparently does need to be the member too, I wanted to make some announcements.

Pursuant to standing order 37(a), the member for Davenport has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given yesterday by the Minister of Health concerning foreign-trained doctors. The matter will be debated today at 6 o'clock.

Pursuant to standing order 37(a), the member for York Centre has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Premier concerning Picov Downs. Again, this matter will be debated today at 6 pm.

Further debate? The chief government whip.

Hon Mr Galt: I'm concerned about Bill 148 as an important piece of legislation, and it certainly gives me a lot of pleasure to be able to speak on this particular bill that's so important to the government and to our emergency services workers.

I'd like to take a few minutes to address some parts of the legislation that unfortunately can affect Ontarians even in times of peace. I'm of course referring to the loss of loved ones where, for whatever reason, there is no absolute proof of death or a person disappears and is presumed dead but no body is ever recovered. Boating accidents and plane crashes are just two good examples of this.

Prior to our government's introducing Bill 148, the surviving family members were required to go through a long, painful and often frustrating process, making individual applications for declarations of death with insurance companies, probating a will, with pension plan administrators, with the courts for purposes of marriage and a host of other situations.

I'm pleased to say that Bill 148 provides a new process for obtaining a court order declaring that a person is dead in circumstances where no physical evidence is available, but it is reasonable to presume death. It streamlines this process by enabling the person or persons seeking a declaration of death to make one, single application that will cover all these circumstances.

The new legislation will allow the courts to make an order declaring that an individual has died if the court is satisfied that the individual has disappeared in circumstances of peril or, in the absence of a specific peril, that the person has been missing for at least seven years. In order to obtain a declaration, the applicant must also show that the individual hasn't been heard from since the disappearance, that no other person has heard from the individual since the disappearance, that there's no reason to believe the individual is still alive and there is sufficient evidence to find that the individual is in fact dead.

This legislation will lighten the hardship families and other survivors frequently experience when a loved one disappears under unusual circumstances.

Before, they were severely restricted in their ability to go about their daily lives due to the fact that joint assets, for example, were frozen in the event the person was later discovered to still be alive. This legislation can never eliminate the hurt associated with losing a loved one under unusual circumstances, but it can and does make it easier for the survivors to deal with the reality that the person won't be found alive. It enables family members to make a single application for a declaration of death so they can get on with their lives.

There is a second important component to this legislation that I'd like to discuss here today. If necessary in times of emergency, the Attorney General can recommend to the Lieutenant Governor that provisions in certain statutes, regulations, rules, bylaws or orders of the government of Ontario be suspended temporarily by an order in council. It is important to note that this power is limited and applies only to legislation that establishes a limitation period, provides for a benefit or compensation payable as a result of the emergency or requires a payment of fees in respect of court proceedings or in connection with anything done in the administration of justice.

Bill 148 would have been a big help, for example, during the ice storm in eastern Ontario that occurred in 1998.

In addition, the power can only be used if, in the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor in Council, temporarily suspending the operation of the provision would facilitate providing assistance to victims of the emergency or would otherwise help victims and other members of the public to deal with the emergency and its aftermath. This aspect of the legislation is meant to be temporary and has a maximum time frame of 90 days from the time it is enacted.

In addition, the Ministry of the Attorney General is providing help to victims of crime and their families; dedicating a specialized crown attorney to provide expert advice on terrorism; committing to vigorously prosecute the perpetrators of terrorism related to hoaxes to the full extent of the current law; calling on the federal government to enact a new Criminal Code offence to specifically deal with the terrorist hoax; and introducing legislation that will improve the security of vital statistics documents and protect Ontario citizens' birth certificates and other important documents.

Thank you very much for the opportunity to make a short presentation on the time allocation motion on Bill 148.

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): I appreciate the opportunity to once again talk about 148, but I want to bring a couple of things to the attention of the House first as a reminder.

This is a time allocation motion. I want to let people know that in this session, as of May 2002 to now, there have been 18 bills that were sent to time allocation situations out of 36 that were introduced. So 50% of all the bills we've had in this House have been time-allocated.

As the member indicated in his first remarks, this is an important piece of legislation and I would assume that anyone who was interested in creating the best possible legislation would want this debated fully, to ensure that all of the points are brought up. A little later on I'm going to go over and review with you some of the things that have been suggested that have yet to be acted upon by this government in terms of this particular bill.

On the government side, I would grant that some of these pieces of legislation may not necessarily have needed to be debated as fully and as deeply as possible because they were a little bit on the straightforward and simple side. But 18 out of the 36 pieces of legislation, 50%, needed time allocation? I think not. I think this was more, "We're going to shoot for a record here to see how many times we can do that."

I would also point out to the House that I looked back at some of the records. I did a little bit of homework and digging. In the 32nd Parliament of Davis-Miller, from March 1981 to 1985, how many times was time allocation used? Three times. And how many government bills were passed? Some 292. So time allocation was used only three times, out of 292 bills. I think people need to know this in here.

I will get to 148, Speaker, because there are some ideas I floated earlier and I think we may hear rumblings that the ministry might get into talking about them because they realize they are good. But we're stuck with time allocation and unfortunately we can't really digest those ideas that are necessary.

The 33rd Parliament, the Peterson minority government, from 1985 to 1987: how many times was time allocation used? Once. How many pieces of legislation? There were 129. The Peterson majority government from 1987 to 1990: three time allocation motions. How many pieces of legislation? There were 183. We're talking about a very small percentage, like point something per cent, of legislation that needed to go to time allocation.

What are we talking about? In this session alone, 18 out of 36—50% of all our legislation—going to time allocation. I say it's time for us to take a good, hard look at what the agenda is. What's the agenda on that side? Is the agenda to say, "We passed legislation and got it done, because we had a busy"—or did we pass the best possible legislation for the people of Ontario?

We're now finding that amendments are being offered on this bill by that side. Amendments were offered by both the opposition parties, and some of them got acted upon and some got defeated. But here we go again. I want to remind the constituents out there. What happened in the year we started to do that tax law stuff? How many different bills had to be introduced? Eight different bills had to be introduced on the municipal tax laws to get it right. Time after time they kept messing it up. They didn't take the time.

Now we've got an example of 18 out of 36 times where we're using time allocation. It could be devoted to honest-to-goodness debate, understanding, more information to make good legislation. That's the part I'm disappointed in about this.

Will we be supporting the bill? Of course we support the bill because of what it's trying to do. I want to refer to the presentation of the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association. They made it quite clear that in Bill 148 they like the direction the government is going in, but they would make sure that all stakeholders, as referred to by Minister Turnbull when this was first introduced—it's now Minister Runciman—would be involved in the formulation of those emergency plans and that the legislation would be made such that participation was mandatory, not that you're going to ask those people to say, "What do you think? You want your two cents in?" Get them to the table, because regulations are as important as the legislation itself, and we have to make sure that's protected.

I've got a litany of things I could go over, but I'm going to make sure that some of the things we've referred to on this side of the House are brought to the attention of the government on that side. We ask that we reconvene the Legislature's all-party committee on terrorism. That was done back in the 1980s. As we know, a lot of the response that has taken place in Bill 148 has to do with responding to September 11. Because of September 11, a lot of the responses in this bill are to basically make things a little easier and more convenient.

Let me speak to that. In 1980 a select committee on the Ombudsman prepared a report on the ways in which the assembly may act and have its voice heard against political killings, imprisonment, torture, terror and terrorism. In 1989—nothing's been done since that point. We had the introduction in 1980; nothing's been done since 1989. Dalton McGuinty went on record quickly after September 11 and said, "We've got to reconvene this all-party committee that the Ombudsman suggested in order to put it back together." It was scoffed at by members on that side. All of a sudden I'm hearing good things: "Do you know what? It wasn't such a bad idea." This is the last time we have an opportunity to put it to the table. This is the last time we have an opportunity to make sure we're doing the right thing.

I'm disappointed it took this long for them to acknowledge that an idea came from this side and it was an improvement to the legislation, not an embarrassment but an improvement, to ensure we get it right the first time.

The other thing we asked was for all the mayors to review their emergency plans and to make sure we had that. Then what happens? We have a report that immediately comes out after that fact. It's interesting to point this out. We find out in a report that after the ice storm in eastern Ontario and Quebec we weren't prepared. The report came out and said we weren't prepared. Did any action get taken after that? Absolutely not.

Let me talk to you for just a moment of the problem I pointed out—I was hoping it would get addressed and it wasn't—that we had people understanding that the municipalities said that 91% of our municipalities already had an emergency plan. But this is what's going to disturb people: 72% of the municipalities had not conducted the exercises in over a year to evaluate whether those plans would be successful.

We've got 91%, and I know that in actual fact that's grown since this report was done, so we are talking about over 95% of our municipalities now having that emergency readiness plan in place, but unfortunately and sadly, 72% have not even practised them. It makes no sense to have a plan that's not going to be enforced, that's not going to be practised, that's not going to be put to use in order for us to do that. Why do I say that?

I say that as a principal on leave from education. Inside my 23-year career, 12 years as a principal, I had the responsibility of doing fire drills. We had to do three a year. Inside of that, we practised them over and over again, not to be tested, but we had to do them. If the fire marshal or an official came to your school and they said, "Do a drill," you didn't have any preparation. You simply had to do the drill, cross your fingers and hope that all that practice came into being. I referred to this once before in my leadoff on 148 and I refer to it again. The schools that I am aware of across the province all have done fire drills and practised. When they do go through these practices, the people who are doing the investigation, whether they be from the fire marshal's office or the local fire department or the emergency measures department inside a municipality, tell us that schools do an exceptionally good job of doing their evacuation process and their emergency response. Why? Because they practise over and over again. Quite frankly, it costs teaching time, it costs time on task for the kids to learn, but tell me that it's not the most important number one priority that a school principal or a teacher or parents or anybody else wants: the safety and security of their children. That comes first.

Once we have this practice done, we know that when that bell goes off, those kids are out of there. Most times it's under a minute, or between a minute and two minutes. Each time you practise it, the idea is to shoot for a better time in getting out safely and securely. Sometimes they throw a little curve at you. Sometimes the police or fire marshal's office or whoever is doing that testing will come and put a rod in one of the exits, because you're supposed to have two exits, or an alternate route. That's happened. In particular, it happened to me, as a principal. They put a rod inside the door and it was blocked off. The kids couldn't go through, and they automatically turned around and went down to the other exit. They knew exactly what to do because we practised.

I look over at our pages, and I know they've gone through it over and over again. They've done fire drills. Sometimes they do it to you in the middle of winter, don't they? You sometimes even have to go outside without your coats, because it's the rule and you do it.

Let's go back to 148. The very premise I'm talking about is practice. So what are the municipalities saying? What are the firefighters saying? What are other groups saying? Well, you know what? It's pretty easy to set those standards, but the municipalities have been downloaded. This is a different time and era in municipalities. First of all, they are not taxing. Second of all, they are downloaded. They've been given more responsibility and very few funds to do that. Now the ministry is going to step up and say what? "We are going to have to do all this practising, and you've got to forfeit some money in order to do that." Well, quite frankly, I'm challenging and I've charged the government with the responsibility of providing the resources in order for them to do those things. Those evacuation plans, those emergency response plans, they cost an awful lot of money.

I want to bring up at this point the fact that in my riding, the county of Brant put on one of these exercises, and they had so many people involved: they had industry; they had an oil refinery; they had hospitals. It was amazing. As soon as they said they were doing it, they all got on board and said they wanted to be part of this great big massive exercise. I say, compliments to them. And do you know what happened? What happened was they found out there were some glitches in their plan, but it was a rather good plan. The volunteer firefighters responded, and they didn't know—not everybody knows about this, so they had it all planned and the day that it happened only those people up at the top knew that it was going to happen and the rest of them had to respond. They passed with flying colours. They did a great job. But do you know what I found out? It cost a lot of money to do that exercise. They didn't have one dime given to them by the province, unfortunately; no provincial funding.

I'm suggesting to you that the bill is flawed in terms of not providing those resources. I'm hoping that when it comes to regulations and forming the essence, the meat and potatoes, behind this, they're going to say, "We're asking them do a lot, but we're going to come to the plate and help them out. We're going to make sure of that." That's an important aspect here.

I want to bring up another point I made in my lead, and that was Bill 141. Bill 141, a private member's bill I introduced, is An Act to amend the Fire Protection and Prevention Act, 1997. I want to read it to you; it's a short bill, but it would help the government in this particular attempt—in 148—to improve our emergency response. It's very simple: "The purpose of the bill is to require that any proposals to reduce or restructure fire protection services be approved by the fire marshal before being implemented. The fire marshal would be required to report annually to the minister on the proposals reviewed."

How simple is that? It's simple, but do you know what? It doesn't happen. I am not chastising any municipality, but I'm saying generically to municipalities that reduce their fire services, "Shame on you if you haven't looked at the consequences of what you're doing." In some cases, unfortunately, do you know what has happened? We've had one firefighter on a truck go to a call. That is absolutely unacceptable, unheard of and dangerous.

Interjection: And they're probably going to cut him.

Mr Levac: And they're going to probably cut him too, because they can't afford it.

Somebody on the other side told me at one time, "We've never given money to fire services. It's a municipal responsibility, and it should stay that way." Guess what? Times have changed. We've had our lives changed. And your priority, apparently, as you've said, and as many people on record have said, 148, is an extremely important piece of legislation. Well, if it's changed that much and we have to reprioritize, I think it's time for you to buck up. Step to the plate and say, "We really do respect our fire services. We really do respect our emergency services. We're going to provide you with some funds in order to do that." That's an important aspect of it.

What's important to understand is that the first questions that come out of the mouths of people on that side are, "How much do you want? How much do you want? How much are you going to raise taxes?" That's the first thing they say. Yet they turn around and tell municipalities, "We're going to regulate you. We're going to tell you exactly what standards to meet." But then they say to the municipalities, "Tough luck. Do it yourself. You find the money." How's that for a partnership?

What I'm looking for is a partnership from this government. The one thing I ask for—I got giggles from the other side when I asked this; they thought it was funny when I asked them the first time. I said, "I think it requires municipalities to sit down with all the stakeholders out there and start formulating improvements to our system, so that all our citizens get protected. Let's go the federal government. Instead of yapping at them all the time, let's go to them and say, 'We need to talk about this. We need to protect our citizens.'"

Instead of doing that, we're going to rush a bill through and find out later on that maybe we had an opportunity to put some regulations in there that say we're going to sit down to the table for a change, and why not? It's for the citizens; it's for the individual citizen. They're expecting that, they demand that and they want that. It's time for us to step forward and say, "We're tired of fighting." If you haven't heard it, I have. They're tired of fighting with government after government to try to make sure these things work.

It's easy to set those standards. It's easy to say, "You must do this," because you've put responsibility on everybody else to pay for it.

Get up to the plate. Show them where their money is. We offered that; we had the Ontario security fund proposal: $100 million. Simply reprioritize some of the spending, like partisan advertising and a few other things. Simply take that $100 million and split it in half; $50 million for province-wide services and $50 million directly to municipalities, instead of the $25 million this government said.

Is this the right direction to go? Of course it's the right direction to go. As a matter of fact, it was interesting that you finally got it.

There are so many things I wanted to talk about, but there are other people who want to continue. I want to simply challenge the government to stop the bickering and fighting, get along with people and make sure we can collectively solve the problem that is outlined in 148.

Thank you for the opportunity. I appreciate it.

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): It's a pleasure for me to participate in the debate this afternoon. I should state that this is going to be the second of three time allocation motions the government is moving this week. I say that because last week I couldn't be here on Wednesday afternoon, which is my normal House duty day, and as you know, if it's Wednesday, it's time allocation day in this place. My colleague Tony Martin had to cover for me because I was at the opening of Collège Boréal here in Toronto.

The government has obviously made up for it because this week we'll do not one, not two, but three: yesterday we were dealing with a time allocation motion on Bill 175, which is the government's water and sewer bill; today, of course, we're dealing with time allocation on Bill 148, which involves emergency measures; and tomorrow, unless the government changes their agenda, we will be dealing with a time allocation motion on Bill 180, consumer protection.

It is the week for the government to get down and ram legislation through as quickly as it possibly can, to yet again cut off and terminate or abandon any further legislative debate on issues the government says are important. I say to the government, if the issues are important, why is it you're in here three days out of four this week, putting through time allocation motions that effectively shut off debate on those important issues?

The last time I checked the point of the exercise was for us to be here to use legislative debate to raise the concerns of our constituents, yet it's very clear that this week, for example, as with many other weeks—but it must be a record this week—three out of four days in the afternoon are dedicated to time allocation motions. The government is clearly intent on not wanting to hear, and making sure they don't hear, what MPPs have to say with respect to the concerns coming forward on these bills from their constituents.

If I look at the particular motion that was moved earlier by Mr Galt, what's even more interesting is that this is a motion that effectively wipes out debate on third reading, which is a new tactic this government is starting to implement. We have got used to—I suppose that's the only way I can describe it—the government moving time allocation motions that effectively limit committee hearings, for example. So if there are any to be had, they are very truncated, very limited, one afternoon, maybe two if we're really lucky, here at Queen's Park, which leaves a handful of people in a position to actually come forward and have their say.

That is clearly a change from some of the earlier years in which I was here, Speaker, and in which you were here as well, where particularly on very important pieces of legislation there was committee travel. On some really large pieces of legislation there was quite extensive committee travel, not so much when the House was sitting but certainly in the break. The government of the day would make some effort to travel away from here, because Queen's Park isn't the be-all and end-all of the universe and neither, frankly, is Toronto. There are a lot more views to be had out there in the rest of the province, and the government would make it a point that committees would be able to travel to a number of communities to hear from a cross-section of people who lived in the province about their particular concerns.

Now we have gone to a situation where, if there are committee hearings, those are usually held at Queen's Park, one or two afternoons, and then we have a time allocation motion that says we move immediately into clause by clause, and that as well is time-limited. By 4 o'clock on the second afternoon of the public hearings, all of the questions shall be put, all of the amendments shall have been deemed to be debated, even if they haven't been, and that is the end of that process as well.

The government traditionally hasn't used what they are using today, which is to also say that there will effectively be no third reading debate. That's a bit of a new one they're adding to their agenda of how many ways you can actually limit debate, limit amendments and limit discussion, and that's what we have with respect to this piece of legislation.

As the time allocation says, "...the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the third reading stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

"That the vote on third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred until the next sessional day."

That's the beginning and the end of any debate on third reading. As a point of fact, there won't be any. I guess we should expect to see that in more and more of the time allocation motions the government brings forward; not only a very limited, very truncated public hearing process limited to Toronto, but probably now, added to that, will be a provision within the motion itself that says, "By the way, there won't be any third reading after you have that very truncated amendment process."

What can I say? The government has the majority. The government has the ability to put forward time allocation motions in that fashion. The government has all the ability in the world to eliminate debate in that way. I'm not sure it's particularly helpful for the democratic process; I don't think it is.

I'm not sure we can really feel that people have had a chance to have their say, because they don't under that process. If we've got concerns about why people are concerned about government generally or cynical about the political process particularly, I guess we have to say these are some of the reasons why. When it becomes painfully obvious that important bills just aren't going to get the kind of hearing they should, then people really do wonder, "What's the point? What's it all about? Why should I get involved? Why should I even send a letter saying I'm concerned? By the time I do that, the whole thing's going to be over."

I don't think that bodes well for trying to engage people in a positive way in becoming involved in the political process at any level, from expressing their concerns to watching the legislative channel to maybe other forms of involvement as well. I think that just makes it much more difficult to get rid of the perception people have or the cynicism they have about politicians and the democratic process generally.

With respect to this bill, I spent some time listening to my colleague Mr Kormos, who is our critic with respect to this matter, on the debate on second reading that took place some months ago. I remember it was quite an interesting debate because the minister was actually at the debate that evening. I give him credit for doing that. A lot of ministers don't come and deal with debate on their own bills; he did.

But what I found a bit concerning to me was the tone he adopted near the end of his debate. He was quite good to outline what the government hoped would be achieved—we don't agree with all of that and we don't believe what the government wants to achieve will be achieved by this bill, especially in relation to funding—but near the end of his remarks he said he really didn't want the bill to be held up. He didn't want the bill to go to public hearings. He wanted to make sure the bill was passed before the next anniversary of the terrible September tragedy, and wouldn't it be terrible if the NDP held it up by asking for committee hearings.

I found that rather offensive because the bill was introduced last year and then it wasn't brought forward for debate. The government finally decided to bring it forward for debate some time in June of last year, which to me clearly indicated that it wasn't much of a priority for the government if they would wait all that time to actually bring it forward for debate.

I also found it a bit offensive because the minister should have had in his possession—at least his colleague Mr Turnbull, who had been the minister before him, had in his possession a letter from the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association expressing some very serious concerns about the bill and asking for full public hearings.

My colleague Mr Kormos had the said letter in his possession and spent some time that evening reading it into the record. It was a letter that had been dated, I'm saying, around December 6. I could be wrong about which date, but it was early in December 2001, just after the bill had been introduced. They had certainly been on the ball. They had been quick to respond and sent quite a detailed letter to the minister of the day, Mr Turnbull, saying they would like some full and adequate public hearings so that their concerns around response times in particular could be addressed.

It was really passing strange that here we were in June dealing for the first time with the debate on second reading and we had the next minister of public security saying very clearly to members in this House, "I don't want public hearings. I'm not interested in that. I'm going to do whatever I can to have that not happen," completely disregarding this letter that had been sent. It could be that his colleague Mr Turnbull had never given him a copy of the letter. Maybe that's what happened. I hope that wasn't the case because the professional firefighters' association is a pretty important group of folks. They represent the unionized firefighters in this province, and there are thousands and thousands of them. They are also at the front line when it comes to the provision of emergency services. I certainly think they would have something important to say at public hearings and I would have hoped the new minister would have wanted to hear what they had to say at those public hearings.

It was interesting that during the course of debate that June evening, a debate that was quite entertaining with respect to the performance by my colleague Mr Kormos, the existence of the said letter came about. A copy was given, I think at that time or soon after, to Mr Runciman and, probably because of it being raised, there were some limited public hearings that finally took place. I gather the professional firefighters were there to raise the concerns I'm going to relate. But it was too bad that the way the matter was presented was one where essentially we were told we have a gun to our head. "Get this bill done. We don't want to have this bill hanging over our head a year after the September 11 tragedy," which would make it look like the government wasn't interested in emergency measures. "We want to get this bill wrapped up tonight," that being June.

I'm glad we said, "No, it's not going to be this way. People who directly provide front-line emergency services have concerns. They also should have a right to have their say, since it's going to impact on them and their municipalities directly." We said no to the minister. We were not going to let the bill go second and third reading that night, and have it pass so he could stand up and say, "We did something as a result of the September 11 tragedy."

I still think that because of the very limited nature of the debate that took place in committee with respect to the public hearings, we don't have a bill that responds to all of those concerns and that a lot of this could have been done much better. What can I say? I don't think it really was a priority for this government. If it had been, it would have been debated last December. We could have had some appropriate hearings during the break in the early spring and we could have been back dealing with this when the House resumed last April, after the Tory leadership. We could have had it done in June, but we could have had a much better bill, I think, than what is before us. We continue to have some major concerns.

Let me deal with some of those. They come really around the emergency measures provisions that are listed. For example, we agree that municipalities should have plans in place in the event of an emergency. That just makes common sense. But we don't think that should just be in the unlikely event of a terrorist attack. God forbid that that will happen in this province; people didn't ever think it would happen in the United States either. But we should have those things in place much more due to the natural tragedies that are going to occur, like fire or flood, for example, or, God forbid, the roof of an arena caves in in the middle of a hockey game in someone's community. Those are the much more likely occurrences with respect to emergencies that we should be dealing with, and it is true that every municipality should have in place a plan to deal with the same.

Our first concern was that, yes, obviously every municipality should have that in place and it should be updated on a regular basis. All those in the community who deal with emergency services should participate in the initial setting of the plan if it's not in place, although most municipalities have already done that without this legislation. But for those who didn't, there should be a broad cross-section of the community involved in the provision of emergency services who deal, first, with the establishment of that initial plan, and then, on a regular basis, are part of both the monitoring of how effective it is and part of any process that requires change in it.

Secondly, flowing from that is that you can put a plan in place that calls for these many emergency personnel, be it fire, police or paramedics etc, and you can have standards that are set by the province with respect to how many you should have per population and what your response time should be for each of those emergency personnel, but the real dilemma and the problem we continue to have with this bill is that if you don't have the funding in place to support that, to back it up, then you're going to continue to have problems dealing with emergency situations. If you cannot, as a municipality, afford to hire the firefighters you need to deal with provincial standards with respect to response times, what does that do for someone who is having their house burn down or their business burn down? It does nothing.

The reality of this bill is that while the government will be setting standards with respect to many of those important provisions, the government has done nothing with respect to stepping up to the plate itself to put the money on the table to allow municipalities to hire the personnel to ensure that those standards are met. So this process is a sham. The process of setting standards with no money on the table to hire the personnel to make it happen is a sham. You give false protection to people in municipalities who think that somehow, because standards are passed, everything else will fall into place: that municipalities will be in a position to hire the firefighters they need, to hire the paramedics they need, to hire the police officers they need. We know that with this government's downloading, that just is not the case.

This is a government that, several years ago, down-loaded 100% of public transit on to municipalities. It's a government that down-loaded 20% of all childcare and family resource costs on to municipalities, 100% of all library services down to municipalities, 100% of all ambulance services down to municipalities, 100% of all assessment services down to municipalities, and the list goes on. While this government—

Mrs Marie Bountrogianni (Hamilton Mountain): Second-stage housing.

Ms Martel: Thank you very much. Second-stage housing cancelled totally: that's now a responsibility of the agencies at the local level.

There is an enormous list of the responsibilities that this government has handed down without providing the corresponding funding that used to be there for the provision of those same services. You've got municipalities that are already cash-strapped because of the download of all these services with no corresponding provincial funding to make it happen, and now the government says, "We're going to develop some new standards with respect to response times. By the way, municipalities, we're going to add to your financial burden even further, because it's going to be on your backs and on the backs of your ratepayers to find the money necessary to have those personnel in place so those response times can be matched." I can tell you, there's going to be a whole whack of municipalities out there that aren't going to have the money to do it. We are doing nothing for people in terms of providing adequate or sufficient or effective emergency protection when we don't give them the money to back up those standards.

That is a particular concern that we have had throughout the course of the limited debate of this bill, and it was a concern that my colleague Mr Kormos raised again during the public hearings. I suspect, although I didn't have time to see the transcripts of those that came forward, that was probably a concern raised by the professional firefighters as well when they were before the committee. They certainly do see the need to deal with better, faster, quicker response times, but that means more firefighters, and that means municipalities paying for those firefighters, and that means having municipalities in the first place that can find the money to do that. Most can't. I'm concerned that in trying to adhere to the standards, municipalities will be forced one more time to go back to their taxpayers and raise their municipal taxes again to cover off standards that this government should be dealing with by providing the provincial funding to those municipalities to make these standards and adequate protection and increased hiring actually happen.

When my colleague Mr Kormos was at committee, he moved three amendments on behalf of our party. I regret to say that none of the three were accepted by this government.

The first had to do with section 3 of the bill, which talked about training and exercises. It read as follows:

"(3) Section 3 of the act is amended by adding the following subsections:

"Training and exercises

"(5) Every municipality shall conduct training programs and exercises to ensure the readiness of employees of the municipality and other persons to act under the emergency plan.

"Review of plan

"(6) Every municipality shall review and, if necessary, revise its emergency plan" every three years.

"Offence

"(7) A municipality that fails to comply with subsection (1) or (6) is guilty of an offence."

You see, it's not enough just to have the plan. It really is imperative—it's critical, vital—that the training exercises be undertaken so that all of those emergency personnel who are involved can respond, and respond adequately: know the details, know them in and out, know them clearly and be able to respond at a moment's notice. But there's a cost attached to that too. Here again the government falls down on the job, because for municipalities to be able to conduct the training programs and exercises to make sure their emergency personnel are ready to deal with any broad range of emergencies that could occur, they really do need some money to do that.

I said earlier that most of these municipalities are already cash-strapped. They're not even sure where the money is going to come from to hire the emergency personnel that are required, much less on a regular and routine basis have training exercises that allow those emergency personnel to be very clear that they are going to be ready. It's a question of funding. It's a question that the government has refused to deal with.

The second amendment we moved was to section 8 of the bill. We said that it should be struck out and the following substituted:

"8. Subsection 6(2) of the act, as amended by the Statutes of Ontario, 1999, chapter 12, schedule P, section 4, is repealed and the following substituted:

"Training and exercises

"(2) Every minister of the crown described in clause (1)(a) and every agency, board, commission or other branch of government described in clause (1)(b) shall conduct training programs and exercises to ensure the readiness of crown employees and other persons to act under their emergency plans.

"Review of plan

"(3) Every minister of the crown described in clause (1)(a) and every agency, board, commission or other branch of government described in clause (1)(b) shall review and, if necessary, revise its emergency plan every three years.

"Offence

"(4) A minister of the crown described in clause (1)(a), in his or her capacity as representative of the crown in right of Ontario, and an agency, board, commission or other branch of government described in clause (1)(b) that fails to comply with subsections (1) or (3) is guilty of an offence."

That would have made it mandatory for all government agencies involved and municipalities to ensure the readiness of their own crown employees and the persons who are designated to act under emergency plans. I just think this makes some sense. I mean, why wouldn't you want to ensure that your own personnel are ready, not only the personnel in the municipality who are on the front line, but in the case of crown agencies and communities as well, why wouldn't you want your own staff to be ready?

I don't understand why the government didn't accept this amendment. It seems to me to be a reasonable one. It seems to me to be one that would guarantee that people understood what the plan was, were prepared to respond to it, could be in a position to update it on a regular basis if necessary, and yet the government refused to accept this amendment that was put forward. I just clearly do not understand why.

The other amendment that was put forward by Mr Kormos, relating to section 16 of the bill, said the following:

"Emergency response standards

"(1.1) The chief, Emergency Management Ontario shall set emergency response standards for emergency plans, based on consultations held with the persons or organizations that the chief considers appropriate including,

"(a) employees of municipalities, crown employees and other persons who are responsible for the provision of necessary services in emergency response and recovery activities;

"(b) the associations or unions that represent the employees and other persons described in clause (a);

"(c) the fire marshal; and

"(d) municipalities."

Here, what we were trying to encourage the government to do was to have a broad consultation with the parties who would be most affected or who would have the most expertise and/or to have a broad consultation so that the standards that are set out with respect to emergency plans are appropriate, are adequate, make sense, can be followed, can be managed etc.

If you want to set out standards that you're asking municipalities to live by—and the government is doing that in this bill—you want to have standards that are realistic, that are reasonable, that are logical, that make sense, that can be adhered to, that can be carried out. So you need a broad range of people for the government to consult with, and we made it very clear who some of those should be: municipalities, who themselves have to also have their own emergency plans; crown employees; unions that represent many of those personnel, unions representing paramedics, the police, or firefighters; the fire marshal etc.

This is a really good provision. It calls for broad consultation with those people who have the expertise with respect to emergency standards that will be required for emergency plans. Again, regrettably, for a reason that I cannot fathom, the government members voted against that particular amendment too. That has nothing to do with money. It has nothing to do with the government actually providing some money to municipalities to increase the number of emergency personnel. It had everything to do with open, intelligent and broad consultation with people in the know about emergency services and emergency situations.

I don't understand why the government wouldn't even accept that simple amendment, which would have encouraged them—more than encouraged; said to them directly—"These are the types of people you as the government need to consult with when you develop the standards that you talk about in the bill." I think it would have made inordinate good sense for the government to adopt that recommendation. I'm sorry they didn't, and I don't understand why they didn't.

The other thing that could have been done at committee—and I regret that it was not, and I say this in all seriousness because I'm not sure where these things are then going to be dealt with. There was a terrible tragedy in our community in April 2001. It was a house fire in a residential neighbourhood. A grandmother and two young children were killed in that fire. It was a horrific, terrible tragedy and it has really struck a chord throughout our whole community.

As a result of the three deaths that were involved, of course the coroner's office had an inquest. A coroner's jury sat for 20 days in our community earlier this fall to hear the testimony and evidence and to hear about what had happened from a broad range of people who had been implicated or involved. That testimony was very gut-wrenching. It was very difficult for those who were involved because of what happened. Many people have pointed the finger at the firefighters and have been very vicious in their condemnation of those firefighters who were involved. I found that to be most regrettable, because I know that not one of those firefighters would have ever wanted to see those three people die. But that's what happened—not by everyone, but by some. That came out over the course of the testimony during the coroner's inquest.

What also came out at the end of the inquest was a list of the recommendations from the coroner's jury. These came out on October 4. They are quite extensive. I congratulate the coroner's jury. I think they took their job very, very seriously. They were very affected by the testimony that was heard at the inquest, and they have come forward with a number of recommendations that affect the provincial government, the municipality and the Ontario fire marshal's office. I really hope that the government will respond to these.

I would have hoped that the government would have seen Bill 148 as an opportunity to incorporate some of the coroner's recommendations, because some of them call directly on the government to do a number of things. I think the government has missed a very important opportunity by not incorporating into Bill 148 the coroner's jury recommendations with respect to this fire. I think that is an opportunity that has been lost. It would have been an excellent opportunity for the government to show clearly that they too were concerned about the recommendations that affect the province directly and that they were committed to dealing promptly, adequately and effectively with those recommendations.

I think I will go through some of the ones that affect the province. I really want to encourage this government, because it's not going to happen through the course of Bill 148, to deal with these in a timely fashion to show our community that the government is responsive to the jury's recommendations and will act on them to ensure that a tragedy like this is never going to happen again. They include some of the following:

"To the provincial government...that radio and television air time be made available for disseminating fire safety information targeted at adult education." The jury suggested short, repetitive messages be developed by the Ontario fire marshal's office.

Secondly, "The Ministry of Education should make mandatory programs such as Risk Watch for children in all Ontario elementary curriculums as well as licensed daycare facilities and private schools. The rationale is inquest evidence indicated this is at the local school board's discretion and the deceased's guardian was unaware of the Risk Watch program.

"The ministry should also make mandatory fire drill procedures for all educational facilities. As an example, head counts.

"The Ontario fire marshal's office should develop a fire safety program for secondary schools that would be made mandatory in the curriculum. The fire marshal's office should also develop a training record for fire-fighters and then be responsible for receipt of accurate, precise and up-to-date data....

"The fire marshal's office should also develop a standard operating procedure for accurate timing of personnel arriving at a fire scene as evidence indicated there was no method for determining the arrival time of fire personnel....

"The province should formally adopt a standardized incident command system that would be developed by the Ontario fire marshal's office to be used by all fire departments. Further, the Ontario fire marshal's office should monitor, police and enforce compliance.

"All municipalities"—should—"be required by regulations to prepare a master fire plan in the form and manner as specified by the fire marshal's office. Master plans should be submitted to OFM for review and comment every five years and be developed using a comprehensive risk assessment and resource rationalization process....

"The Ministry of Public Safety and Security should establish minimum fire protection and public education requirements specified in the OFM guideline be incorporated as a regulation under the Fire Prevention and Protection Act. This should include completion of a comprehensive risk assessment, smoke alarm program, escape planning, distribution of public information and inspections on complaint or request.

"The Ontario fire code should be amended to include a smoke detector on every level of each residence in Ontario, smoke detector in every bedroom and carbon monoxide detector on every level of a home.

"The province adopt a standard for installation, maintenance and use of emergency services communications systems and dispatch facilities and centres in Ontario, and further, the OFM investigate, monitor and enforce compliance.

"An independent and comprehensive audit be conducted of the operations of the Ontario fire marshal's office by fire service stakeholders to review the role and effectiveness of the Ontario fire marshal.

"A pilot project be launched to include a province-wide survey to determine the effectiveness of dissemination of public child/adult education relating to fire protection."

Finally, "The province consider amending the building code to include sprinkler systems for new construction of all residential buildings."

There were a number of recommendations made that have very much to do with the province of Ontario; I've tried to highlight those. It's clear that they weren't incorporated during the limited public hearings that took place on Bill 148, and it's also clear that the government needs to respond. This was a terrible tragedy. It caught the attention of our whole community in a way that many things haven't in such a long time, because it was so tragic and because of the evidence that was heard during the coroner's inquest. People in our community really need to know that this government is taking those recommendations seriously and is going to act on them.

One of the recommendations that I didn't make mention of was a recommendation to the city itself to hire full-time firefighters in Valley East where this tragedy occurred. The recommendation was full-time, 24/7, in the three stations in that community. That's going to cost the city of Sudbury probably a million dollars to implement. I think that is money this province should give this municipality to make it happen. We are already a community that, as a result of forced amalgamation by this government, is probably facing a deficit well over $31 million—directly as a result of that amalgamation. Those are all new costs that have been downloaded to us as a result of the amalgamation. I can tell members in this House, not one of those seven municipalities had a deficit before the forced amalgamation, and now we have a cumulative deficit in the order of about $31 million. We should not be burdened—

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): They shortchanged us by $10 million.

Ms Martel: We're absolutely shortchanged, as the member for Sudbury said. It's no wonder that the government stopped the amalgamation processes after the situation in Sudbury.

This municipality should not have to try and find another $1 million to respond to the coroner's jury recommendations. The municipality has to respond; we need full-time firefighters in Valley East—all the evidence that came out made that clear. But it should not fall on the backs of ratepayers in the city of greater Sudbury to pay for that to happen. This government has an obligation to ensure that our municipality and other municipalities have adequate, appropriate emergency personnel services that are staffed to the limit they should be staffed in order to respond appropriately. That is an obligation this government should bear, and it is a responsibility the government does not want to bear, because it's clear during the course of the debate on Bill 148 that they will set new standards but not provide a dime to municipalities to hire the personnel necessary to meet those standards. I think that's shameful.

I think we have a bill before us that will essentially do nothing with respect to improving the situation in so many municipalities, because municipalities will not be able to afford to hire the personnel necessary to live up to the standards. We are offering people false hope and false protection, and that is wrong. I think this government, before they finish dealing with this bill, and this minister in particular, if he's really serious about emergency services in municipalities, should stand in his place and make a commitment that the province of Ontario is going to get up to the table and is going to put the money on the table to make sure we can hire the personnel we need, not just in the city of Sudbury with the new full-time firefighters we will need at a cost of $1 million, but in all the other communities that are going to have to increase their personnel to respond to the standards. That's what the government should do if it's really committed to emergency services in Ontario municipalities.

Mr Bob Wood (London West): It will come as no surprise to members of the House that I'm going to support the time allocation motion. I'm going to do that because I support the bill. What I'd like to do is take a few minutes to put part of the government's position on record, and a few minutes after that to put on the record some of my personal views on the best possible use of legislative time.

Since the tragic events of September 11, 2001, this government has taken significant steps to improve the safety of all residents, and to enhance security in Ontario. In addition to introducing the Emergency Readiness Act, the government has invested more than $30 million in a variety of significant and important public safety initiatives, including appointing former Royal Canadian Mounted Police Commissioner Norman Inkster, retired Major-General Lewis Mackenzie and Scott Newark, vice-chair of the Office for Victims of Crime, as security advisers on dealing with terrorist threats; and appointing Dr James Young, Chief Coroner of the province of Ontario, as commissioner of security;

Doubling Emergency Measures Ontario's budget—$3 million—to enhance its ability to respond to emergencies and assist municipalities; providing $2.5 million per year and $1.4 million in one-time funding to improve Criminal Intelligence Service Ontario's intelligence gathering capabilities; providing $709,000 in new funding recently to enable small and mid-sized police services to enhance their criminal intelligence gathering capabilities by providing 23 new positions under the community policing partnership program; bringing to 1,023 the number of new front-line police officers working in communities across the province since 1998;

Investing $2.5 million per year to train people who are first at the scene of emergencies—this includes training in heavy urban search and rescue, responding to chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear emergencies and dealing with hazardous materials; adding $1 million to expand the mandate of the provincial repeat offender parole enforcement unit, to target individuals who are illegally in the province; building an anti-terrorism training facility for police services at the Ontario Police College, $3.3 million in one-time capital funding; increasing the number of new recruits at the Ontario Police College to help police services increase public safety;

Building an emergency management training centre, $3 million in one-time capital funding, for firefighters and ambulance personnel at the Ontario Fire College in Gravenhurst; creating the provincial emergency response team, a new rapid-response unit of the Ontario Provincial Police that will be specially equipped to combat terrorist threats, $4.5 million, and an anti-terrorism unit that will investigate and track down terrorists and their supporters, $3.5 million; investing $1 million in protective equipment for front-line police officers who may have to respond to chemical, biological, radiological and nuclear attacks;

Establishing CERV Ontario, volunteer community emergency response teams, $1 million, made up of Ontario residents who volunteer their time and expertise in preparing for and responding to emergency situations; working with the owners and operators of large buildings to develop evacuation procedures—the office of the fire marshal received $600,000 in one-time funding to create a guide to help the owners and operators of large high-rise buildings and high-risk facilities develop emergency management and evacuation plans for their buildings;

Developing more specialized forensic capacity in the Centre of Forensic Sciences and making modifications to the current morgue, $600,000, to allow for testing of explosives and toxic or chemical agents, and larger scale testing of DNA; expanding the Ontario Provincial Police hate crimes and extremism unit, $400,000; investing $200,000 to establish a new, alternative provincial operations centre for Emergency Measures Ontario; hosting a counter-terrorism summit of international experts and representatives of Ontario's front-line police, fire and other emergency services personnel, February 17 to 19, 2002, in Niagara Falls, with one-time funding of $500,000.

In addition, the Ministry of the Attorney General has undertaken significant steps to protect residents of Ontario, including dedicating a specialized crown attorney to provide expert advice on terrorism; committing to vigorously prosecute the perpetrators of terrorism-related hoaxes to the full extent of crown law; assisting victims' families and loved ones by proposing the legislation before the Legislature today that will, when passed, allow a single application for a declaration of death to be brought for all legal purposes, rather than forcing survivors to make a number of individual applications, and allow the province to exceed statutory benefits to victims; calling on the federal government to create a new Criminal Code offence to specifically deal with terrorist hoaxes; introducing legislation that will improve the security of vital statistics documents and protect Ontario citizens' birth certificates and other important documents; and providing help to Ontario families whose loved ones were victims of the September 11, 2001, attacks.

As you can see, this government takes this issue very seriously. At the same time as we are implementing the initiatives I've outlined, the Minister of Public Safety and Security continues to press the federal government to ensure our borders are safe. The majority of the people coming into Ontario from the United States enter Canada at one of the border points in Ontario. Windsor, for example is one of the busiest crossings anywhere in Canada. About 80% of all truck traffic entering and leaving the country does so via Windsor. Our economy depends on goods and services moving freely back and forth. Bill 148 will enable bordering municipalities to take positive steps to ensure the safety of citizens in those communities.

If I may be permitted a more general observation, if we take some of the successes we've had in the area of our ministry over the last 50 years—by which I mean a dramatic drop in the number of fire deaths per capita in Ontario; a dramatic drop in the number of deaths, injuries and property damage per kilometre travelled by motorists in Ontario; a 30% drop in reported crime, from 1995 to 2001, in Ontario—these successes have occurred because we have had a good overall strategy which has led to incremental progress over a long period of time. I think this bill is part of that strategy and is going to achieve the same kinds of positive results that our strategies have over the years.

I'd also like to take this opportunity to make a few observations about time allocation motions and how I think we might make better use of parliamentary time than we do now. These, of course, are personal observations which I am working very vigorously to attempt to turn into government policy.

The principle of time allocation, in my opinion, is this: I think once a bill is introduced, the opposition and the government members should be given sufficient time to fully understand the bill before the Legislature, and to give all the citizens of Ontario a chance to understand it and offer their comments. There are some bills where this is not possible, where there is urgency, but in the case of most bills I'd like to suggest to the House that is possible and desirable. Indeed our time allocation rules do require a certain minimum period which works out to something like one week. I think that's important and very positive.

The other half of that is, however, that the government is also entitled to a vote after a reasonable time on any matter they have before the House. To provide otherwise would be I think a fundamentally anti-democratic step. I think our rules are basically fairly sound in terms of that principle.

Where we perhaps tend to have rules that are not what they should be is in the role of the individual members in terms of legislating. Our rules have a long way to go before we can say that these are rules that truly meet the needs of the 21st century.

Let me talk a bit about what I think should indeed be happening in the House. I think it's very important that we have partisan presentations and partisan activity in this House. It's important that this House be used in part for people to understand what the personalities are, what the platform is, what the experience is of the three parties in the House that obviously are going to seek support in the next general election.

What I'm going to propose by way of changes in the standing orders and the rules by which we do business are not intended in any way to take away from that function. What they are intended to do, however, is to give the individual members a chance to be more involved in legislating so that their ideas, particularly when they are not central to the government's agenda or the opposition's agenda, can be considered more on their merits and more in a non-partisan way.

The feeling among much of our population is of course that private members' public bills do not go anywhere in our Legislature or, for that matter, in the federal Parliament. Certainly in this Legislature, the record shows that to be wrong. If you were to take a look at the record of the last sitting, the spring 2002 sitting, approximately one quarter of the public bills passed were private members' public bills. I think that shows that we're headed in the right direction. We are indeed giving individual members more opportunity to legislate and I think that's very positive; however, we have to look for ways to enhance that opportunity and to give them more opportunity to put their ideas forward and have them fairly considered by the House.

Members will be aware of the motion I have put on the order paper whereby if a member could get 75% of the sitting MPPs to sign a petition supporting the motion, a private member could move a time allocation motion and a motion which would require a bill to be called by the House. In other words, the member would not be dependent, at any stage, on the government calling the bill. If it was the will of the House that this bill be dealt with, that member would be entitled to the same consideration the government is now entitled to, which is, of course, it will be called and the time will be limited on which debate can occur.

I think eventually—and I hope "eventually" is sooner rather later—if such a measure were to be adopted, I would hope that the threshold might drop from 75% to maybe 60%. That would give the individual members a lot more opportunity to have their ideas put forward in the House.

I also think that if we're going to do that, as I believe we should, we also have to make more time in our legislative week available for the consideration of private members' public business. Right now, it tends to be about 10% of the time that's available for the individual member's business and about 90% of the time is devoted to either government or party business, by which I mean opposition days and that sort of thing. I would suggest that a better division of that time is probably one quarter to the private members' public bills and three quarters to the other business. I think there are some ways that we could find more time.

I have not formed firm conclusions on all of the ideas I'm putting forward today, but I would invite all members of the House to give some thought to some of these ideas. As members know, the standing committee on the Legislative Assembly is currently looking at the role of the private member in this assembly. I have sat in on some of the deliberations of the committee and have participated in some of them. I think there are some very good ideas being put forward and, indeed, some consensus being developed by the members of that committee as to some things that should be done.

I'd like to make a couple of suggestions, which are really areas where we might look to achieve more time out of our weekly schedule for private members' public business.

One possibility is to add a couple of hours to the Thursday morning sitting. That, in and of itself, obviously would double the amount of time available for private members' public business.

Another thing we could look at is to take the last hour of every day—in other words, from 5 to 6 o'clock—and make that available for consideration of private members' public business. If there were a couple of hours available for public business prior to that, they could always be tacked on after 6 o'clock, pushing the whole calendar back. This might have the effect of getting us a little more quickly to business earlier in the day, so we don't have to work later at night. That may be a naive hope from my point of view, but I think we could have a full sessional day's debate of public business and also get one hour's debate at the end of each day, if we wanted to do so, for private members' public business.

I also think that if we want to empower individual members, we've got to give them more flexibility as to what they can do with their hour, by which I mean that perhaps we should say in effect to the private member, "You can do what you want with your hour. If you can squeeze three bills into your hour, that's fine. If you want to have third reading of a bill, if you want to have a resolution for part of it, and you can get the rest of the House to support what you're doing, maybe you should in effect be able to call the business for that hour."

If we're going to do that, we should make it possible for members to call other members' business. If we gave that kind of flexibility, you would find that bills that really aren't that controversial and really should go through would start going through. There tends to be a diminishing view among some that if we gave the MPPs more opportunity to legislate, we'd get bad legislation. I'd like to respectfully suggest to those people who are still concerned about this that that is not what the record of this House shows. When we look at private members' public bills in the past, I think time has shown that by and large they have been very good bills. I think what we're going to do is increase the productivity of this House by giving individual members more authority to legislate, and the province as a whole is going to be the better for it.

There's one bill I have before the House that I do want to refer to, because it relates as well to the use of legislative time. Members will be aware that some time ago I introduced a bill that would provide that the Legislature set the criteria for the appointment of judges and justices of the peace, and for legislative approval of those who are nominated to the position of judge or justice of the peace. I think if we were to do that, most of the work, if the standing orders were drafted properly, would happen in committee, but there would be some work done on the floor of the Legislature. What we would really get out of that would be pretty much what is proposed. What you would find is that elected politicians would be setting the criteria by which the appointments were made, and they would be enforcing those criteria in each and every case.

We sometimes hear our friends to the south being criticized for political circuses over the appointment of judges. When it gets right down to it—and there have been some excesses; I would acknowledge that—I think they get a better quality of appointment and wider input from elected members, and therefore from the population as a whole, in their judicial appointments. It is the 21st century, and the public expects more input and wants more accountability. I think that looking to the people they have actually elected to the Legislature to achieve that accountability can lead to some much more positive results and much greater public satisfaction with judicial appointments.

If you were to ask the general public about this, and I've done this on many occasions throughout the province, they don't really feel there's enough accountability to them from the judicial system. That would be a useful and appropriate use of some legislative time.

I'd like to also talk a bit about committees, because they are an important part of this Legislature. Normally, time allocation motions deal with how something has to be dealt with in committee. I might, by the way, mention to the previous speaker that in actual fact we accepted a couple of NDP amendments in committee on this bill. We didn't accept all of them, and I guess that's politics, but the views of her party were not ignored when we got to the amendment process. The member for Niagara Centre was at the committee that day and he actually commented on how he thought the committee process had worked rather well on this bill. I thought that was a fair comment and I endorse it as well.

What we have is very uneven results with respect to the use of committee time. Some committees work very well. They get good input from the public. They get informed consideration of the provisions of the bill. Certainly in the case of this bill, I think it is a better bill today than it was when it was first introduced because the committee process worked well.

The issue becomes, of course, how do we improve the functioning of the committees in order to get good input where it's needed and to get good clause-by-clause consideration and fair consideration of the views of all members of the Legislature? I'm not going to stand here today and say that I have all the answers, but I would like to suggest a few areas where we might look for answers.

Obviously, the House is always going to allocate a certain amount of time, unless there's agreement, to consideration by committee. It might be that we should require a reasonable amount of clause-by-clause analysis as a requirement under the standing orders. It may be that once we've allocated a block of time, we should give the Chair of the committee the responsibility of moving the debate forward. So if, to take a figure, five hours have been allocated for clause-by-clause, it would then be the responsibility of the Chair to move the debate along so that all clauses are fairly considered within that five-hour period. That means more work for the Chair, but—and I think all of us can think of instances good and bad in this area—where there has been reasonable substantive consideration of the clauses and the amendments, it's tended to make a better bill. Where that has been lacking, for whatever reason, the legislative process really has not, at that stage, added any value to the bill.

I would hope we might look at ways to make the committees function better. If we were to take a look at ways of using technology to make the committees function better, I think that would be important and helpful. I've been at a few committees where we have used technology so that people have made submissions by teleconferencing. They seem to have been favourably impressed by the experience. Certainly the committee members have found the input to be good and helpful.

We may also have to take a look at some vetting of whom we hear from, not from the point of view of excluding anyone because obviously we can hear from all by way of written submissions, but we may have to look at ways of avoiding repetition. Some repetition is obviously useful and helpful, but we sometimes tend to hear the same point again and again in some of the public submissions. We may have to look for ways we can get all the public points of view, but avoid some of the repetition that the process tends to end up with as we do it now.

There's one other thing I think we have to look at if we're going to make better use of legislative time, and that is, do we have to strengthen the research function of some of the committees? This tends to be a little stronger in the American Congress than it is here. I'm not going to stand here today and say I have firm ideas as to how that might be done, but to the extent we might do that and get the members to use it, I think we would have more effective use of committee time.

Overall, if we give some thought to all these ideas for parliamentary reform and all the ideas that are being considered by the Legislative Assembly committee, at the end of that process we're going to have much more effective use of the time of this Legislature and its committees, and the public is going to see a higher quality of law-making as a result.

I would commend those ideas to the consideration of all members of the House. I would encourage all members to make their views known to the Legislative Assembly committee, and let's see if we can't give the people a better final result by way of making our own procedures and efforts better organized and more 21st century.

Mr Ernie Parsons (Prince Edward-Hastings): I am pleased to speak to this bill. Bill 148 is a good bill. I wish I could vote for it, but I can't because it gained the time allocation that has been called on it. The difference between being a good bill and a great bill is time allocation. By restricting the debate, it restricts the opportunity for there to be some fine-tuning, for some tweaking to happen to make it a better bill.

This government says, "Unless we have time allocation motions, we just can't get it through the Legislature." I looked back over the history of this fine institution, and during the time Bill Davis and Frank Miller were Premier—they certainly had some strong sense of how to work within the parliamentary rules—they had three time allocation motions and passed a total of 292 bills. Of the 292, only three required time allocation.

With the David Peterson minority, 129 bills were passed—one time allocation motion. During the majority government of David Peterson, 183 bills were passed, and there were three time allocation motions.

This government has passed 225 bills, not as many as Davis and Miller—292 for Davis and Miller, 225 for this government—and Davis and Miller had three time allocations and the Harris-Eves government has had 99 time allocation motions so far.

Time allocation motions restrict the ability of interested parties to provide input. This is a bill that requires consultation with municipalities. This is a bill that directs municipalities to do certain things, things that need to be done. They're now requiring the municipalities to have emergency measures planning; interesting, and 86% of the municipalities already did. The requirement is good, but it shouldn't be done as an edict from above; it should be done through consultation with the municipalities.

So I certainly support the concept of Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals, and in fact it was immediately after that horrendous day on September 11 that Dalton McGuinty called for some measures to happen to address the fact that our world changed terribly in that hour period in New York City.

What Dalton McGuinty also advocated and urged was that there be some money put forward to make it happen. Rhetoric won't make us prepared for the situation. It requires some cash. Municipalities are already being hit time and again with downloading. We're seeing municipalities take on responsibilities for ambulances and so many other things and they're struggling financially. This government that purports to have cut taxes in fact has transferred them to property owners in virtually all of the cases. Here's a bill that is the essence of a good bill, but it is just not fine-tuned as far as it could be.

I was struck the day of September 11 when a spokesperson for an Ontario hospital said that at that particular instant in time there were 43 empty hospital beds in all of Ontario. When the Premier offered to take people who had been injured in New York City and provide accommodation for them in Ontario hospitals, I thought that was a most appropriate gesture. That was the right thing to do. We may quarrel from time to time, but they are our neighbours and our friends. But then I was struck when this official said, "We have 43 empty beds to accommodate emergency cases." There is no point in being prepared for emergencies if we do not have hospital beds.

Our hospitals continue to be in crisis across Ontario. In my community this government created the Quinte Healthcare Corp. It consists of four hospitals. We had Trenton, Picton, Belleville and North Hastings or Bancroft. Each of these four hospitals, prior to amalgamation, had never run a deficit, had offered full services, had enjoyed the support of the community. In fact, the community worked aggressively to fundraise and purchase many of the things, but we had four great independent hospitals that were fiscally responsible. This government said, "We've got to fix that."

All kinds of red flags went up. Here's a system that was working. An amalgamation was forced on these four hospitals and we're now seeing staff, whether it be administration, doctors or nurses, working their hearts out literally to make the system work. But the challenge they're facing is that as the government purports to make things more efficient, they make them more inefficient. They fund these four hospitals as if they are all located in one spot. They don't provide the funding for so many of the services that each of the communities value.

Here we had in Ontario, in many cases, hospitals that were functioning in just an excellent manner. This government fixed it by plunging them into crisis. Now Quinte Healthcare Corp is trying to make plans knowing that they face maybe a $5-million budget deficit this year. I would suggest they didn't fix it; they made it considerably worse.

Our ambulances: it is important in an emergency that we have enough ambulances available in all of Ontario. I'm now hearing some concerns from some parts of the province that they don't have enough ambulances. The service provided by ambulances should not depend on the local tax base, because in our province we very clearly have some areas that have a much stronger tax base with industrial-commercial than we have in rural areas.

Indeed, in rural areas the province changed the rules for taxation on farms. It used to be that farmland had three quarters of the farm taxes rebated by the provincial government. This government changed it so that the three-quarter tax rebate now comes from municipalities, with no compensating money to the municipalities. Farmers are having an extremely difficult time. The three quarters is traditional and fair, but transferring those costs is just a typical example of how the local taxpayer is being hit by this government.

Now we have to worry about ambulances, and ambulances are no longer guaranteed the standard that exists across Ontario. Oh, I know the province has passed even tougher laws that raise standards for ambulances, but they don't fund it. How can we be prepared for that?

I would suggest that the issue of the doctor shortage is critical to a province if a disaster were to occur. We can't get a family doctor for about 20% of my constituents. They're simply not there. In the event of an emergency, where are the doctors who would provide that? It may look great on paper, but I would suggest it won't look that way when you actually need a doctor.

The same thing with nurses; we saw nurses sacrificed for financial reasons and we're now unable to attract them. We say there aren't enough beds, but in actual fact there aren't enough people—I'm being distracted.

Hon Jerry J. Ouellette (Minister of Natural Resources): Your electronic device just went off.

Mr Parsons: Yes, it did. It reminded me I'm supposed to be here.

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): It's not supposed to be on.

Mr Parsons: You're right. If I put it in my pocket, it scares the daylight out of me because I never know whether it's my heart or the machine.

Interjection: I think staff is going to look after that.

Mr Parsons: I'm sure they will, but thank you very much.

I wish we could be as open in discussing this bill and its amendments as we are on the petty little things. It's great to talk petty things, but when we get to substance, this government doesn't want to talk about substance.

For all these concerns I've just talked about—we've got hospitals and ambulances in crisis—the hydro deregulation has only dramatically worsened the situation. Now hospitals that were projecting a $5-million deficit don't know what's going to happen. The government says, "We're going to do things that will make the province better prepared for an emergency." That's not happening. The hydro alone is creating dire circumstances for all our service providers.

The government says they want to make our area safer. I remember, not with fondness, the great ice storm in 1998. It actually wasn't in my area, but just to the east of us was Kingston. We have a son who lived there. We saw the entire community literally shut down. It was eerie to drive along the 401 and see the service centres black; there was no electricity to them. We went into the city of Kingston. At night there were trees down over the streets, hydro lines down, and the city was black. That cost a lot of money to restore. To put those power lines back up and put the massive towers up cost a considerable number of dollars. It happened because all of Ontario, even though the disaster was only in eastern Ontario, went together and indirectly funded Ontario Hydro or Hydro One to restore that.

With privatization, goodness knows what this government is going to do, but if they adhere to the concept of actually breaking the grid up and if we get another horrendous disaster like in eastern Ontario with the towers going down, then those people served by that company are going to be faced with massive charges to restore the power to put the system back to work. The Hydro One sale begs to be left as a monopoly, because it is a public service monopoly that will enable the rest of the province to work together and support whatever part is hit.

We also had occasion to be in Florida when Hurricane Andrew struck—absolutely awesome and terrifying. I watched as the people in that community fled the area. They got on to the interstates and the highway systems and they got out of that community. To pick Toronto as an example, with no disaster, how does the road system work here at 4 o'clock? How do people get out of Toronto on an ordinary day? Well, it's absolute gridlock on most of the highways. Can you picture this road system if there was a disaster that required the evacuation of downtown Toronto or of any of our large cities?

This government has allowed the infrastructure to deteriorate. By saying, "We're not going to fund the TTC to any significant extent and we're not going to fund GO Transit," they're encouraging worse gridlock rather than decreasing it. It has had the effect of hurting business and citizens, who now have to face a two-hour drive into work. Even worse, it puts us in the position in much of Ontario that we couldn't react to a disaster if it required us to evacuate the people out of the city. We need a strong public transit system. We need to put money into rail. We need to put money into all forms of mass transit, which are inherently more efficient than cars parked on the Don Valley, which they named "parkway" quite aptly. So the government needs to address that reality.

The government wants to be prepared for disaster, yet we have seen them strip money out of the school system. How does money going out of the school system have any reflection on being prepared for a disaster? We have small rural schools. I have them in my riding. I visit them all across the province. With the funding formula, if you have a small rural school, it doesn't generate enough money for a principal, a secretary or a custodian. So we have small rural schools in this province that have teachers in the classroom and not another person in the building.

It was brought to my attention by a parent who had a personal problem. Their spouse had been in an accident and they needed to phone the school to tell them that they were on their way, were going to pick up their daughter and were going to go to the hospital. They got an answering machine at the school. This government doesn't feel it's important to have someone at a school to answer the phone. They had to leave the message that they were on the way, and then the school would pick the message up at the end of the school day when one of the teachers went into the office and retrieved the messages.

Safety? Not at all. We've got those kids in the school with no circle of protection around them. We don't have a gatekeeper in far too many of our schools. With emergency readiness, it can be a major disaster or it could be one individual doing actions—we've seen hostage-takings in parts of the world that were horrendous. We need to restore to our schools a sense that this province values the students and will ensure that they are safe. The teachers are doing a great job, but the empty offices at the front door just increase the risk for our young people.

We need to ensure, in the event of a disaster, that we can provide some essential services. We live in a rural area, and if the electric system goes down, we lose not just the heat and the light but we lose our water supply. And if we're going to have urban areas struck by disaster, we need to have in place things that ensure that power continues to flow to the pumps. People need water to drink. We need water for fire protection.

There are so many things that I'm sure this bill wanted to address, but they are things that have to be accommodated by discussions, co-operation and indeed funding to the municipalities involved. That is not going to happen under this bill. This bill arbitrarily says, "Here's the new bar. We're setting it a certain height." I agree with that height, but it's no use to say—we have a number of children. I can't say to one of my children, "Go to the store and buy a loaf of bread. I require you to go and buy a loaf," but give them no money. So they're pretty hollow words when we say, "Municipalities, you have to do this. You have to meet these standards. You have to be ready."

It needs to be done. We have neglected it. I think everybody's been guilty of that. I can remember the day, with Emergency Measures Ontario, when we used to have these sirens up on the school roofs. They used to go off from time to time. And you know how we fixed them from going off? We cut the wires going to them. That was the way we silenced them, because we lived in a world where we had a sense that we weren't worried about terrorism, weren't worried about bad things happening to us. The world has changed so dramatically now that we need to recognize that it's not enough just to talk about it. We have to fund it.

As the member for Brant said earlier, this province has traditionally not funded things such as our fire services. Very clearly, we're asking them to take on roles that we didn't ask them to take on 10 years ago. We're asking municipalities to do more things. In my community, with Highway 401 running through it, I watch the volunteer fire departments from my area spend, I don't know, a third or maybe half of their calls out on the 401, which is really a provincial responsibility. They're out on the 401 extracting victims from vehicles, helping with fires etc.

We're all in this together. It is not good enough to simply give orders to someone. We're all in this together. I support the concept of the bill, but I have no choice but to vote against it, because yet again the invocation of time allocation on it will prevent this bill from becoming what it truly could be, which is a great bill.

Mr Wayne Wettlaufer (Kitchener Centre): I listened with great interest to the member opposite, the member from Prince Edward-Hastings. Let me start off by saying that I'm truly disappointed to hear how bad, how depressed things are in his riding of Prince Edward-Hastings. My son-in-law Ryan Bell comes from that area, comes from that riding, as a matter of fact, and his parents and his grandparents still live there and they've told me about what a great place it used to be. When we had a different member here, four years ago, we never heard about how depressed it was but rather how good it was, so I would suggest that maybe after the next election it would be a lot better if we had another member from the Progressive Conservative Party, and we will take every step we can to ensure that we do have another member from the Progressive Conservative Party in that riding at that time.

It's really interesting when I hear the members opposite talk about the need for another time allocation motion and about how much legislation was passed in a previous government without time allocation. But a member from that previous government was here recently and I had a long chat with him. He said in all his years in his government, he had never seen the vicious tactics employed by an opposition that he is seeing, that he is witnessing here now. He said, "You know, there was a level of co-operation between government parties and opposition parties back then. It's shameful the tactics the opposition employs now." I just pass that on for the record.

I have to say that I also heard my colleague Bob Wood, the member for London West, speak about the need for Bill 148, An Act to provide for declarations of death in certain circumstances and to amend the Emergency Plans Act. I think September 11, 2001, if we can go back to that, changed life for all of us. I remember—and I'm not afraid to admit this—I was out golfing the morning of September 11. I was golfing with a couple of business people who wanted to use that opportunity to discuss some issues of concern to them in my riding. We came off the golf course and the one student who works there for the summer said, "Did you hear the news? The World Trade Center has just been bombed." Then he explained that airplanes had flown into it, that many people were killed and that the World Trade Center had collapsed.

The feeling of disbelief that came over me—I actually smiled, because I was looking for the punchline. I thought it was a joke. I could not believe that this had actually taken place.

This feeling of security and complacency that we have as citizens of this wonderful country called Canada, in this lovely continent of North America, was shattered. I can only say that it was devastating. It was devastating for me; it was devastating for everyone who lives here.

Suddenly a couple of weeks ago there was a bombing in Bali. We have a terrorist group around the world that is determined to destroy our economy, destroy our way of life, destroy tourism throughout the world. They will do anything they can to achieve their own ends, even to the point that when sniper assassin attacks take place, as they did in Maryland, people are searching to see whether or not that is related to al Qaeda or some other terrorist organization.

That's why it was important for our government to move quickly, as we did after September 11, 2001, to ensure the ongoing safety of our residents in this great province. This government has invested more than $30 million to fight terrorism. The members opposite say, "Oh, $30 million isn't enough." Every time we make an announcement of money being spent in this province, the people opposite say, "It's not enough." How many times have we heard that in this place?

Interjection.

Mr Wettlaufer: You people opposite would increase spending on absolutely every area in this province. You could increase spending to $100 billion so fast you would increase the debt to $30 billion or $40 billion each year. You don't have any concept of how much $30 million is; the people in Ontario do. You people are out of touch with your own constituents.

1700

This government can't go it alone. The federal government must also act to close the gaping holes in our immigration laws. They need to protect our borders. They need to identify and stamp out terrorist cells. We've read recently—well, in the last couple years, I guess—about the marijuana home-grow operations. There's been some suspicion in some parts of the country that the proceeds from these home-grow operations are being used to finance terrorist activities throughout the world. Maybe they are, maybe they aren't, but the point is there are thousands of these going on throughout Canada right now and it is not inconceivable that they can generate $300,000 to $350,000 of tax-free, ill-gotten income every two to three months. One of these home-grow operations in a home can generate 350 plants. At $1,000 a plant, you're looking at $350,000, and you have thousands of these throughout the country. Perhaps this money is going to terrorism.

Hon Mr Galt: Two crops would pay for the house.

Mr Wettlaufer: Yes, two crops would pay for the house—you said it. One crop would pay for the house.

Our Minister of Public Safety and Security, Bob Runciman, asked the federal government yesterday or a couple days ago to impose much stricter minimum penalties in order to ensure that some of these home-grow operations are cut out. Right now what is happening is that judges are handing out very minimal sentences, often conditional sentences. I have to say, this is subject to federal law. They provide for very weak minimum penalties.

Municipalities also have a role to play, and this government will work with them. The bill changes the name from the Emergency Plans Act to the Emergency Management Act. It improves or expands the scope of the act. If passed, and I expect it will, the act is being amended to provide for every municipality in the province developing and implementing an emergency management program. Presently the act permits municipalities to develop a plan; now it will be mandatory. The local council will pass a bylaw to adopt such a program and that will ensure that all residents will know that their local council is in sync with the rest of the province. There will be consistent standards throughout the province.

The emergency management program will be more than just a document; it will be real, current and complete. Not only will the municipality have to implement a plan, but its employees will have to be trained and regular exercises of the plan will have to be carried out. What we have found is that while 90% of the municipalities presently have plans, less than 50% of them actually have training programs in effect for their employees.

The public will also have to be notified on the risks to public safety and will have to be made aware of plans for preparedness for emergencies. Speaker, you're as old as I am—unfortunately, you are. You will remember back in the 1950s we used to have air raid sirens going off all the time. As children, we were being prepared in the event of an air raid. We had to get under our desks in the schools and be prepared. It may be necessary to have an education program again in effect so the people of the municipalities, the people of this province can be prepared for an emergency.

In developing the emergency management program, every municipality will have to identify and assess the various hazards and risks to public safety that could lead to an emergency if certain infrastructures, such as our nuclear plants around the province, are compromised. And in those geographic areas where a specific type of emergency might exist, municipalities, under direction by the Lieutenant Governor in Council, can be directed to ensure their emergency plans address their special circumstances.

Because the nature of emergencies, whether man-made or natural, is constantly changing, municipalities will be required to review their emergency plans annually to make whatever changes are required. These plans, therefore, are not just going to gather dust on somebody's bookshelf someplace, but they will change to reflect the needs of the municipalities and the province.

We realize that Bill 148 will put additional pressure on municipalities to be prepared, but we are also putting additional pressure on ourselves, the government of Ontario. We are going to take positive steps, through this act, to ensure that all ministries that would be affected by emergencies are also prepared. Every minister of the crown who presides over a ministry of the government, and every agency, board, commission and other branch of government designated by the Lieutenant Governor in Council must develop and implement an emergency management program. All ministry employees must be trained in the plan and know the procedures to be followed in emergency response and recovery activities. Each of those 12 designated ministries must identify and assess the various hazards and risks to public safety that could cause emergencies and, like municipalities, they must review and, if necessary, revise their emergency plan every year.

All municipalities and all ministries must submit their emergency plans to the chief of Emergency Measures Ontario, thus ensuring that EMO, a central repository for emergency plans, will have the latest version of those emergency plans. Emergency Measures Ontario will become Emergency Management Ontario to again reflect its expanded mandate.

The legislation we are considering today is very important. It is very vital to the ongoing safety of our communities and the government. We have doubled spending. And although the bill was introduced as a direct result of the terrorist activities of September 11, it is important to note that it will also apply in those cases of natural disasters, natural emergencies, like the ice storm in eastern Ontario in 1998.

I ask all members to give very strong consideration to passing this bill. I ask them to give very strong consideration to co-operating with the government in an effort to ensure that the people of Ontario are adequately protected. I know some of them feel that it's not adequate. They may honestly feel that it's not adequate or they may be acting politically and opposing it for the sake of opposing it, as they often do. I'm not going to question their motive; I don't do that. But I ask them to consider themselves, that if they are opposing the legislation or if they are opposing time allocation only for the sake of opposing it, to give strong consideration to their motives because the people of Ontario deserve adequate protection. They don't need this adequate protection a year from now. They need it now. That is why it is so important that we move ahead with this.

For the sake of the members opposite and the people of Ontario, I want to go back to some quotes of support back when we passed the emergency act. I refer to Fred LeBlanc, president of the Ontario Professional Fire Fighters Association. He says, "Bill 148 ... is a good first step and opportunity toward making the citizens of Ontario safer. By ensuring that municipalities must have emergency planning in place will force long overdue inventories of our emergency services and their effectiveness to respond to large-scale incidents.” He said that. I directly quoted from what Fred LeBlanc said.

Ann Mulvale, the president of the Association of Municipalities of Ontario, says, “This legislation will certainly assist Ontarians and their communities to prepare for emergencies and save lives in the future.... Municipal leaders are committed to ensuring that their emergency plans work and that emergency services are ready to respond.”

J.P. Bernier, vice-president and general counsel of the Canadian Life and Health Insurance Association, said, “We would like to commend the government for taking this legislative initiative in response to the 9/11 tragedy, of seeking to remove many of the legal and procedural obstacles standing in the way of families and representatives endeavouring to settle the estates of persons who have either disappeared in known tragic circumstances and whose remains cannot be found or of those persons who have simply disappeared and have not been seen or heard from for many years.”

All three of these experts want the legislation passed. They support it in the interests of Ontarians. They don't support it thinking it might pass six months or a year from now. They want it passed now. The interests of Ontarians are served if this legislation is passed now. I urge the members opposite not to oppose this for the sake of opposing it, but to please consider the interests of Ontarians.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): There's both a benefit and a liability to a time allocation motion. The liability, of course, is that it's yet another example of the government trying to close down debate on an important issue before the House. The advantage is that it allows the flexibility for those of us who wish to offer an intervention, the flexibility of being able to speak of a number of issues despite the fact we are talking about a time allocation, so I will utilize the latter to some advantage.

First of all, I must say that in principle I vote against time allocation motions. I think everyone in opposition should do so. I think there are some in government who should, if not vote against the time allocation motion, absent themselves from time to time because they recognize this is the crushing of debate on yet another subject before the House.

What people have to know is that the government will win every vote in this House. They have a majority and if their whip, the person in charge of getting everybody together for the vote, does his or her job, that means the government has guaranteed winning every vote in the Legislature. So the concern that somehow, if the opposition votes against a time allocation motion, it has some effect is nonsensical.

I wish that instead of discussing a time allocation motion this afternoon, once again we were dealing with the issue that's on the minds of all members of the Ontario Legislature, and that's the issue of their hydro bills that are coming in at skyrocketing rates. On a daily basis I receive probably a dozen telephone calls, letters, e-mails and other communications from people who are expressing their concern about the skyrocketing hydro bills they're facing.

They would understand if it were a very modest increase, particularly in light of weather conditions and so on; they're not people who are not understanding of that. But what they're seeing is a doubling and a tripling and a quadrupling of those bills, and it's particularly difficult for people on a fixed income or people who have a very modest income from which to pay their bills. At the same time they're receiving these huge hydro bills, I have to say that they're also receiving huge insurance bills because insurance rates are going up. Water bills are now increasing. Even before the legislation is passed, municipalities are now increasing their water bills. Natural gas bills are going up. If you go to the pump, despite the fact there were the gas-busters on the other side who were going to bring down the price of gasoline at the pump, we see that that has gone up as well. This is what is confronting people and this is what they want us to talk about in the House.

I suspect that tomorrow or some time this week the government will withdraw from its present position; that is, it will start to either cap or freeze or promise an instant rebate, something of that nature, because even members of the government are expressing behind closed doors to the Premier and members of the cabinet their concern that this is having a devastating effect on the people they represent and, second, that it will have a devastating political effect on the government if something isn't done to stop it.

Unfortunately, the people of this province were promised when the government brought in its plan that there would be a reduction in the cost of electricity and there would be all kinds of new generating capacity coming on. Exactly the opposite has happened. Even those who were applauding the government for its initial plans out there in the private sector are saying today that the government has botched the way it has implemented them and as a result we have neither new capacity nor lower prices. We have capacity which seems to be diminishing and prices which are escalating at an unacceptable rate.

I expect some time this week we're going to see the government retrench. You'll hear the bugle of retreat being sounded, you'll see the white flag coming up, and the government will understand that it has made a drastic error and that unless it withdraws from that error it will be in considerable trouble.

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): What's the error? Tell us what the error is.

Mr Bradley: I want to say to my good friend from Niagara Falls, because he would agree with me on this, that one way of increasing capacity to a certain extent would be to proceed with what he and I would call the Beck 3 project, increasing capacity at Niagara Falls. It would create for his riding and for the Niagara region hundreds upon hundreds of new jobs in construction alone. It would also of course increase the generation capacity for Ontario Power Generation to come on to the grid, enough to light a city such as Kitchener, for instance, that kind of capacity. The member for Kitchener would love to have that, I'm sure, on the grid.

Best of all from an environmental point of view, it would be benign. The Chair of the alternative fuels committee is with us this afternoon and he will recall our many discussions in committee about the advisability of proceeding with the Beck 3 project. So I hope that the Premier will listen to what the Leader of the Opposition, Dalton McGuinty, had to say when he was in Niagara Falls and in this Legislature, and what I have said for a number of years, that it's advisable to proceed with Beck 3. I know I can count on my good friend from Niagara Falls. And the Deputy Premier would be in favour of it; I know that as a fact.

We would all be happy if the government proceeded with it. I would applaud. Of course, I would point out the government was capitulating to pressure from the opposition, that would be my role, but I've got to tell you—and from our committee. Doug, from our committee, was very positive about that opportunity. He and I would agree on that. So I hope that announcement is to be made. I suspect it might well be made, because the government needs this capacity.

I want to say as well that this afternoon, rather than a time allocation motion, I would like to be discussing the disaster situation facing the ambulance dispatch service in the Niagara region. I received a call that said the dispatch service is down this afternoon. Apparently there's a technical problem, and they're operating with some kind of makeshift technical equipment at this time. That is totally unacceptable.

If you had asked me two years ago, "Do you think the province should be in charge of land ambulances and the dispatch of those," I would have said, "Yes, the province should have that service if it invests the proper funds in it and so on." A decision was made by this government to transfer land ambulances to the local municipalities. Now that that decision has been made, the local municipalities are saying, "We would like the opportunity to be in charge of the last aspect of it, the ambulance dispatch."

In Niagara, people such as the member for Niagara Falls and me face this situation: we would like to have people working in that office who know Niagara and its street and grid systems intimately, so that the risk of mistakes being made is considerably diminished. What we have instead is a central dispatch system in Hamilton which is drastically underfunded, the people are not appropriately trained by the Ministry of Health, the equipment is outdated and the people aren't familiar with the local road system because they must deal with several municipalities. In exasperation, the regional municipality of Niagara, like the city of Ottawa—and successfully in the case of Ottawa—has asked for the transfer of that to the local municipality with appropriate compensation for the transfer and for assuming that responsibility.

It makes sense. We need a Niagara dispatch service. Tragically, there have been some errors made in dispatch and, as a result, it is alleged that people have died. In some other cases, people have been delayed getting to the hospital, so that their state of health is worse than it might otherwise have been. I can think right off the top of my head of three individuals I know personally who have experienced that situation.

One was with the recent death of a person I happened to know extremely well. I was at the funeral and somebody came up to me and said, "Do you know what the situation was in terms of the ambulance dispatch?" In the opinion of this friend of the deceased, that person would have easily lived if the ambulance had been there on time and the dispatch had been done appropriately. That's sad. It's a situation that will be left up to the coroner and, if there are any, up to the legal proceedings.

I say to members of the government that you have to move expeditiously to transfer this responsibility now, along with the funding, to the regional municipality of Niagara. They're prepared to take it on, as was the city of Ottawa, and I think that's probably the best solution.

As for the central dispatch centre in Hamilton, operated by the Ministry of Health, it will still require updated equipment. It will require people who are well compensated, so that you don't have a turnover of people on almost a monthly basis, and you don't have a workload that's so great that it makes the job stressful, people want to leave and mistakes can be made.

There was secret report—my friend from Kitchener would be interested in this. The government actually kept a report on this secret for several months. Finally, an enterprising reporter was able to obtain a copy of the report, and it was a report condemning the Ministry of Health. But what I think is of even more concern to many people was that the report was kept secret. I know my friend from Niagara Falls was concerned when he learned how the government had kept that report secret, because he's obviously as concerned as I am about the dispatch situation in Niagara.

I heard my good friend from Kitchener again mention, "Where would you get some of the money?" Well, that's always a lovely open question, because this government has spent in excess of a quarter of a billion dollars on government advertising. If you took the money from government advertising and spent it on worthwhile projects, he'd be happy and I'd be happy. Now, the whiz kids in the Premier's office who say, "You have to do this advertising to make the government look good," wouldn't be happy, but I think most of us in this House on both sides would rather see that funding invested in real services.

The Minister of Long-Term Care is with us today. He knows how people reacted vehemently against the 15% increase for the fragile and elderly who are in our long-term-care homes and nursing homes, and only after a major uproar was there a little bit of a back-off on the part of the government. At first the government said, "You just have to put up with this."

Some of the members over there might think I'm just being too suspicious, but I said at the time, "You know what it was? Those people dared to sign these cards and send them in saying the level of care in our nursing homes compared to, say, Saskatchewan in 1999 is rather bad."

I see a prop on the other side being held up by the Minister of Long-Term Care. I think he's holding up a figure that says, "$100 million," which is, I would say, about a third of what this government has spent on government advertising. I think that's what he said.

But petition after petition has been presented in this Legislature asking for a substantial investment in improving the care in our long-term homes and not pushing the cost of this on people who are often on fixed incomes, the frail and the elderly in our province. Those people are still angry by what this government did in the summer; even though it tried to make it better, it still did that.

I recognize that sometimes these petitions have some effect, and that's why I come to this House on almost a daily basis to present those petitions about matters of great concern.

Interjection.

Mr Bradley: I do sign them because members are required to sign the petitions, saying that they're in complete agreement with their contents, and I'm happy to do that.

In terms, generally, of this bill, for those on the government side, I bet you were as surprised as I was by the last provincial budget when my good friend Bob Runciman had his budget cut by at least $60 million, because I had thought that this government wanted to portray itself as a law-and-order government. I even offered to my good friend Bob Runciman to help him get some of that money back that they had taken out of his budget, because it was a shock.

As for this bill that we have before us, I think it is important—and I hope all members of the Legislature would understand—to have a coordinated effort in terms of emergency response. Municipalities have some onerous new obligations as a result of this bill—I think they expected that was going to be the case—and I think we have to be able to respond to all emergency situations. The situation in New York and Washington, where airplanes were used as weapons, certainly brought home to us in a very sober way what can happen, and there's a need for a response to that. There's also a need for a response to other disasters. But our local municipalities are saying, "You have foisted upon us, and sometimes with a good deal of justification, new obligations which are costly. We as municipalities have only the municipal property tax, which does not take into account a person's ability to pay, or local user fees to raise funds. So we would like you, the provincial government, to be a funding partner, hand in hand, so to speak, with the municipalities."

If you want to implement the provisions of this bill, and I think there are some good provisions in this bill, I think that it's necessary to provide those municipalities with adequate funding to be able to make the adjustments to purchase the new equipment, to train the people and to hire new people in this province. If you're to do that, I think this bill would be even better received than it has been to this point in time.

I do not project and have not projected a prolonged debate on this legislation. I can't speak for the NDP, but I don't see things in this bill that make us want to vote against the bill. I know there are some things missing in this legislation, but I think this time allocation motion, this motion closing off debate, is entirely unnecessary. I find it unfortunate that the government is employing this tactic once again.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I appreciate the opportunity to participate in the debate. Let me say at the outset that as a former Solicitor General responsible for the Emergency Plans Act, I have a great deal of sympathy for making this a priority, and quite frankly I don't have a lot of problems with the idea of making the guidelines, the regulations, all mandatory as opposed to just enabling legislation. But having said that, there are a few things that need to be said.

First of all, I want to respond a bit, like my friend from St Catharines, to the comments of the member for Kitchener Centre. You said in your comments—through you, Speaker—that the people of Ontario deserve protection now, given the nature of the bill, and made reference to what happened on September 11 and talked about other disasters, and rightly so. But let's keep in mind—don't put this on us again. First of all, my friend from St Catharines is absolutely correct: you've got a majority. At the end of the day, you can do virtually anything you want. In fact, you can even do things that are unlawful. We and citizens have had to take you to court on a number of occasions and challenge your government under the Constitution and under the charter, and you've lost them.

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): Five times.

Mr Christopherson: One of my friends, Mr Patten, is saying, "Five times." Out of that, I'm not sure how many they lost, but probably the majority.

Mr Patten: All of them.

Mr Christopherson: He's saying, "All of them." It may be, but I certainly know, a lot of the big ones. You were told at the time, "Don't do this. It's against the charter. It's against people's rights. It's against the Constitution," and you went ahead and did it anyway. With that kind of context, don't roll in here today and try to make the argument that this thing is not law because the opposition is holding you up.

When you say that the people deserve the protection now, I look at the first and second readings. It's printed right on the front of your bill. It was introduced December 6, 2001. The member claims it was as a result of September 11. I'll take him at his word that that's what happened. They probably had these amendments under consideration in the ministry and they were probably fast-tracked to bring them forward. Totally understandable, totally acceptable. Makes a lot of sense.

We had another session after December. You could even argue that if it was that important, you would have done it that December. If you wanted to bring in time allocation, you could have rammed it through and made it law before the end of last year. But you didn't do that. Let's give you the benefit of the doubt and say there were good reasons. I don't recall what they were, but let's just say they're there.

Now we're into the spring session. You didn't call this bill until June 27. That's probably within a handful of days of when the House rose. If this is that important, I say to my colleague from Kitchener Centre, that Ontario deserves protection now, where were you last spring? Why didn't you call this up as the first order of business, or at least within the first week? How about within the first month? Then if you wanted to make the argument we're preventing it from being law as fast as it could be and make all your arguments, you might have a case. But you let that whole session go by, all of it until the dying days on June 27, when you called it for second reading.

Now here we are into the last third—certainly the second half, and probably the last third—of this session, given that next week is constit week for Remembrance Day. You didn't even make it a priority this time around.

We may or may not decide that's something we want to attack the government for, because they let this thing lie around, but it sure takes on a whole different life when one of the government backbenchers gets up on his hind legs and says that it's all our fault, that this thing is such motherhood in terms of the protection it offers the people of Ontario that we, the awful opposition benches, ought not to be blocking this. Give me a break. That really is a bit over the top. You wonder why things that otherwise should get some support don't. You're the majority. If you want co-operation, what you do is use that power you have to give us things that we want. Usually it's more time, either on the floor of the House here or in committee. That's usually all we ask. But when there's this kind of attitude, it makes it difficult for us to stand up and want to be co-operative. I would advise the member that when he wants to point blame, he ought to start with his own government House leader and ask, "Why didn't you make this law earlier this year?" Don't point the finger at us. That just doesn't wash.

There was no need for that argument. It looks gratuitous. There was just no need to do that. It's almost like you've got a little plaque on each of your desks that just says, "Blame someone," and no matter what, during the course of a speech you've got to find somebody to blame for something. In this case, it was supposedly us for holding this up, which is nonsensical.

Interjection.

Mr Christopherson: With that, I'm about to move off, unless you want to say something else. I've got nine minutes. What have you got to say?

Mr Wettlaufer: I just said that you're a good scapegoat.

Mr Christopherson: What can I tell you? I give him a chance to heckle me and all he says is, "You're a good scapegoat."

The bill itself and changing the name from "emergency plans" to "emergency management": I don't know the history of that. There probably is a very good reason, other than just a modernization of the name. Certainly it reflects what you do in an emergency, which is manage your way through it. That's what emergencies are: crisis. All the usual systems, everything that normally happens in the course of a day, procedures, are blown out the window because you've got this crisis. So I don't know. There may be good reason, but even just from a common sense point of view, if you will, I certainly wouldn't have any problem with the fact that you've changed the name.

If I have a problem, however, it's two things. One is, once again you're making this mandatory and you want to take all the credit. It sounds a bit like what you did with brownfields and a couple of other issues where you wanted to stand up and take the credit for having done something but you weren't coughing up the bucks to pay for it.

Anybody who knows anything about what's happening in municipalities and our communities, whether it's health care, the school board or the management of municipal services, will know that the municipalities can't take any more downloading. I can tell you from my experience in Hamilton and our neighbours in St Catharines, Grimsby and all across the Ontario, that every elected councillor and every elected mayor makes the safety and security of their citizens the absolute number one priority. So every dime they can squeeze out of their budget to go to police services, to go to fire services, and now ambulance services, they do that. But it's not the end of their responsibilities. You've given municipalities a lot more.

I've got to tell you, I don't have a lot of hope that this government is going to change its tune toward municipalities because, yes, it does come down to dollars at the end of the day. Let's remember that you thought there was certainly cash enough to give out billions of dollars in tax cuts, tax cuts that benefited the very wealthy a lot more than the average working family in Hamilton. You had billions and billions—it's got to be getting close to $10 billion annualized now—that you felt you didn't need in terms of managing the province, and so you spent it. It's an expenditure. You spent that money on a tax cut. As the books work, it makes no difference whether you spend it on a tax cut or spend it on municipal police and fire and emergency services; it's all an expenditure. That was your priority.

Yet today, they want to stand in their place and say, "The opposition wants to spend money"—I was going to say "like water," but water is becoming very much a commodity like oil. But you seem to think that we only want to spend money. I want to put it back on you that you spent all those billions, only you spent it on tax cuts. And here we are, rightfully so, talking about the security and safety of Ontarians as an absolute priority, which it should be, but you don't have any money. So your tax cuts are more important than giving firefighters and police officers and ambulance personnel the money they need to protect our citizens on the street. That was your choice.

Further to that, while you want to tell everybody else they should be responsible for the safety and security of their citizens, the line ministry that's responsible in Ontario, the former Ministry of the Solicitor General, now known as the Ministry of Public Safety and Security—you cut that operational budget by $73 million. Since you're not spending money on very much else, it all has to be going to more of your tax cuts. You know, $73 million would go a long way in municipalities, especially smaller ones that don't have the same base as some of the larger communities. I'm not saying the larger ones are on easy street by any stretch, but certainly $100,000 or $50,000 goes a long, long way in smaller communities, and there's still enough money for you to support the larger communities.

Why should this matter to all citizens? Because emergencies don't just happen in somebody else's community; they happen in your own, or perhaps you're visiting another municipality. The member for Kitchener Centre rightfully pointed out the ice storm as an example of a natural emergency. It was a good example. But it would have been just as easy for someone who lived in western Ontario to have found themselves on the border of Ontario and Quebec, caught up in that emergency and stranded without power and water and all the other services that were denied as a result.

So I agree entirely that this is a matter for all of us, and it's not just terrorists. I would say that probably most emergencies and crises that happen within our communities are not terror-related but are either some kind of structural problem, like a roof caving in on something, or indeed a natural disaster, as my friend has pointed out. So this is important. It affects all of us.

In the last couple of minutes I do want to point out and brag a little about Hamilton. Hamilton has been providing the major conference on emergency planning that is recognized around the world, and we've been doing it—I should know the year—for probably the better part of a decade now. Long before September 11 was imagined in anybody's worst nightmare, long before the ice storm disaster, Hamilton was developing expertise in this area. The conferences, the symposiums that are held every year are now attended by government and business representatives from around the world. That's how far advanced Hamilton is in terms of emergency planning. But even we in Hamilton would like to do a better job, and whether or not we're going to meet these standards remains to be seen, because we don't know what those final regulations are. And since you won't put in the bill a guarantee that you'll at least consult—not even consider, just consult—with anyone else, we don't know what those standards are going to be or who's going to get the final say in what they look like. I'll bet that even Hamilton, as advanced as we are in emergency planning, is still going to have some difficulty meeting some of the standards you're rightfully going to want to set but don't want to give us any money to help out.

I don't normally go out of my way to say nice things about Liberals, but I will give Paul Martin this much. I was at the FCM conference, because it was in my riding, and I was sitting in the front row when he made a commitment to municipalities that I have never heard before from any federal minister of any political stripe. Unfortunately, he was fired within 48 hours and it remains to be seen where that is at the end of the day.

I want to end my remarks where I began them: I don't have a lot of hope that you're going to do anything different between now and the next election, and we debate that point virtually every day here. I do have hope that the federal Liberals will honour the commitment. If it's Paul Martin who's elected, or somebody else, so be it, but somebody's got to step in and start supporting municipalities. And I'm not just making these comments for what might appear to be obvious reasons. I'm not the only one saying that. Municipalities, at the end of the day, are where our families are raised. That's where we live. That's where local economies work or don't work. It's defined by how well our municipalities function, and they're in crisis. So, good idea, the right thing to do, but the municipalities need some money to do the job properly.

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): This completes the time allocated for debate.

Mr Galt has moved government notice of motion number 51. Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry?

All in favour will say "aye."

All opposed will say "nay."

In my opinion, the ayes have it.

Call in the members. This will be a 10-minute bell.

The division bells rang from 1746 to 1756.

The Acting Speaker: All those in favour will please rise one at a time and be recognized by the Clerk.

ADJOURNMENT DEBATE

The Acting Speaker (Mr Michael A. Brown): Pursuant to standing order 37, the question that the House do now adjourn is deemed to have been made. The member for Davenport has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to a question given yesterday by the Minister of Health. The member for Davenport has up to five minutes to debate the matter, and the parliamentary assistant or the minister may reply for up to five minutes.

DOCTOR SHORTAGE

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): I was not satisfied with the answer the minister gave me when I asked him about the crisis that some communities are experiencing in terms of doctor shortages in Ontario.

I had indicated to him that his exciting, what he calls "fast-track" program accepted only 44 out of 709 doctors who applied.

But let's start from the beginning. Ontario is desperate for doctors. Right now, the province is short 1,585 positions, including specialists. That number could double in 10 years as more than 3,000 doctors approach retirement age. The Ontario Medical Association estimates that the doctor shortage will negatively affect nearly one million people in Ontario. That is unacceptable.

The Harris-Eves Tories commissioned several studies into the doctor shortage but failed to act for months, despite urgings from Dalton McGuinty and the Ontario Liberals. In February 2001, Dalton McGuinty released his physician shortage action plan, which detailed several ways in which the government could take action to address the problem. To date, the government has acted on some of these recommendations that were contained in the Dalton McGuinty plan, but more needs to be done.

One short-term solution to addressing the physician shortage is accessing foreign-trained doctors who are living in Ontario. There are no accurate statistics on exactly how many licensed physicians from other countries have immigrated to Canada and live in Ontario.

The Association of International Physicians and Surgeons of Ontario represents over 1,000 internationally trained doctors, but they estimate that twice as many may reside here in Ontario.

Right now in Ontario there are 90 positions available to allow foreign-trained physicians to become licensed, 50 positions within the traditional accreditation program that can take up to five years, and 40 new positions within the six-month assessment period.

In 2002, over 500 people applied for 40 positions available in the fast-track program. Some 327 foreign-trained physicians applied for the family medicine portion of the fast-track program, but do you know how many were accepted? Only four.

The barriers facing foreign-trained physicians trying to get licensed in Ontario are varied:

(1) There are not enough residency positions to accommodate foreign physicians who have been deemed qualified to fill them. Without this residency, most foreign-trained doctors cannot be licensed. We need to increase these residency positions.

(2) Various exams and residency requirements do not offer enough flexibility.

(3) The cost of the qualifying process: the cost of tests alone can amount to over $5,000.

Ontario Liberals believe that accessing foreign-trained physicians is a key part of the solution to our doctor shortage. We believe the high standards for professional accreditation must be maintained, but that more foreign-trained physicians must be licensed to practise medicine here. These two objectives are not mutually exclusive.

Finally, Dalton McGuinty and Sandra Pupatello have created a foreign-trained physician registry that will record information on the number and whereabouts of foreign-trained doctors living in Ontario. The purpose of the registry is to gather information that will allow Ontario Liberals to better gauge how many foreign-trained doctors are living in Ontario—but not only Liberals; every party is interested in this program and should therefore listen—and to assess what obstacles they encountered while trying to become licensed to practise medicine here in Ontario.

I want to announce right here that Dalton McGuinty's foreign-trained physician registry can be accessed at www.daltonmcguinty.com. If anyone is interested in this program and wants to register, please follow this: www.daltonmcguinty.com is the way to go.

So I say to this minister, he has not properly answered my question: why is it that we have created a bottleneck in Ontario? It makes absolutely no sense to have foreign-trained physicians living right here—the numbers are great, some estimate over 3,000—and at the same time we have a doctor shortage. This cannot be.

Hon Tony Clement (Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I would like to thank the member for Davenport for allowing me this opportunity to inform not only this House but all Ontarians about the initiatives of the Eves government in the field of physician supply.

First, with your indulgence, Mr Speaker, I would like to dwell upon several accomplishments of the Eves government that we have made up to this point in health care. In 1995 health care spending stood at $17.6 billion. Today we are spending $25.5 billion, or 47 cents on the dollar. To put it another way, this government has increased spending on health care by 45%. Our government has increased per capita spending on health care by almost 25% since 1995. We have increased spending on hospitals by over $2 billion, or almost 30%. We have increased the number of MRI machines to 43, an increase of over 350% from the 12 that were operating under the NDP and Liberal governments. Not only that, our government in May of this year announced plans to add up to 20 new MRI machines over the next little while.

This government has introduced initiatives such as Telehealth Ontario and the universal influenza immunization program. We've also added over 1,300 products to the Ontario drug benefit program. We're doing all this despite the fact that the opposition's Liberal cousins in Ottawa have failed to live up to their end of the bargain in funding health care. In 1995 the Chrétien-Martin government contributed 18% of health care costs. Today, due to the decreases in transfer payments, the federal Liberals have contributed only 14 cents on the dollar.

In response to the member for Davenport and his question on physician supply, I would be happy at this time to inform him of what the Eves government has done so far and what we are planning to do in the future. Since 1999 our government has increased enrolment in medical schools by 30%, to almost 700 first-year positions. We are offering up to $40,000 in tuition reimbursement and location incentives for medical students to practise in underserved areas upon their graduation. We are creating a new northern medical school with campuses in Sudbury and Thunder Bay. In September 2004, over 50 first-year students will be enrolled to help serve northern Ontario's need for health care professionals. This is the first new medical school to open in Ontario in over 30 years. We sponsored the 2002 health professionals recruitment tour. Since this government was elected in 1995, the number of active physicians has increased by 4.4%.

In terms of international medical graduates, our record is one of innovation second to none. Since 1999 we have increased the number of physicians in the international medical graduates program. Today 90 foreign-trained physicians are eligible for the program every year. We believe that foreign-trained doctors and medical specialists represent an invaluable source of skilled providers who can bolster the supply of doctors in underserved areas. Yes, it is true: this government will be making an important announcement very soon regarding international medical graduates. While I realize the member for Davenport is anxiously awaiting the announcement, he, like everyone else, has to wait for the final details to be resolved, and at that point we will be making the announcement. I'm sure that he will agree with me on the importance of this announcement, and I'm looking forward to his support once the announcement has been unveiled.

Talking about international medical graduates, it's interesting to see how the Liberals are addressing this issue. So far the only peep of policy coming from across the floor can be found on their Web site. I noticed, as the honourable member mentioned, that they are initiating the foreign-trained physician registry. It reminds me, perhaps, of The Bay's on-line bridal registry in terms of the paucity of information. I noticed as well that you can also get Gerry Phillips's treasury watch on this particular Web site, but it says you need the Adobe Acrobat Reader. I always knew he was very acrobatic when it came to his figures, but I'm glad to see that's available.

When average Ontarians look at the facts and see the progress the Eves government is making on international medical graduates, and compare this to the Liberals, they will once again come to the conclusion that the Ontario Liberals and Dalton McGuinty are still not up to the job.

SLOT MACHINES

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Pursuant to standing order 37(a), the member for York Centre has given notice of his dissatisfaction with the answer to his question given by the Premier concerning Picov Downs.

Mr Monte Kwinter (York Centre): The reason for my dissatisfaction is that I am trying to get a very simple answer and am getting sort of a partial answer. The reason for my concern is that this issue is very, very confusing, in that different positions by different ministers are being put forward.

For example, on April 10, Tim Hudak, who at the time was the minister responsible, wrote to Norman Picov, who is the operator of Picov Downs, and said: "I am writing to advise you that the OLGC has been directed to begin discussions with you for the establishment of a slot machine facility, with up to 800 slot machines...." What he's saying is that they have been directed to enter into discussions for them to get these slot machines. He said, "This decision is further to a cabinet direction in December for the OLGC to complete a business case for slots at Picov Downs" and Quinte Exhibition Raceway. This means that in December the cabinet direction was, "Do a business case and see whether it makes any sense to put these slot machines into this facility." The letter goes on to say, "In March, cabinet reviewed and approved the business case as part of the provincial gaming strategy."

This letter is very clear. It talks about a direction to the lottery corporation in December to do a business case. In March, cabinet reviewed it and approved it. You'd think that would be very straightforward; that's the end of it.

What has happened is that we have two confusing statements by Tim Hudak, and then on October 31, 2002, last Thursday, Mr Flaherty, when he was debating my motion to call for a public inquiry, revealed that at the December 2001 cabinet meeting a decision was made to permit Picov Downs to implement a slot machine facility.

On one hand, we have Mr Flaherty saying it was done in December, and on the other hand, Mr Hudak says it was done in March. Compounding the problem, Susanna Kelley of TVO, on her program, Fourth Reading, showed a leaked cabinet document that said the decision was made on March 6, 2002. So here we have confirmation that it was in March, and on the other hand we have one minister saying "December" and one minister saying "March."

Why is that important? The reason is that there's another whole element to this, because the Attorney General, who now has responsibility, keeps saying they may not get any slot machines. That, of course, was confirmed today by the Premier. He said, "He will have to wait until they have finished their deliberations to give him the actual answer as to how many machines, if any, Picov Downs will be allowed." Why would you, as the Finance Minister and the member for the Durham region, announce that you got it if there's a possibility you might not get any?

The other problem is that today in question period, when I questioned the Premier, he said, "It is my understanding that a decision was made with respect to Picov Downs...." So now the Premier has confirmed that a decision has been made. When I questioned why one minister was saying one thing and the other minister was saying something else, he said, "I don't believe what those two individuals said is exactly accurate."

That presents a whole new range of issues. If the Premier is saying that what Mr Flaherty is saying and what Mr Hudak is saying is not exactly accurate, then whom are we to believe? All I want is a definitive answer, just so I know what we're dealing with. Was the decision taken? We've seen a leaked cabinet document that says the decision was taken March 6. Minister Hudak wrote a letter to the applicant saying that in March the cabinet reviewed and approved the decision. We have Mr Flaherty saying it was done in December. Not only that, Mr Hudak says the decision in December only says there is to be a business—

The Deputy Speaker: The member's time has expired. The Chair recognizes the member for Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale.

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): In answer to the member's question, in December 2001, cabinet directed the Ministry of Tourism, Culture and Recreation to proceed with allowing Picov Downs to implement a slot facility once—this is important—the OLGC completed a business case for Picov Downs. That is important.

This government will continue to take a responsible approach to gaming. We are still going through the process. The final number of slot machines for Picov Downs has not been decided. I think that was one of the questions. Picov Downs will follow the exact same impartial process that has been used for more than a dozen racetracks all across Ontario.

The government's decision to locate slot machines at Picov Downs is based on a business case prepared by OLGC and the existence of approved local zoning bylaws. Before the government is in a position to confirm any number of slots, Picov Downs must, among other things, meet Ontario Racing Commission licensing requirements, develop a business plan supporting a racetrack with slot machines, negotiate a revenue-sharing agreement with the province and enter into a site-holder agreement with the OLGC.

Across the province, the slot machine initiative has proven to be extremely successful, as you may know. It has created more than 3,000 new jobs, helped develop the 45,000-person-strong horseracing industry and provided almost $112 million to municipalities which host slot machines at racetracks. I know at Woodbine, which I live close to, there are a number of slot machines, and I suppose it's a mutually beneficial type of arrangement.

The Deputy Speaker: The business of the House is finished, and it stands adjourned until 6:45 this evening.

The House adjourned at 1818.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

ASSEMBLÉE LÉGISLATIVE DE L'ONTARIO

Mardi 5 novembre 2002

The House met at 1845.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

SAFE DRINKING WATER ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 SUR LA SALUBRITÉ DE L'EAU POTABLE

Resuming the debate adjourned on November 4, 2002, on the motion for second reading of Bill 195, An Act respecting safe drinking water / Projet de loi 195, Loi ayant trait à la salubrité de l'eau potable.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): The Chair recognizes the chief government whip from Northumberland.

Hon Doug Galt (Minister without Portfolio): I ask for unanimous consent that on Bill 195 this evening each party be given a maximum of 20 minutes for debate. There would be no questions and answers and that would be called a sessional day.

The Deputy Speaker: Is there consent? Agreed?

Mr Peter Kormos (Niagara Centre): If I may, Speaker, with no further business called and the House to adjourn upon the completion of that hour.

The Deputy Speaker: With that addition at the end of the request, is it agreed? It is agreed.

We are looking for debate. I'm looking to my left to the third party.

Mr David Christopherson (Hamilton West): I appreciate the opportunity to speak to Bill 195. What I find quite remarkable about this is that to listen to the government members, you'd swear clean water and the environment were the most important issues the government could ever have in front of them.

I see one of the members on the backbenches nodding their head up and down, "yep, yep, yep." That must have been what they were told in caucus. I'll cut this member a lot of slack. He hasn't been here all that long. He's probably still the newest member—not to identify anybody, AL.

The fact of the matter is that for all their bragging about what they're doing in this bill, this is still the government of Walkerton. This is still the government that Justice O'Connor said was at least in part responsible for seven people dying and over 2,000 being seriously ill, and some of those people are going to face health conditions for the rest of their lives.

I have to tell you that this did not come as a huge shock, certainly to us in the NDP. Take a look at the debates from the early days of this government. Take a look at what we said about what will happen if you cut the budget of the Ministry of the Environment by 50%. Take a look at what we said will happen to the Ministry of the Environment and the environment in general in this province if you eliminate one third of the staff. How can any of you in good conscience stand up and say you're the party of clean water when you're the government that carved up the Ministry of the Environment? Why did you do it? To put it into other people programs or protections? No, to pay for your tax cuts. That's what's borderline obscene about this.

I have a great deal of room to acknowledge that there are good things in this bill, and there are. It's not nearly what it should be or could be, but none of what's in this bill, in my opinion, justifies a single government member standing up and bragging about anything to do with the environment. You marched in there, lockstep, in June 1995 and the only thing that mattered was finding the money to pay for your tax cuts.

The Ministry of the Environment was like the Holy Grail of targets because a lot of your friends didn't like the Ministry of the Environment. They didn't like the requirements and regulations and, yes, the red tape that was in place in the Ministry of the Environment. Why? Obviously there's nothing secret about this and there's nothing that difficult to figure out. When people are investing and building things, and they spend a lot of money and time, the last thing they want to run into is some bureaucrat from the government saying, "You can't do this," or, "If you do this, it's going to cost you this amount of money," or, "You're going to have to change your plans." Who wants that, particularly if you've put an awful lot of your own personal money on the line for a development project? Totally understandable. That doesn't make them a bad human being, at least not in my books. They're doing what this system tells them they should do, especially under this government.

But we have a responsibility to look at issues beyond making a buck. The responsibility of the government of Ontario in concert with the federal government and the municipal government is, yes, to provide an environment where those who want to invest that money can do so, and want to and will make a profit—not a problem—but it is the responsibility of each of those governments to protect the citizens so that in the mad dash to make a buck some innocent child doesn't get hurt.

I, for one, have never been able to understand how this government and how some—or many, most, all, I don't know—of their members can separate being supportive of the police, being supportive of firefighters, but somehow when it comes to the environment, that's not a public safety issue. Go make that speech in Walkerton. Go up there and make a speech that says, "Environmental protection really isn't as important as police or fire." You can't make that speech.

If the government of the day does not rise to the responsibilities that are bestowed upon them, who's going to do it? There's nowhere else to go. The rest of the system out there is designed to make money, and we've all benefited from that in terms of the quality of life, the standard of life. You look over the course of history. There's lots that I hope gets improved over the years and I hope this isn't the end of the road, but make no mistake, it does work. But there's nobody else out there investing money and making a profit in saving lives. That's what you elect an MPP for; that's why you elect an MP or a city councillor or a reeve or a mayor or, ultimately, a Premier. You not only let the people of Ontario down, you did it by design.

Simply, I couldn't go on as an elected person if I believed that the other side of the House, as much as I may disagree with them on so many issues, any of them, went to bed at night and said, "I was prepared to make a trade-off of a few lives for the amount of investment the province would see." I refuse to believe there is anybody that could get elected to this place and that's the way they actually saw the world.

But make no mistake, you were told what some of the implications were and you chose to look the other way. Those of you in decision-making positions and the rest of you just followed the leader. There are lots of examples in history where, after the fact, people said, "Why did you blindly follow? Why didn't you ask questions? Why didn't you do something?" Yet to the best of my knowledge there's not one member of the Ontario government caucus who spoke out against the cuts to the Ministry of the Environment and said they shouldn't happen.

The provincial medical officer of health was in the cabinet room, and testified at the O'Connor inquiry that while he was briefing the Premier of Ontario on the implications of the kinds of cuts to the ministry that they were proposing, that Premier turned his back on him. You had no right to do that. You had no right and you still have no right to do that.

And now there are seven people dead.

When you read about some of the health conditions that some of the people in that area are going to have to live through—we're talking of hundreds of people. In a lot of cases, we're talking about children who have had permanent organ damage.

This is not just opposition rhetoric. The inquiry was very clear: your cuts were in part responsible for what happened at Walkerton. The very least you could have done was bring in a bill that was as good as the one Marilyn Churley brought in. I don't care where you sit in this place, you've got to have respect for somebody like Marilyn, who takes an issue like the environment and, from the day she was a community activist right through to her time at the cabinet table—and I can give personal testimony; I was at the cabinet table with her—dedicated whatever political responsibility and political authority she could muster to the cause of the environment. That's the kind of person who brought in Bill 3. I know the politics that went on, some of it very disappointing, I want to say, and to the relief of some, I will not go into details. But the politics around what happened are pretty shameful. At the end of the day, that bill should have moved forward, and if there were amendments to be made, they should have been made at committee. But that bill was stronger than the one we have here.

I've got to tell you, it's easier for a government to bring in a new bill that doesn't contain some of the clauses they want to avoid, as opposed to going in and taking Ms Churley's bill and moving amendments to take things out, but that's the effect of what's happened. This is not the bill it could have been. I will say again, and as my time unwinds I will try to remember to say before I sit down, that there are some good things in here. The bill, in and of itself, is not a bad bill, as many are that come from the government benches, but it should be so much more.

At the very least, why aren't you putting back in place some things that made a difference? For example, there was a program in this province in place when this government took over called the leaking underground storage tanks, interestingly called LUST, but those were the toughest regulations in North America. And do you know what it was about? It was about holding tanks in the ground: gas, oil, other chemicals, other by-products that are buried in the ground and then just buried over and sometimes asphalted over, and then ultimately just abandoned by someone who sells the property. I represent an older community that's affected by this in a big way, and do you know what's really scary? We don't even know where all these tanks are, let alone what to do with the ones we find. Here was a huge environmental issue, because the chemicals in these tanks, the substances, would leak into the ground and ultimately into our groundwater.

Is it any surprise that it was Marilyn Churley who brought that forward? It dealt with clean water. That makes sense. I can tell you, if you're sitting in Sudbury, Windsor, Hamilton, Toronto, any of the larger, older, established communities, particularly those that have had a large manufacturing sector, if you're looking at that kind of program from where I'm looking at it in Hamilton, this is a very good thing, because it's a program and it's money to help do something about human-made danger to our clean water supply.

You killed it. You killed the program. Don't look at me like that; I'm not making this up. The program was there. It did good. Your government came into power and killed it. It's that straight-up, and if anybody wants to argue differently, go for it. You're up after me. It's the leaking underground storage tanks. Somebody stand up and tell me during your time, which is coming very shortly, that I'm wrong, or point out to me where you replaced it with something that's equal—equal.

That's not the only example. CURB, Clean Up Rural Beaches; this one should really hit home. It was a whole program to work with farmers to keep manure away from the water supply. Does that start to ring a bell, folks? Does that start to ring a bell about what happened in Walkerton?

Interjection.

Mr Christopherson: I hear the Minister of Agriculture mumbling something. If you've got something to say, I'd love to hear it. But as far as I know, that program provided education, money and assistance for some of the very factors that created and caused Walkerton. Your government killed it because you needed the bucks. You needed the bucks to go from environmental protection into money spent on tax gifts, which is what they were and what the remain—gifts.

1900

Let's not forget, as we head into the election period, this is the same government that changed the laws—unilaterally, for the first time in the history of this place—for funding our election campaigns. No other government has changed those laws without the agreement of all three parties. You changed that too. You brought in a unilateral law that changed how elections are funded. Boy oh boy, you start to connect the dots.

You can now give 50% more money to a political party than you could before. I'm not sure how much that helps a steelworker who, at best, maybe can scrape together 100 or 200 bucks to contribute to a campaign, if they're politically aware and active. I'm not sure how much that change will affect them. But, boy, it's going to change a whole lot of huge corporations that are giving thousands, multiple thousands. Those are the folks who got the benefit of Ontarians losing key environmental protections that you killed in order to save the money and put it over here in the "Tax Gift for our Friends" column.

Why doesn't this new law say that Ontarians have a right to clean water? That's another question I would pose when the government members get up to speak. Let's not forget this is the same government that stood up and talked about rights for innocent victims of crime, only to roll in their government lawyers to argue against two Ontario women who wanted their rights upheld, the rights they were told they had by this government. You were real keen to throw around rights and pretend to give people things then. Why isn't there a simple clause that says, "Ontarians have a right to expect their government to provide them with clean water"?

A government might argue, "It could tie our hands. It might force us to spend money we don't want to spend or money we've decided to give in yet more tax cuts." Maybe. Do you know what? If you're into a down cycle in the economy, it can be that dollars are tough and, heaven forbid, you might have to go into a deficit position for a year or two if it means maintaining the programs, staff and the checks and balances that make sure you can turn on the tap and get a drink of water and you don't have to worry about handing it to your child and giving them a fatal glass of poison.

It's a trade-off we make when we give assurances and guarantees. In the absence of those guarantees, I say people have a right to question how much commitment this government really has toward clean drinking water versus how much of it is a need to get over a political problem. Because I don't hear the government announcing that they're going to put back some of the money—let alone all of it—they took out of the Ministry of the Environment, or hire back some of those very people that this government fired. There have been a few selected announcements along the way. I remember current and previous ministers of the environment giving the odd announcement here and there. But that's not the same at all as dealing with the Ministry of the Environment the same as you would, or anyone else would, the Ministry of Public Safety and Security.

So I come back to where I began. It's not a bad bill. It's not nearly as good as it should be. This government has no right to brag about anything in here that is of benefit, because I don't think they've adequately accepted their responsibilities for what happened at Walkerton. I think every government member who speaks to this should have just a little bit of shame at the fact that it was on your watch that seven people died, that it was under your watch that half the budget was slashed and a third of the people who worked in the Ministry of the Environment, professionals whose career commitment was to protect the air we breathe, the ground underneath us and, yes, the water we drink.

More needs to be done. More people like Marilyn Churley should be listened to with respect, and what she has to say should be made into law. Then we'll be doing something about water in this province.

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): I take pleasure in joining the debate on the Safe Drinking Water Act. I listened very closely to the member from Hamilton West, whose party was in government from 1990 to 1995. I also went through a by-election not that long ago, six months ago, where the candidates I faced blamed me personally for Walkerton, which I guess is politics, which I think is being played here today and which I don't really care for. The fact remains that when they were in power, not once did they come to the city of North Bay and say, "Put in a water filtration plant." Not once. By the grace of God, nothing happened in my area.

I remember running in the municipal campaign, and one of the main platforms I ran on was safe drinking water. It was one of the platforms I truly believed in. I find it offensive that members across are pointing their fingers at me directly and stating that somehow it was my responsibility, which is outrageous, because I took the stance right from day one.

Unfortunately some people died in Walkerton, and I don't think we should be playing politics with that. Our thoughts are with those people. There was a problem. Things happened. Now we have to take the steps to make sure this never happens again, and this is where I believe this new drinking water act will come into play. I believe it will be the toughest Safe Drinking Water Act in the world.

I listened to the member from Hamilton West say that in principle this is a good bill. Obviously he will state there should be changes and amendments, as they did when they fully supported the red light cameras and when they fully supported "pull to the left." They're playing politics with certain bills that I think should just have unanimous consent to go through the House so we could debate this bill. Shame on both parties across for trying to tie up the time in this Legislature on two bills that don't really have as much importance as safe drinking water. I want to make that very clear. As the member from Nipissing, I want to be very clear that this is very important.

Mr Richard Patten (Ottawa Centre): Get off your high horse.

Mr McDonald: I listen to the different members across who are heckling. That's just the way this House is. Obviously they don't have respect for my opinion. And that's OK; I listen to that every day. But this is an important act. We're committed to ensuring that Ontario has and enforces the best and toughest clean water policies in the world.

In part two of the report of the Walkerton inquiry—and the member from Hamilton West will know this—Commissioner O'Connor was firm about Ontario's need for legislation that would ensure the safety of our drinking water. This proposed bill supports delivery of 50 of the 93 recommendations in part two of that report. For the purposes of this discussion, though, I will focus my comments on the compliance and enforcement provisions in the proposed bill.

A key priority of this government is to include the public in the decision-making process. To this end, our objective is to implement all—that is, all—the recommendations of the O'Connor report as clear evidence of this commitment. We are unwavering and committed to setting and enforcing tough environmental standards.

A number of recommendations related to compliance and enforcement are nested within recommendation 67—I don't know if all the members across know what recommendation 67 is; I see them looking it up in their books—of the proposed Safe Drinking Water Act.

In addition, Commissioner O'Connor made the following recommendations:

"Recommendation 72: The provincial government should create an office of Chief Inspector—Drinking Water Systems;

"Recommendation 73: Inspectors should be required to have the same or higher qualifications as the operators of the systems they inspect and should receive special training in inspections;

"Recommendation 74: The Ministry of the Environment should increase its commitment to the use of mandatory abatement;

"Recommendation 75: The Ministry of the Environment should increase its commitment to strict enforcement of all regulations and provisions related to the safety of drinking water;

"Recommendation 76: The Ministry of the Environment should initiate a process whereby the public can require the investigations and enforcement branch to investigate alleged violations of drinking water provisions."

The bill would modernize and strengthen the laws that protect the quality of our environment. What we propose is to strengthen compliance and enforcement provisions, and we will create this new position of chief inspector. We are prepared to take a tough stance and give our chief inspector the tools he or she needs to enforce the Safe Drinking Water Act.

The duties of the chief inspector are defined in the proposed act. We believe these duties provide the chief inspector with the level of authority he or she needs to effectively fulfill his or her obligations. For example, the chief inspector shall provide advice and recommendations to the content of the ministry's inspection policy and be responsible for implementing the policy; be responsible for developing and updating the inspection protocol; be responsible for developing, updating and implementing the inspection training program; monitor the overall frequency and adequacy of inspections; report to the public about the overall performance of Ontario's water supply systems and inspections programs; and finally, perform any other duty as may be prescribed by this legislation.

Specific compliance and enforcement provisions would also include the following: systems with deficiencies must have a follow-up inspection within one year; the minister shall have explicit authority to issue directives on inspection policies and protocols; the Ministry of the Environment will also train inspectors to ensure that they have the same or higher level of qualifications of the systems they inspect; as well, they will receive special training in inspections; and we will also establish clear procedures for addressing requests from the public for the investigation of alleged offences.

In addition to being guided by Commissioner O'Connor's report, the proposed compliance and enforcement provisions are already based on a strong foundation. In the report Managing the Environment, A Review of Best Practices, we have outlined a framework for this government to move forward with a vision that will enable the Ministry of the Environment to carry out its core business of environmental protection more effectively.

The bill is very consistent. It's based on the premise that in order to ensure sound environmental stewardship, Ontario must have clear laws, stringent regulations and tough standards in place. It also sets the stage to move beyond what is required by law and adopt an ethic of continuous improvement.

There are also several compliance and enforcement provisions of the proposed bill that build on the Environmental Protection Act and the Ontario Water Resources Act. These provisions include—and I'll name a few of them—inspections powers similar to the powers in the Environmental Protection Act and the Ontario Water Resources Act such as entry to dwellings, seizures and use of force; new powers for provincial officers to inspect labs that test drinking water; director's and minister's orders to deal with drinking water health hazards; orders to decommission or replace systems; the appointment of an interim operating authority or proven alternative service delivery.

The member from Hamilton West will know that this is consistent with the proposed fines in Ms Churley's private member's bill, but we're going to increase the fines from $6 million to $7 million. We've listened to the advice of the member from Toronto-Danforth, who put these amendments in. This government listened and put them into the bill. As well, the proposed bill includes other powers that are needed for the effective functioning of this bill.

Mr Speaker, I'd like to share some of my time with my seatmate, the MPP from Niagara Falls. He firmly believes in this bill and wanted to say a few words as well.

The Deputy Speaker: In this debate, we will go in rotation. When your turn comes, I'll come back. The Chair recognizes the member for Ottawa Centre.

Mr Patten: I'm very pleased to be able to add my comments on this bill. I suppose in many ways the word on the street is that this is a good start. More than likely you will see a unanimity of voting, but that doesn't mean there is necessarily unanimity on all aspects. Part of that is because of the worry and concern people have about many things this bill doesn't deal with. To be fair, in some senses it doesn't attempt to deal with some areas, but it does beg questions on some fairly important issues.

In fact, the bill says the act recognizes that "the people of Ontario are entitled to expect their drinking water to be safe," and provides for the "protection of human health and the prevention of drinking water health hazards through the control and regulation of drinking water systems and drinking water testing." Then the act identifies the Minister of the Environment as the minister responsible "for overseeing the regulation of safe drinking water in Ontario and ... for the administration of this Act."

That is good. I'm delighted to see the Ministry of the Environment resume its rightful place in playing that kind of role in Ontario, as it used to. This will require, of course, that the ministry is somewhat fortified in a manner compatible with the responsibilities it has to undertake in terms of monitoring, inspection etc, lest we forget.

I don't want to be too dramatic on this, but I do want to remind all of us that we are here because of a very tragic situation and indeed the government has responded accordingly. But you know, as I look back—and I have sort of the summary of the Walkerton Inquiry report.

There's a summary of part one of the report of the Honourable Dennis R. O'Connor, who I think did an extraordinary job in his analysis and in the report he provided, and all sides seem to concur.

We know the tragedy of the people who died and the number of people who became ill at that time.

"The primary, if not the only, source of the contamination was manure that had been spread on a farm near well 5." Many of us know that. "The outbreak would have been prevented by the use of continuous chlorine residual and turbidity monitors at well 5."

"The MOE's inspections program should have detected the Walkerton" situation and their "improper treatment and monitoring practices and ensured that those practices were corrected...."

"The provincial government's budget reduction led to the discontinuation of government laboratory testing services for municipalities in 1996. In implementing this decision, the government should have enacted a regulation mandating that testing laboratories immediately and directly notify both the MOE and the medical officer of health about adverse results. Had the government done this, a boil water advisory would have been issued, thereby preventing hundreds of illnesses.

"The provincial government's budget reductions made it less likely that the MOE," the Ministry of the Environment, "would have identified both the need for continuous monitors ... and the improper operational practices...."

I won't go any further on that, but I say this because the Minister of the Environment, in his leadoff to the introduction of this bill for second reading, seemed to imply that the Koebel brothers were really the problem. While everyone would agree that there is obviously culpability at that stage, I think we would all agree that indeed you have to have a provincial system that is good enough to pick up weaknesses, failures and faults, fault lines, in that system.

It has been brought up a number of times about the circumstances in which the ministry was not able to fulfill that overseeing function. In all fairness, much of what we're dealing with now, other governments did not deal with, so this is not totally, 100% the fault of this particular government. However, some culpability and responsibility should be acknowledged. The big question now is, what are we doing?

This bill will be supported. Does it cover the nature of the issues that have been identified? Indeed, I do not feel that it has.

I would like to refer to some of the deficiencies in this bill at this point. The first thing that we would say is that we support it, but the areas that were raised by Justice O'Connor which specifically prohibit municipalities from selling off their water and sewer systems to the private sector, provide some form of financial support for water and sewage infrastructure for smaller communities, and ensure that higher water rates do not become a burden to low-income families—these were areas that were identified by Justice O'Connor as being concerns. It is my feeling, and I think it is shared, that this legislation does not specifically deal with some of this.

The government could come back and say we could make amendments. Great, we could. We could do some of this by regulation, we could do some of this by programmatic, we could do some of this through other means: through the Municipal Act and funding to municipalities in terms of their infrastructure etc. But this bill does not deal directly with that particular issue.

In terms of government funding, Justice O'Connor said, "The provincial government should ensure that programs relating to the safety of drinking water are adequately funded." He made specific warnings that the Conservative government's municipal downloading may make it impossible for municipalities to pay for water and sewer infrastructure. "The financing of water systems does not occur in isolation of other pressures on municipal budgets. In light of recent restructuring in the municipal sector, especially the transfer of additional open-ended social service costs ... to municipalities in 1998, there is currently some uncertainty about the ability of municipalities to finance all the programs they are responsible for, including water services.... I encourage the province to publicly review the program responsibilities and fiscal capabilities of municipalities in light of recent restructuring to ensure that the financial pressures on municipalities do not crowd out the adequate financing of water systems."

I don't think he could be much clearer. We know there is a cost to this. The question would be, who carries the burden? The cost will relate, of course, to the certification of organizations that may participate in monitoring—laboratories that may be private, people who are running these laboratories, public officials who are on this etc—and the establishment in the bill of operating an advisory council on standards. We're talking, in each of these, hundreds of thousands of dollars. Increasing financial support for the Ministry of the Environment water sciences and standards function, a particular unit of that ministry: again, perhaps up to $1 million. Licensing and periodic inspection of environmental laboratories that offer drinking water testing: half a million dollars etc.

These will all add up, it's estimated, at least from the Walkerton report, to over $65 million. My feeling is that would be a good deal, and if it can all be done for that amount of money, we should take it and run. I suspect it will be a great deal more than that, perhaps twice as much.

In terms of the bill, the Ontario Medical Association suggests that the bill should not be delivered without laying the essential foundation of source protection first. This will come up again and again and again as I make some of my points. When Commissioner O'Connor tabled his groundbreaking report in May, he stressed that the key to avoiding drinking water contamination was protecting drinking water sources. We are very concerned that a key recommendation like this is missing from this current proposal. Not only does the Ontario

Medical Association cite that but, indeed, Commissioner Gordon Miller, our Environmental Commissioner, said that Ontario's drinking water source may be "in worse shape than ever," and that the Harris-Eves government decision to close over 60% of Ontario's drinking water source monitoring stations has severely hampered the government's ability to monitor and protect Ontario's source of water.

These are credible sources. We're not talking about someone who hasn't thought this through. We're talking about the Ontario Medical Association; we're talking about our commissioner of the environment. They calculate very carefully their statements when they are interviewed, and they do not make these statements lightly. These things need to be taken with the utmost gravity of concern.

I'm not going to go through all of the parts of the bill that are outlined—I only have a short period of time—but one part is that the legislation creates the new post of chief inspector for drinking water systems. The responsibilities are not yet defined; that would be crucial. But new compliance and enforcement provisions, including systems with deficiencies, must have a follow-up inspection within one year etc. Perhaps; we will see. That may be a good way to move.

The Ministry of the Environment will be required to develop and issue an annual statement of Ontario's drinking water and report to the Legislature. That will be interesting to see and to compare with two other reports, the report from the Environmental Commissioner and also the report from the Provincial Auditor. These are persons who are supposed to be apolitical, and I believe they are. They're there for the people and they're there to report to the Legislature, which means all the people of Ontario indirectly.

I would like to share, as part of the last area, what people are saying out there. Safe water: who's going to pay for this? The system needs a complete overhaul and cost runs could go to $40 billion. This is an article by Ian Urquhart:

"... the recommendations cover just the tip of the iceberg of the water problem facing Ontario. The report of the inquiry, headed by Mr Justice Dennis O'Connor, estimated the cost" of implementation is somewhere in the neighbourhood of $100 million to $280 million.

He goes on: "Some municipal water systems, Thunder Bay's and North Bay's, for example"—the member from North Bay area isn't here at the moment—"are just plain deficient, with inadequate filtration mechanisms for towns their size. Others have not been properly maintained over the years, which means there is a backlog of repair work. And still others, such as Toronto's, are just plain ancient, with pipes more than 50 years old that are in need of replacement."

He goes on to say, "This is not the fault of the current Conservative regime Rather, it is a problem that the Tories inherited from past governments, provincial and municipal, which too often took water for granted."

I hope you accept my comments in that light. I'm not laying the blame at your feet for everything. I'm saying you have to accept some responsibility and now be tough on putting in some stringent legislation that will get the job done.

He goes on to say that the environment minister says the government is awaiting a report that has been commissioned by SuperBuild. We're certainly going to need the help, as was pointed out by our member for Hamilton Centre, who said if the federal government can come through with infrastructure funds this can go a long way to making sure that we shore up our infrastructure, which certainly has been neglected for many years.

From the National Post:

"Municipal leaders in Ontario say the province's tough new safe drinking water regime is having major unintended consequences, including soaring water prices in some locales, a boom in well drilling by homeowners—interestingly—"desperate to avoid costly water testing regulations and decisions by municipal councillors to quit politics because of personal liability concerns ..."

"Municipal officials say tough regulations ... have forced many people to abandon small communal water systems in favour of new wells. 'The local well drillers, they can't keep up,' Duane Rivett, the water system operator for the Huron county township of Ashfield-Colborne-Wawanosh said in an interview. Mr Rivett said the 100 homeowners in Dunganon, where he lives, were recently told the local owner of two wells in the village would no longer be responsible for supplying water because of costly testing and treatment requirements.

"While residents could have opted to drill their own individual wells, they instead decided to pay the cost of drilling a new community well and building a distribution system at a cost of nearly $1 million ..."

"AMO's executive director, Pat Vanini, said there are also widespread concerns about the 'standard of care' provisions in the Safe Drinking Water Act, which suggest municipal councillors have a duty to take all reasonable steps to prevent any users of the system from being exposed to unreasonable health risks." This is the one where councillors are getting a little bit nervous about the liabilities they have as councillors when most of them, as you well know, do this job part-time and for less than $7,000 or $8,000 a year and a heck of a lot of time away from family.

The Hamilton Spectator:

"It's peculiar, and seems at odds with Premier Ernie Eves's political instincts, that his government is moving at such glacial speed"—I love that term—"to implement the necessary measures to ensure that Walkerton does not happen again.

"The Safe Drinking Water Act introduced ... this week doesn't offer that protection. It is focused on water inspection, laboratory licensing and new standards and certification for the testing and treatment process and the people in it. It does not address contamination of the water supply at source.

"The new legislation, not to put too fine a point on it, deals with finding a problem after it is in the system, when what is at least equally needed is a way to stop the problem in the first place.

"Walkerton happened because the watershed was not adequately protected. Cattle manure ran into a well, and the two hapless Koebel brothers who ran the water plant falsified records. There were no safeguards against that sort of irresponsibility ..."

"Two and a half years after Walkerton and 10 months after O'Connor delivered his first recommendation, the government is 'setting up an advisory committee' that will 'develop a framework ..."

"Those are not phrases to inspire confidence in prompt action." So says Robert Howard from the Spectator.

The Deputy Speaker: Member from Mississauga South, come to order.

Mr Patten: The Globe and Mail: "They have not provided watershed protection in this bill." This goes on and on.

One of the areas that is important to consider in terms of our aquifer and our water sources of rivers and streams is what indeed is being put on our farmers' fields. I have great worries. I saw a program the other night that talked about the pass-through of our antibiotics and drugs from human consumption and birth control pills etc causing deformities in a lot of reptiles and frogs and this sort of thing. We don't know what goes through that, and the quality of testing is going to be absolutely crucial when we look at what it is. I fear that we are not actually testing the very things that are going to be fundamental to our health and causing some of the cancerous diseases that we find in our community.

Having said that, this start is a good one and I feel that we will have support for this as we move along.

The Deputy Speaker: Further debate. The Chair recognizes the member for Mississauga South.

Mrs Margaret Marland (Mississauga South): This is the member for Simcoe-Grey, Mr Speaker.

The Deputy Speaker: If you are standing and talking, I assume you are part of the debate.

The Chair recognizes the member for Niagara Falls.

Mr Bart Maves (Niagara Falls): It's a pleasure for me to join tonight's debate on the Safe Drinking Water Act. This bill, of course, is one of the key recommendations from Justice O'Connor's report. He calls for the province to bring in a Safe Drinking Water Act.

I want to, at the beginning, congratulate the minister for the bill. I know how hard he has worked on it. I'm told by his PA that he has worked very hard on the bill, and his staff has also helped quite a bit. I know that he's had a tough grilling from members of his own caucus on the contents of the bill. That grilling came from a variety of different angles on the bill.

There are a couple of sections of the bill that I want to focus on in my comments tonight. The first one will be the licensing and accreditation of labs that perform drinking water testing. In the Walkerton example—because we're here implementing the Walkerton report recommendations—the municipality had contracted with a private lab to do the water sample testing. In fact it was the NDP in the early 90s who decided that using private sector labs to do the testing was a proper and appropriate vehicle. I agree with that. There are a lot of qualified and good labs out there that can do these tests, and it didn't make any sense not to allow them to do water testing. So that's something that I agree with the NDP on: that that was a smart move to allow private labs to do water testing. In this instance, as I said, it was a private lab that did the testing and found the problem with the water. They did find the problem with the water. In that instance they reported their finding to the person who contracted with them to do the tests: the utility in Walkerton. Unfortunately, the report stopped there, and that had terrible ramifications.

Under NDP and Liberal guidelines, when a test came in for water that was bad, there was no requirement at the time for the lab that found the bad water to report that to the medical officer of health or to report that to the Ministry of the Environment. That was the regime we inherited. What we did after this unfortunate incident occurred was change regulations so that now indeed a private lab that does find a water sample with bad water, tainted water, must report it to the Ministry of the Environment and to the medical officer of health, as well as the utility that contracts with them.

A key component in this is that any lab that does this work will now have to go through a licensing and accreditation process if they are going to be allowed to perform drinking water testing. Again, labs are allowed to do the work. A lot of them were good and qualified and in this case they did find it, but we now are introducing a licensing and accreditation of the laboratory process, and it will be a continual accreditation process.

The next thing I want to talk about is the certification and training of operators of water systems in this act. In 1989, I believe it was, the Liberal government of the day decided to do a voluntary training of people who operated the municipal water systems—a voluntary training. Some did it, and many didn't. There was nothing that compelled them to do that.

In 1993, the NDP decided that they were going to require the operators of these municipal water systems to be certified and trained. However, they grandfathered those existing people who worked at those facilities, and that included the Koebel brothers. Clearly, they did not get any certification or training. It was very clear in the report and then throughout the entire inquiry that their training was negligible, that they didn't know what they were doing. They said themselves on a lot of occasions that they didn't know what they were doing. It's regrettable that anyone was grandfathered at the time. This bill seeks to make sure that everyone who operates a water system now will have the proper certification and the proper training. I think, obviously, that is clearly the right step.

In everyone's defence all around the room, as you can see, there were guidelines in place from other governments, the grandfathering was done by other governments, and Walkerton occurred when this government was in office. But all that aside, as the minister said in his opening speech, even if the Koebel brothers in Walkerton hadn't been grandfathered, no one would have expected them to knowingly, willingly and wantonly falsify water quality reports. To try to address that, this bill adds a statutory standard of care for municipalities when they are overseeing the operation of their utilities.

The municipalities are clearly responsible for overseeing the activities of the people they hire to look after their water systems. The municipalities are subject in this bill to huge fines if they don't do that job appropriately: a $6-million fine for a first conviction and a $10-million fine for a second conviction. Someone who willingly, knowingly submits false reports is something that obviously can't be tolerated, so there's a new onus, a new standard of care for municipalities who operate these facilities. I think that that also is a very important component of this bill.

A couple of other parts of the bill that I think are important. Mr Bradley from St Catharines and I have talked about this the past few nights while in this place: the new position of chief inspector. The chief inspector will report to the minister and the minister will make that report public. The member from St Catharines asked about that several times. I would say that we've already hired 51 certification inspectors. Also, there's an annual report that the Minister of the Environment will now be required to submit to the Legislature on the status and quality of Ontarians' drinking water. All of those, I think, are very important points.

The member from St Catharines was concerned about who was going to hear from the chief inspector and how the minister was going to be responsible to the Legislature. That is going to be done through his State of Ontario's Drinking Water Report, which he's required to do annually.

The gentleman opposite, Mr Patten, used the words "glacial speed" to describe how the province is moving forward on legislation in this area of water quality. I take exception to that and so do some other people. I'm going to read from the Guelph Mercury:

"City waterworks superintendent Peter Busatto said the legislation raises the bar. 'It goes way beyond any legislation I'm aware of in Canada and the United States.'

"The legislation got high marks from retired University of Guelph water resources engineering professor Hugh Whitely. 'It is definitely a good move to recognize requirements for the various steps in delivering safe water,' said Whitely, particularly pleased with the licensing and certification ideas."

Also, from Broadcast News is this quote: "A Vancouver Island MP is calling for national drinking water standards, based on the findings of the Walkerton inquiry. Alliance MP Keith Martin, a medical doctor, calls the Ontario report a useful document. He says the Ontario government took a leadership role by adopting its recommendations.”

Many of those commentators—Alliance MP Keith Martin everyone knows as a doctor, Hugh Whitely from the University of Guelph and Peter Busatto, who is a city waterworks superintendent and familiar with these processes—have congratulated us for actually raising the bar and being ahead of anyone in either Canada or the United States on this issue. For that I congratulate my minister. I will indeed support the bill.

The Deputy Speaker: Pursuant to the agreement earlier this evening, this House stands adjourned until 1:30 pm tomorrow.

The House adjourned at 1947.

MEMBERS' STATEMENTS

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): Yet another accident along Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound, this time around Britt, involving four cars and with 10 people involved, six taken to hospital in Sudbury and one in Sick Children's Hospital in Toronto. When will this government understand that that highway between Sudbury and Parry Sound doesn't need signs, it needs multi-laning? When will this government commit itself to improving that highway between Sudbury and Parry Sound? The people of northeastern Ontario, whether it be from North Bay, Sudbury, Timmins or Sault Ste Marie, have had enough. They want that highway four-laned. They want it four-laned from Sudbury.

Today we find out that the government has been sitting on two feasibility studies taking in the area from Sudbury to the French River that indicate that this highway must be four-laned. Let me quote you the 1974 study: "Ministry studies indicate that the existing Highway 69 route in the study area does not have sufficient capacity to serve transportation demands over the next 20 years." That was in 1974, 30 years ago. "Such growth can be expected to place greater demands on this route and ministry studies indicate that an arterial highway of the divided type" is necessary.

Your own government staff have told you that the four-laning of Highway 69 from Sudbury to Parry Sound should have taken place by now. Do it. Start it. Do it today.

TAKE OUR KIDS TO WORK DAY

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): I am pleased to rise today to offer support for the many parents, children, teachers and employers who are participating today in the Take Your Kids to Work Day. I'm actually honoured today to be standing in this House because my son is in the members' gallery over here. Nick is sitting here today.

Applause.

Mr Sampson: I should say to Nick that that's a far better reception than I ever get in this House from the opposition. But I'm glad he's here today to participate with me in the job shadowing program that is being run by his school at Homelands. That school has recognized the fact that job shadowing is a first-hand opportunity to gather information on the various occupations that interest students, and there are many—including politics, believe it or not—around the province of Ontario and this lovely country. By visiting the workplace, students can visualize better what's involved in the occupation.

I've tried to make sure that my son was quite aware of what was involved in the business of being an MPP. I'm sure that the members today will be on their best behaviour in demonstrating what happens in the Legislature, because, while he can't have a piece of paper here, he's taking mental notes, and he does have to do a report in school tomorrow. So he's going to be watching the members opposite very closely.

I encourage all parents to participate in these programs, and I hope that all the students and parents have a safe visit to their workplace.

HYDRO RATES

Mrs Leona Dombrowsky (Hastings-Frontenac-Lennox and Addington): The hydro horror stories from my riding continue. There is a family in Harrowsmith whose bill has tripled. A woman from Odessa fears that she will have to choose between buying health food to combat her diabetes and paying a hydro bill. She's on a fixed income, and her bill has gone from $55 a month to $150 a month. A family in Cardiff doesn't know if they'll be able to buy their daughter's Christmas gifts this year. The ODSP allots $75 a month for hydro and $75 a month for heat, and last month their hydro bill alone was over $200.

Premier, your bungling and incompetence on the hydro file is affecting all Ontarians. Your government was not elected with a mandate to dismantle hydro. In fact, Mr Eves, you don't even have a mandate from the people of Ontario to be Premier—only from the Tories in Ontario.

In my riding, my constituents are sending me a very clear message. They don't like the direction that your government has taken, and they don't like your policies on hydro. It's hurting them and it's hurting their families. Premier, it's time to listen to the people of Ontario and clean up this hydro debacle so that families can go back to what they have always enjoyed, and that is a healthy, happy and prosperous life in the province of Ontario.

PANORAMA OF LIGHTS

Mr Toby Barrett (Haldimand-Norfolk-Brant):

Every year, people from across Ontario, across Canada, and visitors from other parts of the world converge on Wellington Park in Simcoe to revel in the wonder of a glimmering December jewel at the heart of Norfolk county: the annual Christmas Panorama of Lights. It's been over 40 years now that the townspeople of Simcoe have combined their efforts to put on this magnificent seasonal display.

The panorama is highlighted with over 75,000 twinkling lights that reflect on the mirrored surface of the Lynn River. This year's edition will feature the return of one of the panorama's focal points to its former glory. The Panorama Fountain, generously donated by local artist Vic Gibbons close to a decade ago, will once again shower the park in a warm glow as lights dance off the rising water. It took the panorama committee a couple of months of work and over $1,000 to get this fountain back in working order after it was frozen out of commission over four years ago. Just last week, after a couple of false starts, their hard work paid off. At the flip of a switch, the fountain sprang back to life as water once again shot skyward.

I encourage my fellow MPPs in the House and the people of Ontario to head down to Ontario's south coast, the "golden garden," this part of our country, and revel in the warm lights of Simcoe's Panorama of Lights and its revived fountain, which will spread seasonal spirit to young and old.

BECK 3 GENERATING FACILITY

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): It has become increasingly apparent that Ontario is in urgent need of new generating capacity for electrical power, particularly in view of a prolonged delay in returning the Pickering nuclear generating station to full capacity and the dramatic increase in the cost of electricity to Ontario consumers.

Once again I am urging Premier Ernie Eves to instruct Ontario Power Generation, which his government owns and controls, to begin immediately the construction of new generating capacity at the Beck generating facility in Niagara Falls. If the full project were to proceed, a third generating station to be known as Beck 3 would be constructed, along with the appropriate system of tunnels, and would add 1,100 megawatts of new capacity.

As a beginning and as a minimum, the building of a new 10.5-kilometre tunnel should proceed, adding an additional 200 megawatts to Beck's existing capacity and improving the flow of water through existing generators, thereby increasing the electricity generated at Beck by 15%. The proposed tunnel has received all planning approvals and has undergone an environmental assessment. It has the enthusiastic endorsement of local representatives and the Ontario select committee on alternative fuel sources. This project would produce more electricity for our province without any impact on air quality and would be an economic boost to the Niagara region. I call upon Premier Ernie Eves to act without further delay.

RAMADAN

Mr Bob Wood (London West): As many members of this House know, one billion Muslims throughout the world will be observing a month of fasting during Ramadan, which starts November 6 this year. Muslims regard Ramadan as a spiritual tune-up. It is a time for inner reflection, devotion to God, and self-control. The third pillar or religious obligation of Islam, fasting, has many benefits, the most important of which is that it teaches self-control. Ramadan is also a time of intensive worship, reading the Koran, giving charity, purifying one's behaviour and doing good deeds. In fulfilling the teaching of their faith, they demonstrate to us a commitment to righteousness and compassion for the needy, qualities to which we can all aspire.

Ramadan will end with the celebration of the feast of Eid ul-Fitr in about one month's time. At that time, Muslims will gather for prayers and then exchange presents and share alms with the needy so that all members of the community may be able to celebrate together.

Ramadan has been observed for many centuries, and each year it reminds us of the importance of spiritual renewal for both Muslims and non-Muslims alike. I know I speak on behalf of all members of this House in extending greetings to the Muslim community of Ontario and in wishing them Ramadan Kareem and Eid Mubarak. These greetings, which in Arabic mean, "May you have a month of giving and a blessed feast," speak to the central meaning of Ramadan.

HYDRO RATES

Mr David Ramsay (Timiskaming-Cochrane): I want to bring forward today to the Ontario Legislature an example of two hydro bills from constituents in the south end of my riding, around Noëlville and Markstay, that really show the idiocy of the Harris-Eves government's electricity policy and how it is giving great hardship to the people.

First, a business. This is a small mom-and-pop meat and variety store in Noëlville and, typically, the bills would run at $1,200 a month before deregulation. Then all of a sudden, they started popping up to over $2,000, $2,600, and the last month, when summer was over so we can't blame Mother Nature, $4,187 for this small meat market in Noëlville. The proprietor there tells me that that's basically his gross profit margin per month and that now he'll be forced to make some very tough decisions about the number of people he's going to be able to afford to keep on his payroll.

Another example in the same neighbourhood is a senior couple on a fixed income. Typically, because of their electrical heating, they've been paying about $180 per month. Now all of a sudden in their third-month reconciliation bill, they're hit with a whopping $690. These are people on a fixed income who have been just managing to pay their under-$200 bill, but now they've got triple that amount thrown at them from this system.

It's time the government fixed this mess that they started and start managing the electricity system in Ontario, and make sure the economy and Ontarians stop suffering from this.

SCHOOL BOARDS

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): Ernie Eves, welcome to Mike Harris's chicken coop, which you are a part of, because all his chickens from his failed Common Sense Revolution are coming home to roost. It started with Walkerton. Not only are you left with that mess, but now you have created a massive crisis in our hydro rates, and now, increasing prices in education.

A legal challenge has been launched today by five Toronto school trustees, three parents and three unions, claiming that you have acted unlawfully by letting the supervisor, Paul Christie, violate the act by suspending all of the trustees' functions and denying parents and trustees their basic right of free speech.

I met with parent councils in my riding last night, and what they said is happening in their schools is truly shocking. You've heard it before and I'm going to repeat some of them now: teachers are not being replaced and classroom sizes have grown to large numbers; educational assistants have been cut and are not being replaced. The loss of lunchroom supervisors, teachers, educational assistants and secretaries contributes significantly to the safety factor.

What I would say to this government today, so this lawsuit doesn't have to go ahead like the Toronto Hydro One lawsuit, which they lost, is that they should immediately pull that supervisor out, wait until the review on their funding formula is done, leave the funding where it is and give the extra funding that they need now to put these people back in the classrooms.

AGNES JACKS

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): I'd like to take this opportunity to tell the people of Ontario about a very special lady in my riding of Nipissing who has done wonders for the sport of ringette. In fact, she and her husband were the founders of the popular game almost 40 years ago.

Last weekend, I attended the first annual Agnes Jacks invitational tournament, and it was a great success. Ringette may have been introduced in North Bay, but now it has grown and is played throughout the world. It is Agnes's hope that ringette will be an Olympic sport some day.

Mrs Jacks was honoured for all her dedicated years in maintaining the sport of ringette. Unfortunately, her husband passed away several years ago, but Agnes is diligent in keeping his dream alive. In fact, Agnes Jacks received the Order of Canada.

She is an example of integrity and devotion. For more than 30 years, she has promoted ringette as a medium for girls and women to benefit from physical activity and personal growth derived from team sports.

As honorary president of the International Ringette Association, she continues the legacy of her late husband, who conceived the game, by sponsoring trophies and scholarships for outstanding players, coaches and officials. She has become a goodwill ambassador, imparting the importance of good conduct and fair play to thousands of young athletes.

I would have to say that North Bay has a lot to be proud of, thanks to the creativity and tireless dedication that Mr and Mrs Sam Jacks put forth in introducing the game of ringette to Ontario, Canada and the world.

VISITORS

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Just before we begin, we have with us today in the Speaker's gallery a delegation from the Russian Federation, led by Vladimir Zoran, their Minister of Federation Affairs. They are in Toronto to participate in a workshop, Law and Federalism in the Russian Federation and Canada, which is being held at the University of Toronto. Please join me in welcoming our honoured guests.

REPORTS BY COMMITTEES

STANDING COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENT AGENCIES

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I beg to inform the House that today the Clerk received the ninth report of the standing committee on government agencies.

Pursuant to standing order 106(e), the report is deemed to be adopted by the House.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS

RETAIL SALES TAX RELIEF FOR AMATEUR YOUTH SPORTS ACT, 2002

LOI DE 2002 VISANT À ALLÉGER LA TAXE DE VENTE AU DÉTAIL EN MATIÈRE DE SPORT AMATEUR POUR LA JEUNESSE

Mr Sampson moved first reading of the following bill:

Bill 207, An Act to amend the Retail Sales Tax Act to provide an exemption from tax for amateur youth sports /
Projet de loi 207, Loi modifiant la Loi sur la taxe de vente au détail pour prévoir une exemption de taxe en matière de sport amateur pour la jeunesse.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is it the pleasure of the House that the motion carry? Carried.

The member for a short statement?

Mr Rob Sampson (Mississauga Centre): This bill, if it is approved by the House, would allow amateur youth sports teams or associations, or amateur youth as individuals, to be exempt from paying all or a portion of the Ontario provincial sales tax on equipment or uniforms that they purchase. This bill would also apply, if it was incorporated in the regulations, to school teams and teams that are involved in school activities.

This bill would also encourage organizations to participate in equipment swaps and would exempt the transaction of equipment swaps, which would help those who can't get equipment, from attracting PST as well.

I encourage the House to support this very valuable initiative for amateur youth sports across Ontario.

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Without speaking to the substance of the bill—because we have not seen it; we have read press accounts of it this morning—the question to you is the appropriateness of the bill, given the rules with respect to non-treasury bench members bringing forward an item that would impact on a budget.

Secondly, would it be more appropriate for the member to put this in the form of a resolution that could be brought to this House and debated as a resolution incorporating many of the elements that may prove very worthy both to that side of the House and this side of the House?

The Speaker: The member is correct. We haven't had a chance to see it either, but as we do with all bills, we will check and look for the appropriateness of it, and we'll advise the House if there are any problems. Then if there are, the member may take whatever option he wants. But we thank the member for bringing it to our attention. We do look at all the bills.

VISITORS

Mr Tony Ruprecht (Davenport): On a point of order, Mr Speaker: Our page, Grant Gonzales, has some very important visitors here today: his uncle and his aunt, Ron Turner and Jill Turner.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): On a point of order, Speaker: This is take-your-nephew-to-work day. My nephew, Adriano Marchese, is here. Just briefly, I want to put the Etobicoke politicians on notice: he's very interested in politics.

1350

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): On a point of order, Speaker: I'd like to acknowledge and welcome a special guest to the Legislature today. It's Take Our Kids to Work Day. It's a great program and our ministry has a number of students who are participating in that program. I'd like to mention that my son, Clayton, is here as well in the gallery.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Welcome. I understand he's a good hockey player.

Hon Jim Flaherty (Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): On a point of order, Speaker: it is Take Our Kids to Work Day. As the Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation, I'm pleased to welcome the enterprising young people who are children, offspring, of some of the fine public servants at the Ministry of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation, as well as Kaitlin Visser, who is the daughter of my constituency assistant.

Hon Elizabeth Witmer (Deputy Premier, Minister of Education): Not only is it Take Our Kids to Work Day, and we're thrilled to have all the students here in grade 9, but today is also Ontario Principals Day at Queen's Park. I'd like to welcome the president of the council, Helen Spence, and the principals who are with us today.

The Speaker: We'll know where to send some of the members if they misbehave: down to the principal.

Mr Mike Colle (Eglinton-Lawrence): On a point of order, Speaker: We have some very special people who came all the way from Fenelon Falls in beautiful Victoria county. They're here with us today. There's Councillor Faye McGee, Lyn Boldt and other members of the tax revolt in Victoria county who are here today to fight for fairness.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): On a point of order, Speaker: The page from Sault Ste Marie is very proud of the work he does here. He keeps bringing relatives in to have a look. Today we have Nancy Robertson, an aunt of the page, and Andrew Kadwell, a cousin of the page, from Oakville. I want to welcome them to the chamber.

Mr Norm Miller (Parry Sound-Muskoka): This is bring-your-son-to-work day today, and I'd like to introduce my son, Winston, who's here taking a day off from grade 8 at Monck Public School. Winston, if you could, stand up. He's over on the other side. Winston, stand up.

CREDIT UNIONS

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): On a point of order, Speaker: It's my understanding that we have unanimous consent by all parties to spend five minutes in recognition of Credit Union Day.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Is there unanimous consent? Agreed. The member for Durham may begin the rotation.

Mr O'Toole: It's my pleasure, on behalf of the Ernie Eves government, to rise in the House today to acknowledge the exceptional role that credit unions play in our communities. I can't help but recognize the important work done by Jonathan Guss and Credit Union Central.

Unlike traditional banks and trust companies, credit unions are owned and operated by their members. In Ontario alone, there are over 700 locations that serve over a million people and manage assets in excess of $14.5 billion.

In small and rural communities, much like in my riding of Durham, they don't have the large traditional banks. Credit unions are the only option available to residents. I want to thank the credit unions of my riding: the Auto Workers Community Credit Union and Don Nicholls, and board members, including Dave Broadbent; the Oshawa Credit Union, with Lori Gaudette; HEPCOE Credit Union, Iris Rapkiski; and the Goodyear credit union, Del Rudman.

Credit unions also make a tremendous contribution to Ontario's economy. They employ over 5,500 people and they work with small business owners to develop viable business plans.

The Ontario government recognizes the new and important role credit unions and caisses populaires play in the financial service sector. Since 1995, our government has taken a number of steps to help credit unions and caisses populaires to better serve their members and indeed their communities. These improvements include: we've approved a new schedule of deposit insurance premium rates; we've removed the provincial retail sales tax on deposit insurance premiums; we've increased deposit insurance coverage from $60,000 to $100,000; we've made deposit insurance fairer and more affordable by charging premiums only on the insured portion of deposits; we've eliminated capital tax for credit unions and caisses populaires; we've reduced red tape to streamline the regulations for credit unions, therefore enhancing their ability to raise capital and deliver a broader range of financial services to their members.

These changes help credit unions become more competitive. The government also recognizes that more can and should be done. To this end we continue to work with credit unions.

Credit unions believe in helping people and communities to improve themselves through co-operation, education and personal development. In my riding of Durham, each Christmas our local credit union actively participates in making sure that the Salvation Army's Angel Tree toy drive is a success. They also host an annual barbecue, along with the Oshawa branch, to raise funds for the Sunrise Youth Group. These are just a few examples of how credit unions contribute to my community and I'm sure to other communities as well. This contribution is not exclusive to Durham. Credit unions, on the whole, give back to the community in countless different ways.

I look forward to meeting with credit union representatives later today with my fellow MPPs from all sides, and I respect the credit unions and the work they do in Ontario. Please join me in thanking the credit unions of Durham and across the province for their dedication and hard work to people and communities.

Mr George Smitherman (Toronto Centre-Rosedale): I, too, am pleased to rise today and recognize the vital role that credit unions and caisses populaires play in communities across Ontario. Since the latter half of the 1990s, Ontario's credit unions have sought to identify solutions to help them respond to the increasingly competitive financial services marketplace. With over $16 billion in assets and 1.6 million members, this commitment has never been more important.

In addition to serving their members more effectively and efficiently, credit unions offer consistent customer service and believe in banking with a personal touch. Credit unions also offer financial peace of mind because each credit union account is guaranteed up to $100,000 by the Deposit Insurance Corp of Ontario, which is even more than banks can offer. In fact, no consumer has ever lost a dime of his or her hard-earned money deposited in a credit union.

When I say that credit unions serve Ontario well, I am not just talking about the full range of financial products and services; I am also talking about the work they do in our communities. Credit unions can be found in Ontario's largest cities and in our smallest towns. In fact, in some small communities, places like Keene and Little Britain, the banks have pulled out, leaving credit unions as the only financial institution.

At a time when talk of bank mergers is back on the agenda, I think it's important to encourage Ontario's ability to provide essential financial services in our smaller communities. Currently the government has initiated the process of selling off another community-based banking service, the Province of Ontario Savings Office. Now, more than ever, we should be ensuring that those agencies that are able and willing to provide banking service in small towns throughout Ontario are encouraged to do so. Credit unions are an important element of Ontario's financial structure.

Because credit unions are locally owned financial co-operatives, they are well positioned to respond to community needs and are committed to improving the quality of life in Ontario. In conjunction with local community groups, credit unions have invested in community projects including construction of sports and recreation facilities; sponsoring various community activities and events; promoting public education programs to encourage a better understanding of financial matters; lending programs for low-income people; investments in affordable housing; and business mentoring programs. Fully 90% of credit union deposits are reinvested back into the communities through mortgages and personal and business loans.

Credit unions also fill an important gap in providing access to capital for small businesses and farm operations that may not be able to qualify otherwise. All of us know and hear too often about the challenges people have in gaining access to capital. Credit unions' commitment to small businesses has grown considerably over the past five years. Today an incredible 45,000 small and medium-sized businesses and farm operations in Ontario are being assisted by a loan from their local credit union.

In addition, over 60 member credit unions participate in Credit Union Central of Ontario's syndicated lending program, which harnesses Central's lending expertise and capital, allowing credit unions to help more underserved customers. These loans also finance local business development, manufacturing, construction, hospitality and tourism. A significant portion of the syndicated loan portfolio involves the agribusiness sector, a large portion of which is invested in northern Ontario.

On behalf of my leader, Dalton McGuinty, and the Ontario Liberal caucus, I look forward to working to strengthen the credit union system and to joining all of you in the reception later on this afternoon.

Mr Tony Martin (Sault Ste Marie): We in this caucus, on this side of the House, are certainly proud to stand today in recognition of the very vital and viable co-op movement blowing across this country that came out of the co-op movement in western Canada and our partnership in that in the 1960s with the CCF and organized labour to form the New Democratic Party in this country and indeed in this province. Credit unions have become a very important international phenomenon.

I was in Ireland just recently, where I was told a story about a small community just north of the border, Newry, racked with violence for years. A small group of people decided that there needed to be an economic future for them and for their children. They gathered around a kitchen table, as has happened so often across this country, and formed the first credit union. They each threw the change that was in their pocket into the pot, and stood before churches week after week collecting money to build up a critical mass, so that they could then begin to operate as a real credit union. The first loan they gave out was to a widow who needed to consolidate some debt. The second loan was to buy an old, abandoned factory and turn it into a co-op business development organization that today has become the envy of northern Ireland—just one example of the very creative, energetic and exciting activities of credit unions across the world, not to speak of some of the credit unions in Ontario and in my own area.

I recently participated in the cutting of a ribbon for a brand new credit union at the Garden River First Nation, just outside of Sault Ste Marie, where they see it as a vehicle to give them some foothold into the finances that they need to create an economy that will be beneficial for them over the years. In my own community of Sault Ste Marie we have a number of very exciting and viable credit unions: Northern Credit Union, for example, has grown from a meeting in the kitchen of one of the original members of the credit union, a person by the name of Len Strom, into an organization today that literally populates almost every small community in northern and eastern Ontario—a credit union that, when it sees one of the big chartered banks pull out of a small community because they have no more interest in offering services there, moves in and in some instances actually takes over the building of the vacated chartered bank to offer financial services to that community so that the people and the community might be better served. That credit union today has grown to be a regional operation of over $440 million in assets, with a network or 22 branches strategically located throughout north-eastern Ontario, and provides excellence in service to over 40,000 members. The most recent merger of the Northern Credit Union, with the Nickel Centre Credit Union, in July 2002 has also made services available to the communities of Coniston, Capreol, Garson and Sudbury, something that would be of interest to my colleague from the Nickel Belt area—

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I'm a member.

Mr Martin:—who is also a member. I would guess that probably all the members of our caucus are members of credit unions in their home communities.

This merger also makes Northern Credit Union the seventh-largest credit union in Ontario. We have the St Mary's Credit Union, and of course the credit union that I belong to and have been served by so ably over the years, the ASCU Community Credit Union. It started out as a small credit union to service the members working at Algoma Steel, driven by the Steelworkers of America, now a very large entity in our community of Sault Ste Marie that supports the people in the community. Their strength and their future are based on community roots, and member involvement, community participation and local knowledge are some of ASCU Community Credit Union's proud, competitive advantages. This credit union now has loans to members in the year ended of some $157.6 million. That's a lot of money to be managed by this particular entity on behalf of our community. The ASCU Community Credit Union has been in business for more than 50 years in Sault Ste Marie. The membership has grown from the original 20 charter members in 1948 to approximately 13,000 members in the year 2002.

You can be sure that your local credit union actively supports many different local projects as well as initiatives on the provincial and national levels. I would encourage all of you here to take time, if you're not already a member, to call your local credit union to check out the services they have to offer and become a member.

ORAL QUESTIONS

HYDRO RATES

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition):

My question is for the Premier. Yesterday we talked about Bluewater Power and their threats to shut off power to those who can't pay the bills you have foisted on to Ontario consumers. You said, "I presume that the ... utility will act in a responsible fashion and the individual's power, indeed, will not be cut off."

I want to tell you the story of Joanne. She's a single mom with an infant and a two-year-old. She's on maternity leave and is only getting $630 per month. Her hydro bill is $400. She just recently scraped together $180 to start paying the bill, but Bluewater Power shut off her power yesterday. The heat in her building is electric. Joanne and her two young children are living without heat today. It's anticipated that the wind chill factor tonight in Sarnia will be -6C. What are you going to be doing before nightfall to help Joanne and her two young children?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): I would be more than pleased to take the details, and I will have my office or the minister's office contact the utility this afternoon and see what we can do.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, am I going to have to bring these individual cases to you here on a daily basis during question period? There are going to be hundreds, if not thousands, of Joannes, people just scraping by, people living hand to mouth, people who can barely afford to pay the old hydro bills, who cannot afford to pay the new hydro bills. Do you want me to bring each and every one of those cases to your attention in this Legislature?

The problem here is that you created a royal mess. You're supposed to look before you leap. You leapt and then you looked. You acted irresponsibly, and Ontarians out there on the front lines of the economy are paying a terrible price. I'm asking you, what specifically are you going to do to help Joanne and likely the thousands more who are no longer able to pay their hydro bills in your Ontario?

Hon Mr Eves: I told the leader of the official opposition what I propose to do with respect to the specific case he's talking about.

The Ontario Energy Board and utilities work co-operatively together to make sure that nobody—

Mr Dwight Duncan (Windsor-St Clair): They work co-operatively, all right.

Hon Mr Eves: Quite frankly, that's what the Ontario Energy Board is there for. They're there to protect consumers, and they're there to make sure that something exactly like this does not happen.

Mr McGuinty: It's your job to protect Ontario consumers and hydro ratepayers against usurious bills. That's your job. The Ontario Energy Board has not been able to protect consumers from you, Premier. That's what is happening here.

I ask you again, what are those people, the Joannes of Ontario, now supposed to do? They are barely scraping by as it is. They can't afford to pay your new hydro bills. Why don't you stand up here today and tell all Ontario utilities that they cannot shut off power to the Joannes of Ontario and that you will do whatever it takes to make sure that nobody who finds themselves in this predicament is going to be without power, without heat, this winter?

Hon Mr Eves: I indicated in question period yesterday, and I'm indicating again today in question period, that I don't believe it's appropriate for a utility to cut off power to people. I will be happy to take that up with them. This is a directive that the Ontario Energy Board issues to all utilities in the province of Ontario; it tells them that they should be accepting partial payments and they should not be cutting people's power off because they don't have the ability to pay. We will reinforce that.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, if you're not concerned about individual Ontario families, then maybe you'll have some concern for small business, because small businesses are also feeling the effects of your incompetence and mismanagement of the hydro file.

Stamford Delicatessen in St Catharines has been open for 33 years and run by Berndt Triebe. His hydro bill has doubled, from $1,000 to $2,000 a month. He says that he can't raise the prices at his deli because his clients are mostly seniors and, not surprisingly, they have their own skyrocketing hydro bills. Mr Triebe says he's going to have to close his shop soon.

Small business, Premier, unless you have forgotten, helps drive our economy. Your incompetence and your complete mismanagement of hydro is not hurting Ontario families alone; it is hurting our economy. Premier, will you admit that when it comes to the Ontario hydro file, yours has been an abysmal failure—that is your experience—and will you now tell us specifically what you are going to do to help Mr Triebe and other owners of small businesses who are not able to cope with your usurious hydro bills?

Hon Mr Eves: The leader of the official opposition is the last person in the Legislature who should be standing up fighting for small business when he's voted against every single tax reduction and break for small business that we have introduced—all 199 of them.

Interjections.

The Speaker: The member for Hamilton East, come to order.

Premier?

Hon Mr Eves: As we—

Interjection.

The Speaker: We're not going to continue with this. I'm going to name the member for Hamilton East and ask him to leave the chamber. I'm not going to keep getting up here. I'm going to have to pick people out. I'm afraid the member for Hamilton East is going to be asked to leave. Two seconds after I tell him to settle down, he's not going to get up and do this. We're not going to continue to do this.

Mr Agostino was escorted from the chamber.

The Speaker: The problem is that there is allowed to be some heckling, but unfortunately everybody in the place does it now. It used to be a few members would do it and we could get away with it. Now everybody just shouts at the other side. We'll just start throwing people out. You can heckle, but we can't have it where the other side can't hear, and if it does get that way, we'll simply remove people.

I apologize to the Premier for the interruption.

Hon Mr Eves: As I indicated yesterday, the average price of hydro for the May-to-October period is up 16% in Ontario in terms of price, 7% in terms of volume, 23% on average for consumers across the province. I understand that for individual months there are people in the province who are having difficulty. We are going to come up with a plan—you will hear about it very shortly and it will become active immediately—to deal with the price increases for consumers in the province.

But I repeat what I said a few minutes earlier: you are the last person who should be talking about protecting small business when 199 times you voted against small business in this Legislature. And then you have the gall to come in here today and be the big protector and defender of small business when you've dumped all over them for the last seven years.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, with hydro bills going up some 60%, 100%, 150% for small business in Ontario, that is the single biggest tax hike that they've had to grapple with in the last 20 years in the province. If you won't get it, at least Garfield Dunlop does. He said, in today's Orillia Packet and Times, "We know we've made a mistake.... Electricity rates are unacceptable and we must resolve the issue because it is impacting jobs and the economy."

Premier, you failed to do your homework. You failed to listen to the Provincial Auditor about Pickering A, and now it's behind schedule and way over budget. The transmission line with Quebec is on hold. You stopped Beck 3 from getting up and running. The NDP killed our chance to get clean, affordable power from Manitoba. Your ideological blinders are on. You charged ahead, you didn't plan, and Ontarians are paying a terrible price. I ask you again, what specifically are you going to be doing for both businesses and Ontario families?

Hon Mr Eves: We are going to be helping those families, as we've helped them with 199 tax reductions, each one of which you voted against. I presume you'll be against this, too. You'll be against helping people in the province of Ontario. Your record is quite clear; your record is quite consistent. You have voted against every single measure we have introduced to help more modest-income Ontarians.

Over a 40% tax reduction to those modest-income earners: you voted against that. Cutting small business's tax rate in half to the lowest in Canada: you voted against that. Now when you think it's politically expedient, you're trying to make political hay on the backs of those people. Be consistent. Are you going to side with the small people this time, or are you going to bluster yourself up to try to cash in at the political table?

Mr McGuinty: Premier, if you're looking for a consistent record in this House on policies, it is your mismanagement and your incompetence. Once again, you didn't do your homework, and this time consumers are stuck with the hydro bill.

But let's take a look at the record; sadly, we've seen this movie too many times before. You screwed up the education funding formula, you screwed up on tax breaks for pro sports teams, you screwed up on hiking seniors' residences fees, you screwed up on the hydro IPO, you screwed up when you fired thousands of nurses, you screwed up when you sat as Minister of Finance and cut the Ministry of the Environment, which led to the Walkerton tragedy. You're like the arsonist who keeps setting fires and tries to take credit when he then scrambles to put them out. I'm asking you again, Premier: given this record of mismanagement and incompetence, given your consistent failure to get it right the first time, why should families and businesses believe you're ever going to get this one right?

Hon Mr Eves: Only a Liberal who doesn't think we should be spending $8 billion a year more on health care in this province could stand up and say we have reduced funding to health care. Only a Liberal who doesn't seem to think there's any consequence to just spending money willy-nilly, even though you had a great part in jacking up the provincial debt to $115 billion when your party was in power—that didn't seem to bother you. Eight billion dollars more on health care, over $2 billion more on public education, over half a billion dollars more on public education in-year this year alone, making sure that people in Timiskaming get the same education as people in Toronto. You say one thing when you're in Toronto, and you say another thing when you're in Timiskaming. But people aren't that stupid, Dalton.

Interjections.

The Speaker: OK, we need to proceed now. We've had our fun. The leader of the third party has the floor.

HYDRO DEREGULATION

Mr Howard Hampton (Kenora-Rainy River): My question is for the Premier, but let me say that if Liberals or Conservatives want to ensure that people don't have their power cut off, they can pass Bill 204, my No Freezing in the Dark private member's bill, and do it today.

Premier, while you and the Liberals want to sell off our hydro system to the Enrons and Brascans of the world, the same corporations that have profiteered from private, deregulated hydro in California, Ontario and elsewhere, the Toronto-Dominion Bank yesterday admitted that deregulated, privatized hydro doesn't work very well. They say that after the Enron fiasco and some of the other private hydro disasters in the United States, the Toronto-Dominion Bank won't be lending any more money to private hydro companies. Why do you and the Liberals want to take Ontario's hydro consumers further down the privatization and deregulation road when even the banks won't go there any more?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The leader of the third party knows we're not privatizing OPG. He thinks it makes good air time, I guess, to talk about privatization of OPG, but we're not privatizing OPG, and he knows that.

I've heard the honourable member stand up in his place many times and criticize banks, bad-mouth banks, and now when it suits his political purpose, he's quoting banks. Can I expect more of the same in the future, Howard? Everything the Toronto-Dominion Bank says from here on in, you're going to be onside, right?

Mr Hampton: Premier, let's remember what this is about. A woman in Hamilton this past week had her power cut off after she left for work. Her disabled tenant had to ask his parents in Niagara Falls to come and pick him up because the temperature in the house plunged. People like that, people like these folks in Hamilton, don't want a temporary rebate in an attempt to cover up the hydro deregulation problem. They want and need a long-term solution.

The Liberals and yourself say that we should sell off our hydro generating stations and that we should turn to the private sector and entice them to come and build new hydro generating stations. But the Toronto-Dominion Bank is saying they're not going to lend any money to private generating companies. So tell us, how do you and the Liberals intend to provide the power that is needed if private companies can't borrow the money to build from Bay Street banks any more?

Hon Mr Eves: The honourable member will know that Ontario Hydro/OPG produces about 77% or 78% of the power used in the province. He will also know that Bruce produces another 15%. If he cares to add those two numbers together, he will also know that that is in excess of what the average daily usage in Ontario is, and that those two entities combined, both of which are controlled or leased out by the province of Ontario or by OPG, supply more than enough power on an average daily basis in the province.

I do agree with him that we have to have a plan to encourage people to develop more supply in the province so that we will have an increased supply as we go forward, and you will hear about that in due course.

Mr Hampton: That is the $64-million question. You and the Liberals both say we should sell off our hydro system to the private sector and rely on private companies, through incentives, to build. Well, Bay Street says they won't lend any money to private hydro companies to build generating stations. Some of the other lobbyists you are listening to, the so-called Stakeholders' Alliance, actually say that the way to provide incentives is to let hydro rates go even higher. It's as if they believe the consumers of Ontario are naughty children who need to be spanked with yet higher hydro rates.

Premier, and the Liberals have to answer to the people of Ontario. So far the solution that both of you have put forward is to rely upon private companies. Well, the banks aren't going to allow them any more money, so what are you and the Liberals going to do—allow hydro rates to go even higher so you can entice your private sector friends to come in and make bigger profits? Is that the only solution you're offering?

Hon Mr Eves: Absolutely not.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): New question.

Mr Hampton: I'm going to return to that question. Premier, even in the heart of Republican America yesterday, voters—

Applause.

Mr Hampton: —turned thumbs down on hydro deregulation. You should be careful what you clap for. In Montana, voters yesterday rejected the deregulation of the hydro system by a vote of 60% to 40%. In Las Vegas, where they gamble on almost everything, the voters are saying they're not prepared to gamble on deregulated hydro. They want a regulated hydro system.

Even your own member, Garfield Dunlop, the latest MPP to come out and say that deregulated, privatized hydro was a mistake, even he is out there now.

Premier, when will you admit that deregulated, privatized hydro doesn't work for hydro consumers? Everyone else seems to be figuring it out; when will you?

Hon Mr Eves: I think I indicated to the honourable member yesterday and again today that obviously the member that he refers to is concerned about prices of power in his riding, as every member of the Legislature is in their own constituency, myself included. You will see, in very short order, that we will be assisting the people of the province of Ontario in that endeavour, and that we will be bringing in a plan that will help them as we go forward in the future with respect to prices of power in the province.

Mr Hampton: Premier, I'll say once again: the people of Ontario aren't interested in some kind of just-before-the-election rebate that you and the Liberals continue to talk about.

Another interesting lesson from yesterday: you know California, that your former Minister of Energy used to refer to? Yesterday, the governor of California, who said very clearly that hydro needs to be re-regulated in California, was re-elected. Your Republican friends who want to privatize and deregulate hydro in that state were told, "No, thanks."

Again, Premier, I want to say to you that people elsewhere in the world who've had experience with de-regulated hydro are saying, "No, thanks. We want a regulated hydro system; we want a regulated price; we don't want to be vulnerable to the price fixers and the market manipulators." When will you straightforwardly come out and tell the people of this province that you're going to turn away from deregulated hydro and privatized hydro? When?

Hon Mr Eves: The honourable member won't have to wait long to see what the plan is.

RACIAL PROFILING

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition):

My question again is to the Premier. We've learned today, and I assume that you're aware of this, that Justice Charles Dubin has withdrawn his involvement from the external review of the Toronto Police Services race relations policies and practices. Yesterday I asked you not to wait for more studies. Instead, I suggested that we strike an implementation task force to put the myriad of studies we already have into action. We have been studying this for the past 25 years. I don't believe that we should put it off one day longer.

I ask you again, but particularly in light of this new fact, Premier, that Mr Justice Charles Dubin is no longer going to be involved in this matter: will you take action and strike an implementation task force?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): If the leader of the official opposition has read Mr Justice Charles Dubin's letter, he will know that the reason Mr Justice Dubin outlines in his letter to Chief Fantino is that, in light of the fact that a summit is going to be chaired by the Honourable Lincoln Alexander, he feels his presence would be superfluous to what Lincoln Alexander is doing.

I told you yesterday in this House that we've been consulting with the Honourable Lincoln Alexander, that we're interested in meeting with and participating with leaders in the black community to have a meeting and try to resolve this issue. I congratulate the Honourable Lincoln Alexander in taking an initiative in this very important area.

Mr McGuinty: Premier, nobody is disputing that what Lincoln Alexander is about to do—and I hope that his initiative gets underway shortly—is a good, decent and honourable thing. But what I am looking to you for is leadership on this file. There are several studies that have been completed in the past, and I don't believe, sir, that in this case leadership ought to be an option. I think you have to act.

I'm not asking for the world here. I'm simply asking that you strike an implementation task force that will then study those individual reports and come up with a specific plan of action for us to move forward on. Otherwise, what we're doing here in this House is that, once again, you, sir, would be washing your hands of an issue that strikes at the core of social cohesion in the province of Ontario. I've indicated that Alvin Curling, my colleague, is more than ready to prepare and assist in any way in this matter. I ask you again, why could you not strike an implementation task force so that we can move forward on the many recommendations that have been put forward over 25 years?

Hon Mr Eves: I don't know whether he doesn't think the Honourable Lincoln Alexander is capable of doing this or that the summit he has called for is going to be sufficient to deal with the problem. I'm certainly willing to participate in the process and do what we can, in representing the government of Ontario, to make sure that the black community's needs are dealt with and heard. The Honourable Lincoln Alexander has started what I think is a very viable process.

We have, quite frankly, responded. As you'll recall, there was a request for an independent civilian body to look into police complaints in Ontario, and we complied with that in 1997. In fact, that agency has existed—it is a totally civilian body—since 1997. People who are not satisfied with complaints they take to either the OPP or, in this case, the Toronto Police Service complaints commission have the ability to go to this province-wide body, which is totally civilian, and get an independent hearing on any complaint they have. That recommendation has already been acted upon. It was acted upon in 1997.

MUNICIPALITIES

Mr AL McDonald (Nipissing): My question is for the Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing responsible for urban issues. Minister, I understand you're hosting a two-day conference for provincial and territorial ministers of local government this week. You must be very pleased to represent key matters relating to municipal issues in our province to other leaders across our country.

As the past deputy mayor of North Bay and the current member of provincial Parliament for Nipissing, I know how important municipal matters are to this province and to all our ridings. Recently, in the federal throne speech and the Sgro interim report, the federal government indicated they have a new interest in municipalities and municipal issues. Minister, my question for you today is, could you tell the House how you plan to acknowledge the federal government's recognition of municipalities?

Hon Tina R. Molinari (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I want to thank the member for the question. This is an important issue for municipalities. Not only is it a concern in your riding, but it's a concern throughout the province and the country.

It was evident in the provincial-territorial conference in August that the provinces and territories welcome Ottawa's recognition that it has a significant long-term financial responsibility toward municipalities. We believe that any increased federal interest in municipal issues must respect provincial-territorial jurisdiction and that new federal initiatives like improving infrastructure must build on provincial priorities regarding municipal matters. If we do this, we will be continuing an effort to make our cities the most competitive and livable in the world. In fact, Canadian cities are among the safest, cleanest and most attractive in the business world. They are strong, healthy and vibrant, and we intend to keep them that way.

Mr McDonald: Thank you for your answer. I'm pleased to hear that there is a call for Ottawa to finally recognize their long-term financial responsibilities to local municipalities.

A recent independent study done by the Conference Board of Canada indicates that the federal government needs to address the large growing fiscal imbalance in Canada between themselves and the provinces. This fiscal imbalance leaves the provinces to bear an unfair share of health, education and social service costs.

Minister, could you tell us more about the study and the need for a new dialogue with the federal government on this issue?

Hon Mrs Molinari: Once again, I want to thank the member from Nipissing for his interest. His constituents are certainly very fortunate to have him representing them here in this House.

I would be glad to expand on the findings of the study. The study finds that the federal budget surplus will reach almost $86 billion by 2020. During that same time period, the aggregate provincial-territorial net debt will rise 54% to $387 billion. Our government does not believe that Ottawa should enjoy large revenue surpluses while the provinces have to bear the unfair share.

We have worked hard to make sure that municipalities are economically strong and globally competitive. This week's conference will look at the innovative long-term strategies to help our cities respond to the economic, environmental and social changes. We will continue to work with all levels of government to make sure that we work in a positive and constructive manner.

ONTARIO POWER GENERATION

Mr Michael Bryant (St Paul's): The question is for the Premier. This morning, in media scrums, your finance minister and the former energy minister, Mr Wilson, echoed the comments of your energy minister last week; they just had nothing good to say about the performance of Ontario Power Generation. That wasn't the tune that was being sung by your energy minister last June, who said in this House, "OPG is running well. They've done a good job of privatizing. They've done a good job setting up the open market.... I think"—CEO—"Mr Osborne has done a good job, and at ... $1.7 million a year I suppose that's reasonable."

I know what the position was this morning; I know what the position was in June. What we'd like to know from the Premier is, do you think that Ontario Power Generation is doing a good job?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): First of all, I know the honourable member can foresee all circumstances. I know that he obviously is an expert in building and renovating nuclear power plants in the province of Ontario, so perhaps you could just, you know, pop down to OPG and solve their problem for them in five minutes this afternoon when you're not doing anything.

The reality is, as the member for St Paul's knows, as every other member in this House knows, that this is a very complicated area in terms of nuclear energy. Obviously OPG's estimates that Pickering would be up and running by now were overly optimistic at the least, and obviously nobody's happy that they're not up and running.

Mr Bryant: You say you're not happy, and this government will continue to blow smoke on the performance of Ontario Power Generation, but when it comes to dressing down the management of OPG you continue to refuse to put your money where your mouth is. When will the bad performance of Hydro's hydra, OPG, translate into your hydro heads "getting a pay cut"?

The combined annual salary of your CEO and your chair exceeds $2 million a year. You say they're not doing a good job. When are you going to put your money where your mouth is and give these folks a pay cut or, even better, sack them altogether?

Hon Mr Eves: I seem to recall that we had a similar issue in this House with respect to Hydro One many months ago, and I seem to recall that the honourable member voted against the bill that would address the problem.

Having said that, the issue about Pickering is obviously not an easy issue. If it were, people would have solved it a long time ago. The reality is it's not up and running today. Obviously, I'm not happy about that. I don't think anybody in the province is happy about that, and the Minister of Energy is looking into the issue and taking it up with OPG.

LONG-TERM CARE

Mr Ernie Hardeman (Oxford): My question is to the Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care. Every member of the House knows how important it is to meet the long-term-care needs of Ontario's growing and aging population throughout the province. This challenge is one that is faced across the province, and it's also faced in my riding of Oxford.

Minister, you will know that in Oxford, in the village of Norwich we have a 60-bed facility, a D facility, Norvilla Nursing Home, where there is a proposal to move the beds to a different facility in Woodstock. Both communities are in my riding, but the citizens of Norwich are very concerned about maintaining a nursing home or a long-term-care facility in their community for their community-type living.

They have expressed some concern, and I want to thank the minister, who last Friday met with the concerned citizens to speak about some of the alternatives that might exist in bringing the facility to an A facility and maintaining it in the village. I was wondering if the minister could update us on that situation and what we're doing about the 60 nursing care beds at Norvilla in the village of Norwich.

Hon Dan Newman (Associate Minister of Health and Long-Term Care): I thank the honourable member for Oxford for his question. It is true that he and I have been working on this matter for the past several weeks. I want to let the people of Oxford know how hard their member is working on their behalf.

As the honourable member indicated, I met last Friday with the concerned citizens of Norwich to listen and to discuss the transfer of long-term-care beds to Woodstock. There's no doubt that every person there cares very deeply about providing quality long-term-care services to local residents.

It is true that 60 long-term-care beds at Norvilla Nursing Home in Norwich are proposed to be transferred a short distance away to Woodstock. But the proposal not only states that the beds stay within the honourable member's riding but that they will be located in a re-developed and upgraded facility where even better long-term care will be provided to the residents. This means that quality long-term-care services will continue to be available for the citizens of Norwich and the people of Oxford. A final decision should be expected shortly.

Mr Hardeman: Thank you very much, Mr Minister, for the very informative response. I'm pleased that you took the time to meet with my constituents to talk about the possibilities for long-term care for the people of Norwich. I know how much even better long-term care means to them. They were very emphatic in the meeting about that. They are very concerned about the quality of long-term care for their citizens.

I'm very proud to be part of a government that's investing the historic $1.2 billion toward even better long-term-care services in Ontario. I would like to ask the associate minister if he could please update the House on the status of our government's long-term-care bed implementation initiative in the Oxford service area.

Hon Mr Newman: As part of our government's unprecedented $1.2-billion reinvestment in Ontario's long-term-care sector, five existing facilities in the Oxford service area will be redeveloping a total of 348 beds that don't meet the ministry's legislated structural standards. As well, a total of 21 new beds were awarded in the Oxford service area.

The 348 upgraded long-term-care beds will promote a more home-like environment for residents. The facilities will include comfortable home areas for up to 32 people. Each home area includes bedrooms and washrooms, as well as space for daily living activities such as dining and leisure. As well, bedrooms in each home area will accommodate either one or two residents, and activities and lounge areas in each home area will be close to each resident's room.

I say to the honourable member that these new long-term-care services will mean even better long-term care for the people of Oxford. That's what the Ernie Eves government's $1.2-billion reinvestment in long-term care is all about.

DÉRÉGLEMENTATION DE L'ÉLECTRICITÉ HYDRO RATES

M. Gilles Bisson (Timmins-Baie James): Ma question s'adresse au premier ministre, s'il voudrait poigner son écouteur. Monsieur le premier ministre, vous savez que depuis que vous avez ouvert le marché au mois de mai, c'est rien qu'un désastre pour les consommateurs en Ontario. On voit des augmentations de 40 %, 60 % et 100 %, dépendamment dans quelle partie de la province on demeure quand ça vient au prix de l'hydro. On regarde ce qui va arriver cet hiver, parce qu'on sait que l'hiver passé c'était à 20 % plus chaud que ce à quoi on s'attend cet hiver, que les augmentations vont continuer à être même pires que vous vous attendez. Justement, M. Claude Briant, à Hearst, a regardé son augmentation du prix de l'hydro passer de 114 $ l'année passée à 200 $ cette année.

Ma question est très simple. La déréglementation ne marche pas. L'ouverture du marché ne marche pas. Quand est-ce que vous allez annuler toutes vos initiatives dans cette direction ?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The honourable member has been here in question period, I believe, yesterday and today and has heard me talk about the average price of power in the province. Over the May to October period it has gone up 23% on average. I will acknowledge that 16% of that is attributable to an increase in rates; 7% is attributable to an increase in volume. He also acknowledged in the preface to his question that indeed the weather does play a great part in what those rates are.

Having said that, we are going to address the issue surrounding people like the constituent he has just referred to in his question, and he will see in very short order that we will be taking action to reimburse people for monies they have laid out with respect to a price increase. However, people are going to have to realize, of course, that they can't use power in the same volume we have been accustomed to using in the past. I'm sure we all acknowledge that we have to do our part in conservation.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Supplementary?

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): Premier, let me tell you there's a hotbed of hydro hot heads growing in Toronto, and they want the NDP to deliver their message to you, because they know the Liberals support privatization. In my riding, Margaret Friese's hydro bill went up to $317 from $170 despite her best efforts to conserve, which you just mentioned. She and her son often sit in the dark, she cancelled her cable and stopped watching TV, the furnace is well tuned and kept low, but she still cannot afford your deregulated prices. Self-described former Conservatives Justice and Marlene wonder: "Is our only option to live in the dark, cold, heat, throughout the seasons, or would it be more reasonable to get rid of a party that definitely does not meet the interests of common middle-class people?" Premier, you are still not listening to 80% of the people of Toronto and Ontario who want hydro privatization stopped. Stop fiddling while Rome burns. Will you stop hydro privatization now?

Hon Mr Eves: I would appreciate looking at the information the honourable member has, because people who are governed by Toronto Hydro have their prices fixed at a lower rate and Toronto Hydro has in fact been absorbing any increase in the average price since the market became open. I would be interested in seeing the particulars of the case she refers to.

The Speaker: New question. The member for Durham.

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation.

Interjections.

The Speaker: I apologize. That was my fault.

New question. The member for Sarnia-Lambton.

HAZARDOUS WASTE

Ms Caroline Di Cocco (Sarnia-Lambton): My question is to the Minister of the Environment. You know that Ontario is the only jurisdiction in North America that accepts untreated hazardous waste. I'm sure you have heard of the contaminated tar in Sydney, Nova Scotia, called the Domtar tank. I'd like to ask the minister, do you know that this highly contaminated material, this highly hazardous material will be trucked into Ontario to the CleanHarbors Safety-Kleen site because we are the only jurisdiction that will accept non-treated hazardous waste? Will you allow this hazardous waste to be dumped into Ontario at the end of the month?

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): You know full well that we're changing the regulations as far as transporting hazardous waste in the province of Ontario. It's been a number of years, and it hasn't been changed. We are the government that's moved forward to actually take the initiative to change the allowable levels of hazardous waste to be trucked into Ontario. This decision was taken by the Ministry of the Environment in the last couple of years. They were moving toward a situation that's the same in the United States as well as in neighbouring jurisdictions. If you would like to send me the information you have to see if it fits the criteria or not, I'll be happy to review it.

Ms Di Cocco: I'll be more than pleased to send you the information, because this is a $3.7-million contract that's been signed and the shipment is going to begin at the end of the month, in a couple of weeks. Ontario is the only jurisdiction that will accept it untreated in such a high, toxic state. We're jeopardizing the environment. We're jeopardizing human health. It's literally going to be dumped into a landfill here in Ontario. We have become the toxic waste haven on this continent, Minister, and you have to change the regulations before something happens, not after the fact. Will you accept this waste in the next couple of weeks when the shipment begins?

Hon Mr Stockwell: The reality is that we did in fact change the regulations. The ministry has harmonized a number of its hazardous waste standards with the US EPA. So they would not be allowed to ship the hazardous waste, simply because it wouldn't meet the same standards of the US EPA. They wouldn't be able to do that.

The truth of the matter is, since we've come to office there's been a 31% decrease in hazardous waste inputs into Ontario, because we agreed this was an unacceptable situation. So we've harmonized our position with that of the neighbouring jurisdiction.

Finally, yes, we are in fact in contact with Safety-Kleen's operations. We have in fact tested, we're on-site and we're negotiating with them as to whether it meets the standards we've changed the regulations to and that we put in place.

I'm really surprised the member opposite didn't know that. Surely you should have known that we—

Interjections.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Order.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Surely, you—

Interjections.

The Speaker: Order. The minister has 10 seconds to wrap up, please.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Surely, after I told you that at estimates committee two weeks ago, I thought it would have sunk in. But apparently, two weeks later, your attention span doesn't last that long. I told you two weeks ago that we've harmonized with the US and it would have to meet—

The Speaker: I'm afraid the minister's time is up. And now the member for Durham.

ONTARIO ECONOMY

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): My question is to the Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation. I know yesterday marked a very important day for innovation in this great province of Ontario, with Ontario's Innovation Challenge held right here in Toronto, I might say. A key component of yesterday's summit was the unveiling of the first annual report of the province's Task Force on Competitiveness, Productivity and Economic Process. Minister, can you tell the members of this House, who are keenly interested, and the people of Ontario about the task force and their first annual report card?

Hon David Turnbull (Associate Minister of Enterprise, Opportunity and Innovation): I thank the member for Durham for this important question, and I would like to take this opportunity to thank the task force, chaired by Roger Martin, the Dean of the U of T's Rotman School of Business, for its work.

The findings confirm that Ontario is an extremely strong economy built on a solid foundation. Here's the important thing, and perhaps the Liberals might want to listen to this: outside of certain US states, Ontario is today the most powerful economy in the whole world. Per capita GDP has increased steadily since 1995, and among substantially sized countries, if Ontario were treated as a separate country, it would rank second in the world after the US.

However, there is still work to be done. We must work to close the prosperity gap—

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I'm afraid the associate minister's time is up.

Mr O'Toole: I'd like to thank you for that, Minister, and I'd like to thank Minister Flaherty as well, and also extend thanks to the members of the task force. Could you give us some details on other measures and how you're gauging the very important performance of Ontario's economy—as we all know, a strong economy allows us to provide all the other wonderful benefits of our quality of life—and expand on some of the key points in the report issued yesterday?

Hon Mr Turnbull: Ontario outperforms Europe's so-called Four Motors, which are Baden-Württemberg, Rhône-Alpes, Catalonia and Lombardy. The report finds that Ontario has many advantages. We have a very beneficial mix of industry clusters, we have very strong participation in the labour market and we have a good demographic profile. In fact, Ontario ranks as doing very well on the creativity index. Toronto has one of North America's strongest creative classes.

The report cites tax rates as a significant factor in attracting innovation. This government has reduced taxes almost 200 times. This is something the members opposite have voted against every single time. We can take great pride in the work our government has done in creating a culture of innovation and prosperity. Our accomplishments reflect the findings of the report.

DEFERRAL OF OMB APPEALS

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): My question is for the Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing. Minister, 21 days ago you intervened in a local democratic process in Ottawa, a process dealing with a change toward boundaries which had been planned to be in place prior to the next municipal elections. In fact, you brought the entire process to a screeching halt.

I have here a copy of the notice of deferral signed by you, as Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing, where you give notice to the OMB that the appeals before it are to be deferred. My question is simply this: were you fully briefed on this file before you attached your signature to this document?

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): Of course. I have an Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs, Minister Coburn, who is from Ottawa, who is in charge of this file. If you have a supplemental, I'm sure Brian would like to answer it.

Mr McGuinty: Minister, given that you now have made public that you were in fact fully briefed, I think the people of Ottawa are entitled to know the reasons behind your putting this whole matter on ice. Don't you think that is fair? You're the minister, it's your notice of deferral, it is your signature. You now confirm that you yourself were fully briefed. I think you owe it to the people of Ottawa to tell us exactly why, give us your reasons as to why you put this matter on ice.

Hon Mr Hodgson: This is a precedent that he's setting for if he's ever able to win an election and become the Premier: that he wouldn't have any cabinet ministers, that he wouldn't have any associate ministers, that he would have everything delegated to the Minister of Finance, who signs the cheques. For the Minister of Health, there are long-term care ministers who have handled issues capably, who communicate with stakeholders directly. There's a reason for that. We have a large province, we're trying to give more focus to municipal affairs and municipal issues, and the former Minister of Rural Affairs is in charge of this file: he fully briefs me and we brief the cabinet. As far as communicating it, I think he has done an admirable job. He has talked to all the media in Ottawa, and he continues to talk to the residents of the Ottawa area and the council.

ROAD SAFETY

Mr Raminder Gill (Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale): My question is for the Minister of Transportation. Whether we like it or not, winter is just around the corner. In fact, some regions have already had a taste of winter cold, snowfall, sleet and slush. These conditions, along with reduced visibility, from time to time mean treacherous travel across the province, particularly when we're not expecting those winter storms. Can you please inform this House and the constituents of my great riding of Bramalea-Gore-Malton-Springdale if your ministry is ready to respond to winter storms, and tell us what you will be doing to keep our roads safe for winter driving.

Hon Norman W. Sterling (Minister of Transportation): I appreciate the member's question. Winter has hit early in many parts of Ontario. I want to tell each and every one of the members here that our maintenance equipment and staffing levels are all at full complement and ready to respond. In fact, our winter maintenance standards and practices are among the best in North America. This means that we respond quickly and effectively to winter weather conditions.

In addition to those high standards, my ministry is using leading-edge technology to deal with winter weather: we're predicting through advanced weather forecasting; we're preventing by pre-treating roads with liquid anti-icing agents; we're patrolling on a continual basis and monitoring highway conditions so prompt dispatch of equipment can be made when needed; fleets of sand and salt spreaders and snowplows are ready to go when they get the call.

Our maintenance crews, our patrollers of the highways, do a tremendous job for the people of Ontario during the winter period.

Mr Gill: I want to thank the minister for his response. While I am impressed with the number of innovative things your ministry is doing to keep roads safe for winter driving, I also feel it is important that motorists have access to timely road and weather conditions information so that they can plan their trips appropriately. After all, avoiding dangerous conditions is the best protection one can have.

Minister, can you tell us how your ministry intends to inform the travelling public of the road and weather conditions across this province?

Hon Mr Sterling: I understand that information is very, very important. We have important connects with various different TV stations, 24-hour, seven-day stations. We have a well-informed situation with regard to the conditions on a 24-hour, seven-day basis. We have an info line, 1-800-268-4686, which is continuously updated, to provide reports on current road conditions. We have a Web site, www.mto.gov.on.ca, which is another example of up-to-date information on a 24-hour, seven-day basis.

By keeping the public well informed about up-to-date conditions of our roads, the public can show better judgment and take better routes in order to avoid slippery and hazardous conditions.

HYDRO RATES

Ms Shelley Martel (Nickel Belt): I have a question to the Premier. Premier, you really need to listen to those people who are writing and calling to express their serious concerns about hydro costs.

Thomas Grylls of Chelmsford has seen his bill go up by over 33% in the last three months. He wrote, "Ontario Hydro should have remained as Ontario Hydro."

Leonard Nieberg of Barrie is a sole-support parent with two disabled children in receipt of social assistance. His bill has gone up by $80 a month. Leonard said, "The increase in hydro has pushed my budget over the top making it impossible for me to provide for the basic needs of my children."

In Hastings county the director of social services says that while the county is weeks away from official winter, they are "already bailing people out" through an emergency fund to help pay hydro bills.

Premier, when will you listen to these and many other people and cancel hydro deregulation and privatization?

Hon Ernie Eves (Premier, Minister of Intergovernmental Affairs): The honourable member has obviously listened to the debate in question period yesterday and today and would know the answer to her question already. I understand that rates, on average, for the period of May to October have gone up by some 23%. She's picked the last three months; of course, the market has been open since May 1.

I don't dispute the fact that people's hydro bills have gone up. We have said that we will respond. For those people who are on social assistance, they can ask for extra assistance to deal with bills if they have extraordinary circumstances.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Supplementary.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): Premier, we're listening to you very carefully, and the majority of people want and say that public power is the only way to go. I know you don't listen to us, but you've got to listen to the people who write to us. And here's what they're saying.

The Uruski family, who used to vote for you guys, by the way, saw their bill increase by $150 a month. They say you're driving more people on to social assistance to support their families.

Joseph Koziol saw his bill increase by $325 a month. He asks you to remember California and, "Reverse the privatization of hydro and return hydro to government hands."

Gail Patterson says, "Hydro, like clean air and clean water, should not depend on the fluctuation of the market."

Premier, I know that Premier Klein probably told you, "Bribe people with their own money. Give them the rebate and it probably will work." You know very well that rebates are not going to solve your mess. The message is clear: end deregulation and your sell-off of Ontario Hydro and return to publicly owned hydro.

Hon Mr Eves: First of all, the honourable member knows full well that OPG has not been privatized, so to even suggest that in a question is not being accurate, to say the least.

With respect to his issue with respect to prices, he knows that we are going to respond to prices. Is he saying that now he doesn't want us to address this issue in a rebate program? He seems to be saying, "Don't come up with a rebate program." We are going to come up with a program—he will hear about it in due course—to deal with the increase in the prices of power that people have had to deal with from May to October, and we are going to come up with a long-term solution.

DEFERRAL OF OMB APPEALS

Mr Dalton McGuinty (Leader of the Opposition): I want to return to the Minister of Municipal Affairs. Minister, you told me a moment ago in response to my question as to whether you were fully briefed that you were, and yet you won't give us any accounting of the reasons behind your signing this document which put a democratic process in Ottawa on hold.

My questions for you right now are threefold and very simple: when were you briefed, Minister, who briefed you, and how long did the briefing last?

Hon Chris Hodgson (Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): I know the Minister of Municipal Affairs would want to give you all the details on that.

Hon Brian Coburn (Associate Minister of Municipal Affairs and Housing): This is an issue that I've been monitoring since it started. Because the city has now appealed their decision to the OMB, we're in a position where I'm not able to comment any further on this specific issue.

Mr McGuinty: You know, it's funny that the minister himself had no reservations whatsoever about interfering in a process that was before the OMB. This notice of deferral shut the whole damn thing down.

Do you know what I think happened, Minister? I think this was another walk-around. I think you attached your signature to a document without any real appreciation whatsoever for the consequences of interfering in a local democratic process.

I ask you again, Minister, on behalf of the people of Ottawa: you tell us you were fully briefed. When were you briefed, who briefed you, and how long did the briefing last?

Hon Mr Coburn: In municipal affairs and especially in the rural sector, I have a concern for all the residents who live in rural Ontario. With respect to this particular issue, now because there is an appeal with respect to the decision in front of the OMB, unfortunately I'm not able to discuss it in any great detail.

Interjection.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): There is time. The member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound was up.

BIOSOLID MANAGEMENT

Mr Bill Murdoch (Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound): I believe there is time for one question, and my question is to the Minister of Agriculture.

Interjections.

Mr Murdoch: I got it right today. Anyway—

Mr David Caplan (Don Valley East): Ask him about hydro, Bill.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Please, let the member ask the question. I know we're having some fun, but it is annoying when people are yelling at you. The member has the floor.

Mr Murdoch: I'm only going to get one question; I'm not even going to get a supplementary out of this one.

Madam Minister, in a brochure that you have—it's an environmental brochure signed by the OFA and many of the other farm organizations—on page 14, I believe it's 7.2.3, it says that manure will not be able to be spread on snow-covered ground. I suggest that today, probably north of the 401 where it may be snowing, there may be numerous farmers right now who, if that regulation was passed, would be breaking the law.

I understand that if the ground's frozen, it's a different thing, but in this regulation it does say just if it's snow-covered. I have some concerns with that, because at this time of year, that would almost mean that no one would be able to spread solid manure from November to spring. That would put a lot of farmers in an unwanted position because they'd have too much of the manure to do.

Hon Jim Wilson (Minister of Northern Development and Mines): Pile it up.

Mr Murdoch: Yes, pile it up.

Interjections.

Mr Murdoch: Well, I've got all the time there is, you see, because there's no clock now.

Madam Minister, would you be willing to look at this regulation, sit down and have some consultation again with the OFA and some farmers from my area?

Hon Helen Johns (Minister of Agriculture and Food): I'd like to thank the member for Bruce-Grey-Owen Sound. As you know, we share Bruce together, so we always have challenging times.

Let me say that the Minister of the Environment, myself and the people within the ministries are working on regulations for Bill 81. The member is speaking about potential regulations dealing with manure management and the application in snow-covered areas.

I have been consulting with the farm groups across the province to be able to come up with something the agricultural community can live with. Obviously, we haven't come to any conclusions yet. We continue to work with the farms groups. I still continue to hear from farmers, like Mr Murdoch himself, who have an interest in ensuring that the agricultural community is protected and taken care of in the province. We, of course, will do our best to balance, as we have all the way along, the environment and the sustainability of agriculture in the province of Ontario. Both are very important to all of us in this House.

VISITOR

Mr Steve Gilchrist (Scarborough East): On a point of order, Speaker: Along with a number of my colleagues who I know are participating in Take Our Kids to Work Day, I'm pleased to introduce to my colleagues my great-nephew from the town of Cobourg, Steven Race, who's joining us to see a little bit about what we do here at Queen's Park.

PETITIONS

HYDRO RATES

Mr John C. Cleary (Stormont-Dundas-Charlottenburgh): I have another hydro petition. It's to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas electricity bills have skyrocketed under the Harris-Eves government's flawed electricity plan; and

"Whereas some consumers have signed higher fixed-rate contracts with retailers without adequate consumer protection; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has failed to address electricity supply shortages in Ontario, forcing the purchase of American power at premium prices, driving the prices up; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government appointed a board of directors for Hydro One that has been paying themselves extravagant salaries, compensation packages and severances for senior executives; and

"Whereas Ontario Hydro bought 90 municipal utilities, serving about 240,000 people across Ontario, at premium prices and with borrowed funds. These purchases with borrowed funds have increased Ontario Hydro's debt burden; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has added additional fees and taxes to local electricity distribution companies. These charges have also been passed along to consumers;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Harris-Eves government take immediate action to ensure Ontarians have fair and reasonable prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario and that the Harris-Eves government and ... Ernie Eves call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on the issue."

The signatures on this petition are from my riding and Prescott-Russell. I've also signed the petition.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have more petitions, this time from the area of Aurora. It's on Bill 77, the adoption disclosure act. It reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas Bill 77 passed second reading on June 28, 2001; and

"Whereas Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, received committee hearings in November 2001; and

"Whereas Bill 77 addresses privacy concerns for those who wish to delay or avoid contact; and

"Whereas adoptees are dying from genetic diseases in the absence of their family medical history; and

"Whereas birth mothers were never promised confidentiality;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario as follows:

"Immediately call Bill 77, the Adoption Disclosure Statute Law Amendment Act, for third reading and final vote."

I will affix my signature to this petition because I, of course, fully support it.

ELECTORAL BOUNDARIES

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): I'm pleased to have the page Alexander from Sault Ste Marie take this petition to the table.

"Whereas Elections Canada has proposed a change of boundaries for the current Durham riding; and

"Whereas the proposed new riding of Clarington-Northumberland would encompass two different levels of local government, namely Durham region and Northumberland county, and a combination of communities both inside and outside the greater Toronto area (GTA); and

"Whereas Clarington and Northumberland have differing interests with respect to the association with the GTA and Durham region; and

"Whereas the proposed Clarington-Northumberland population of 113,396 exceeds the provincial quotient by more than 5% and is likely to grow even larger as the high-growth communities within the area expand;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, respectfully request that the electoral boundaries be reconsidered to reflect the above concerns and that consideration be given to establish boundaries indicated on the attached map"—which I know isn't appropriate.

I'm pleased to present this petition on behalf of my constituents in the riding of Durham.

HIGHWAY 69

Mr Rick Bartolucci (Sudbury): This is the continuing petition about multi-laning Highway 69. It's to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas modern highways are economic lifelines for the north; and

"Whereas the stretch of Highway 69 from Sudbury south to Parry Sound is a treacherous road with a trail of death and destruction; and

"Whereas the carnage on Highway 69 has been staggering; and

"Whereas in the last three years, 46 people have been killed along that stretch of highway; and

"Whereas, so far this year, 10 people have died tragically along that stretch of highway between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas the Minister of Transportation has not acknowledged the danger on that highway; and

"Whereas the government has withheld two feasibility studies concerning Highway 69 from the public; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has shown gross irresponsibility in not four-laning the stretch of Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound; and

"Whereas immediate action is needed to prevent more needless loss of life; and

"Whereas it is the responsibility of any government to provide safe roads for its citizens, and the Harris-Eves government has failed to do so;

"Be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to urge the Harris-Eves government to begin construction immediately and four-lane Highway 69 between Sudbury and Parry Sound so that the carnage on Death Road North will cease."

I affix my signature and give it to our page Maureen to bring to the table.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): I've got a petition signed by hundreds of citizens.

"To the Ontario Legislature:

"Whereas the government has cut over $2 billion from public education over the past seven years;

"Whereas the provincial funding formula does not provide sufficient funds for local district school board trustees to meet the needs of students;

"Whereas district school boards around the province have had to cut needed programs and services including library, music, physical education and special education;

"Whereas the district school boards in Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto refused to make further cuts and were summarily replaced with government-appointed supervisors;

"Whereas these supervisors are undermining classroom education for hundreds of thousands of children;

"We, the undersigned elected leaders of the Elementary Teachers' Federation of Ontario, call on the government to restore local democracy by removing the supervisors in the Hamilton-Wentworth, Ottawa-Carleton and Toronto district school boards."

I support them and I will sign this petition.

HYDRO RATES

Mr Ted Arnott (Waterloo-Wellington): I have a petition that's signed by a considerable number of constituents from the Oakville riding, and I'm sure, Mr Speaker, you'll be acquainted and familiar with the text of this petition. It reads as follows:

"Whereas the province has stated its commitment to ensuring affordable hydro rates for the citizens of Ontario;

"Whereas the province's recent move to deregulate hydro rates and place them within the competitive context of the open market has resulted in actual and high rate increases, including retroactive ones, for Ontarians, summer heat waves notwithstanding;

"Whereas these hydro rate increases, above and beyond what citizens have paid before deregulation, present a great burden to many young families and those who are on fixed incomes;

"Whereas the province itself admits that a review of hydro rates is necessary and has inaugurated one, albeit one with an overly lengthy mandate;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Parliament of Ontario as follows:

"That the province be directed to freeze hydro rates to last year's levels immediately during its current review of its deregulation policy and move forward to protect citizens of Ontario against such exorbitant rate hikes."

I am presenting this petition on behalf of my friend and colleague the Honourable Gary Carr.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): I thank the member. Further petitions? Who didn't have one yesterday? I think the member for York West didn't have one yesterday.

Mr Mario Sergio (York West): I have another petition addressed to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas electricity bills have skyrocketed under the Harris-Eves government's flawed electricity plan; and

"Whereas some consumers have signed higher fixed-rate contracts with retailers, without adequate consumer protection; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has failed to address electricity supply shortages in Ontario, forcing the purchase of American power at premium prices, driving up prices still further; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government appointed a board of directors for Hydro One that has been paying themselves extravagant salaries, compensation packages and severances for senior executives; and

"Whereas Hydro One bought 90 municipal utilities, serving about 240,000 people across Ontario, at premium prices and with borrowed funds. These purchases with borrowed funds have increased Ontario's debt burden; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government has added additional fees and taxes on to local electricity distribution companies. These charges have also been passed along to consumers;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Harris-Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair and reasonable prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario and that the Harris-Eves government and its leader Ernie Eves call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on this issue."

I concur with the content of the petition and those who have signed it, and I'm glad to affix my signature as well.

EDUCATION FUNDING

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have hundreds of signatures from people who are concerned about international language weekend classes. They read:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas the Progressive Conservative government promised in 1995 not to cut classroom spending, but has already cut at least $1 billion from our schools and is now closing many classrooms completely; and

"Whereas international language weekend classes are a needed part of learning for many students in our area; and

"Whereas the Education Act, specifically regulation 285(5), mandates provision of these programs where demand exists; and

"Whereas the Conservative government funding formula is forcing the Toronto District School Board to cancel these Saturday classes for groups who want this programming;

"Therefore, be it resolved that we, the undersigned, petition the Legislative Assembly of Ontario to instruct the Minister of Education to restore meaningful and flexible funding to the Toronto school boards, to ensure that they are able to continue to accommodate these Saturday international languages classes."

I will affix my signature to this petition because I fully support it.

HYDRO RATES

Mr John O'Toole (Durham): It's my pleasure to respond to my constituents in the riding of Durham in the following manner, first by presenting this petition:

"Whereas the province of Ontario has experienced record levels of electrical consumption this summer, along with higher than expected generating capacity shortages to meet the demand; and

"Whereas this has resulted in higher electrical bills for Ontario consumers; and

"Whereas short-term spikes in the cost of power are a particular hardship to persons on fixed incomes and a detriment to business in Ontario;

"Therefore we, the undersigned, request that the government of Ontario act immediately to develop a plan for protecting consumers against excessive short-term increases in the cost of electricity. We further request that the government of Ontario also review the impact of charges other than the wholesale electrical rates, including the" dreaded "goods and services tax (GST) and the debt reduction charges appearing on electricity bills of Ontario consumers."

I'm pleased to present this on behalf of my constituents in the riding of Durham, and present it to Lauren, one of the pages here in the Legislature of Ontario.

COMPETITIVE ELECTRICITY MARKET

Mr Jean-Marc Lalonde (Glengarry-Prescott-Russell):

I have a petition to the Legislative Assembly of Ontario.

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government deregulated electricity on May 1, 2002, in the province of Ontario without it being in their election platform in either 1995 or 1999 and without the mandate of the people of Ontario; and

"Whereas the price of the commodity of electricity has reached outrageous levels, having risen at times over 100% since May 1, 2002, causing Ontarians great financial hardship; and

"Whereas the Ontario Power Generation (owned by the Ontario government) has applied to the Ontario Energy Board for a 20% reduction in the promised rebate to Ontarians if the commodity price of electricity rose above 3.8 cents per kilowatt hour; and

"Whereas competition in the electricity market has been scared off by the uncertainty of the Harris-Eves government's attempts to sell off a portion of Hydro One, leaving electricity commodity prices high; and

"Whereas the Harris-Eves government authorized exorbitant salaries and bonuses in the amount of $2.2 million per annum be paid to the former president of Hydro One, and in excess of $1.6 million per annum to the vice-president of Ontario Power Generation;

"Therefore be it resolved that we, the undersigned, demand that the Ernie Eves government take immediate action to ensure that Ontarians have fair prices for the necessary commodity of electricity in Ontario, and that the Conservative government and its leader, Ernie Eves, call a general election on the instability of the energy market so that Ontarians may have a voice on this issue."

I affix my signature with pleasure.

ADOPTION DISCLOSURE

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): I have more petitions on Bill 77. This one reads:

"To the Legislative Assembly of Ontario:

"Whereas in Ontario, adopted adults are denied a right available to non-adoptees, that is, the unrestricted right to identifying information concerning their family of origin;

"Whereas Canada has ratified standards of civil and human rights in the Charter of Rights and Freedoms, the UN Declaration of Human Rights and the UN Convention on the Rights of the Child;

"Whereas these rights are denied to persons affected by the secrecy provisions in the adoption sections of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts of the province of Ontario;

"Whereas research in other jurisdictions has demonstrated that disclosure does not cause harm, that access to such information is beneficial to adult adoptees, adoptive parents and birth parents, and that birth parents rarely requested or were promised anonymity;

"We, the undersigned, petition the Legislature of Ontario to enact revision of the Child and Family Services Act and other acts to permit adult adoptees unrestricted access to full personal identifying birth information; permit birth parents, grandparents and siblings access to the adopted person's amended birth certificate when the adopted person reaches age 18; permit adoptive parents unrestricted access to identifying birth information of their minor children; allow adopted persons and birth relatives to file a contact veto restricting contact by the searching party; replace mandatory reunion counselling with optional counselling."

I will affix my signature to this petition.

ORDERS OF THE DAY

TIME ALLOCATION

Hon Chris Stockwell (Minister of the Environment, Government House Leader): I move that, pursuant to standing order 46 and notwithstanding any other standing order or special order of the House relating to Bill 195, An Act respecting safe drinking water, when Bill 195 is next called as a government order, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of the second reading stage of the bill without further debate or amendment and at such time the bill shall be ordered referred to the standing committee on general government; and

That the vote on second reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred; and

That the standing committee on general government shall be authorized to meet at its next scheduled time for the purpose of consideration of the bill; and

That five days be allotted to hearings and one day allotted to clause-by-clause consideration of the bill; and

That, no later than 4 pm on the day the committee is scheduled for clause-by-clause consideration, those amendments which have not yet been moved shall be deemed to have been moved, and the Chair of the committee shall interrupt the proceedings and shall, without further debate or amendment, put every question necessary to dispose of all remaining sections of the bill, and any amendments thereto. The committee shall be authorized to meet beyond its normal hour of adjournment until completion of clause-by-clause consideration. Any division required shall be deferred until all remaining questions have been put and taken in succession with one—I repeat, one—20-minute waiting period allowed pursuant to standing order 127(a); and

That the committee shall report the bill to the House not later than the first sessional day that reports from committees may be received following the completion of clause-by-clause consideration. In the event that the committee fails to report the bill on that day, the bill shall be deemed to be passed by the committee and shall be deemed to be reported to and received by the House; and

That, upon receiving the report of the standing committee on general government the Speaker shall—

Ms Marilyn Churley (Toronto-Danforth): You should be able to read it by heart—every day.

Hon Mr Stockwell: That's not my fault; that's your House leader's fault—the Speaker shall put the question for adoption of the report forthwith, and at such time the bill shall be ordered for third reading which order may be called on that same day; and

That when the order for third reading is called, the Speaker shall put every question necessary to dispose of this stage of the bill without further debate or amendment; and

That the vote on third reading may, pursuant to standing order 28(h), be deferred; and

That, in the case of any division relating to any proceedings on the bill, the division bell shall be limited to five minutes.

The Speaker (Hon Gary Carr): Mr Stockwell has moved government notice of motion 61. The minister.

Hon Mr Stockwell: The long preamble basically deals with Bill 195, An Act respecting safe drinking water. I spent some time, I think, dealing with the opposition critics, Mr Bradley for St Catharines and Ms Churley for Toronto-Danforth, trying to find an agreement about how and where and when we deal with this bill in a proper and timely way. Having said that, there was no consensus, to say the least.

Mr Rosario Marchese (Trinity-Spadina): How come?

Hon Mr Stockwell: There are many reasons why there was no consensus, but I think mine is correct.

Mr Marchese: Tell us. Tell us about that.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I'm in the hands of the Legislature here. I don't mind reviewing the—I'll tell you, I didn't have a lot of problems with Ms Churley, the member for Toronto-Danforth. I think we were on the same page in trying to find a common theme in how we would get the bill out to committee and as far as public hearings. I know the Liberals did suggest that we have four meetings—one in the northwest, one in the northeast, one in the east, one in the west—and then one in Toronto. Beyond that, I didn't hear a lot from the NDP about what they wanted to see on travelling and the bill and so on.

Ultimately, after three days' debate and with no clear consensus emerging, which means no position from the House leader for the third party, I had to make a decision. I tried to make the fairest decision possible. I hope the member for Toronto-Danforth understands that. I've allowed six days of committee, which the committee can determine how they use. If they prefer to travel on four days or five days, they can. I'm only saying that there must be one day of clause-by-clause.

It also dovetails nicely with Bill 175, which we just referred out the other day, which again is a water bill that probably has a lot of the same stakeholders, and a lot of the same deputants would appear. On that bill I also agreed to six days of committee hearings, and I've referred them both to the standing committee on general government in order that, again, we can dovetail the two bills and probably work out some program where we can double up on the public hearings if that's what the choice is.

I have no fear of the public hearings on this bill. I think these are both good bills. As I said during the debate on Bill 195 and Bill 175, I think there may be disagreements on the nuances and there may be disagreements on the amount in the bills, but I don't think there's a tremendous amount of disagreement on the bill itself. I don't know anyone who's going to oppose—I can't say that. I'll be surprised, frankly, if any party opposes Bill 195. I think it's a good bill—safe drinking water. As my friend from St Catharines says, he looked for hostages in the bills and he could find none, because we built the bill in order to satisfy the concerns of Justice O'Connor's Walkerton report.

Having said that, the one criticism I've heard is the fact that we don't have our process for developing water management within the source protection part of the bill. It's a criticism that I've buffered, I suppose, by suggesting that if I'd waited for that part of the bill to be ready, then I couldn't have introduced nutrient management. I could not have introduced Bill 175, I could not have introduced Bill 195, because that part of the bill will not be ready until early next year. I think, in the best interests of the people of this good province, all parties would think that adopting nutrient management, adopting Bill 175 and adopting Bill 195—it's probably more important to get those in play rather than wait for the source protection bill that would have followed in the spring.

I was clear and up front with that with respect to—I see the member for St Catharines is back, and the member for Toronto-Danforth. I was clear and up front about that. That was the particular predicament I was in. I didn't want to wait; I wanted to get this on the table. I wanted to hear your concerns.

Also, by providing the committee hearing time, I wanted to hear about your amendments. I've heard some talk of amendments; I haven't seen them. I'm interested in seeing them. I know the member for St Catharines has made a lot of noises about providing amendments to the committee. I can only presume he's beavering away on these late into the night, and I will see a flurry of amendments coming forward.

Mr Dave Levac (Brant): Beaverling?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Beaverling—that's just another way of saying he's working hard. I don't think anyone would allege that the member for St Catharines doesn't appear to work hard.

I want to just say that this is a great opportunity for the members opposite, if they do truthfully have amendments, to put them forward.

The criticism of the bill—and I listened carefully to the member for Toronto-Danforth and I listened carefully to the member for St Catharines. They were speaking extemporaneously very often in their comments, but when they focused in on the bill itself, I didn't hear a lot of specific recommendations—

Ms Churley: I gave specifics.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Yes, let me finish—outside of the groundwater protection stuff.

Ms Churley: No, I did.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Now, listen, the member for Toronto-Danforth—and I don't want to challenge your thinking, OK? I will review the notes again and see if we have specifics. I'm going to be very interested in seeing the amendments offered up by the member for Toronto-Danforth. I'm going to be viewing those with a critical eye, because I do want to accept amendments that I think can make the bill better. I don't want to have you file 50 amendments and know that 27 or 28 are so politically motivated that there's no value to them.

I am truthfully being apolitical on this one. I want to try to make the bill better.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I know the member for Sault Ste Marie guffaws, but I will add that the entire buildup to this bill—I say to the member for Sault Ste Marie, we did consult with the member for Toronto-Danforth; we did provide her with an advance copy of the bill. We did talk to her. The staff at the Ministry of the Environment did sit down and talk to her and then briefed her and explained things about the bill and gave her advance notice of the bill. I did my best to try to brief the two members opposite during the briefing process beforehand.

In my opinion, excluding the source protection bit they spoke of, I don't think you're going to vote against this bill. You look fine, Marilyn; what are you doing that for? You don't need to, in my opinion. Besides the source protection part, I don't think there's any particularly difficult parts of this bill that you couldn't support. I say to the member—it used to be Fort York. Where's he from now?

Mr Marchese: Trinity-Spadina. Chris, how could you forget?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Trinity-Spadina. I know, I have a short memory.

I say to the member for Trinity-Spadina and to the member for Sault Ste Marie as well, if you seriously have some legitimate concerns about this legislation, bring them on, bring them forward. I will note that it wasn't as rancorous and difficult a debate through this House as I expected. In fact, we didn't even use the full three days in debate. I'm not casting aspersions on anyone, but I think it's probably because I'm not sure there is this vehement opposition to the bill that I think they thought could have been there had this bill not been drafted in the way it was drafted.

I reviewed the notes on the speech made by the member for St Catharines and he tended to wander somewhat in some of his comments. He spoke about many issues where I'm not sure how they related to safe drinking water, but invariably he had the Speaker's very clear attention and he somehow wove a lot of these conversations back to safe drinking water, which he can do so ably and many members of this House can't. That's a compliment, I might add, because I've never seen anyone who has the ability to actually talk about health care, policing and all kinds of things.

Mr Marchese: Because he knows.

Hon Mr Stockwell: He knows. He gets it all right back to safe drinking water, which is really quite astounding. I think all members in this House will agree with me, with what they say: "When the member for St Catharines gets up to speak, everybody listens." It may be a small crowd, but everybody listens. I'll be curious to see—I'm not sure if Mr Bradley will be speaking to this time allocation motion today, but I don't want to pretend I will be shocked if he does.

Mr Marchese: He's ignoring you.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I noticed. He does that when I speak, but he wants my enraptured attention any time he's up talking about anything to do with water.

Mr Levac: He's beaverishly working away.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Beaverishly.

Not to put too fine a point on it and to create a sense of camaraderie, of collegiality in this Legislature, I think we all agree that as to the Walkerton disaster, the terrible events that led to Walkerton, what grew out of that was Justice O'Connor's recommendations. I have done my best, as a good member of this House, as an honourable member, as all members are, to try to follow chapter and verse the recommendations put forward by Justice O'Connor. I can accept some criticism that I haven't worked fast enough, but I've worked as fast as I can and delivered bills that I think tend to be somewhat complicated in a very short period of time.

When you consider the fact that it was sometime in May—or June, I forget exactly—that we received Justice O'Connor's second report and had 93 separate recommendations, that we have now delivered a bill to this Legislature that adopts and puts into place 50 of the 93 recommendations, that another eight or nine are actually in the hopper being done—we didn't need legislative authority to do so—and that we're planning on delivering the rest of them in the spring, I think everyone would agree that is what you would classify as a fairly quick tempo to deal with the very comprehensive report Justice O'Connor did.

I know there are members of my caucus who would like to speak to this and I don't want to steal too much of their time, but in closing, I will listen very carefully to the comments made by the members opposite. I'm sorry this has to be a time allocation. I, candidly, am very sorry it's a time allocation.

Mr Bruce Crozier (Essex): Then don't do it.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I know the member opposite says, "Don't do it." There's a pragmatic reality I have to deal with. Unless I'm prepared to move a time allocation motion on this bill, I don't think I'll be able to pass this bill before December 12. I can't believe anyone would think not passing the Safe Drinking Water Act would be to the benefit of the people of Ontario. Ultimately, I did my best to try and negotiate an agreement between all three parties. I did my best. At the last meeting I said to the House leaders of both parties, "What do you want? Tell me what you want with respect to committee hearings on this bill. Tell me what you want. I'll agree to it." They wouldn't tell me.

Mr Crozier: They?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Well, I shouldn't say "they." I don't want to name names, but one of them wouldn't tell me. So unless I can get some consent motion to deal with the bill through committee and back to the House, I am left with no alternative than to time-allocate a very important bill like safe drinking water.

Mr Levac: You had a choice.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Member for Brant, I can only say to you that you should take some time and read the standing orders—I'm not lecturing; I'm just saying—and if you can find any mechanism in the standing orders that would have provided passage of this bill by December 12 without co-operation from both parties, then I'm open to hearing your suggestions. But I don't know of it, and I've spent some time in this place—12 years. I spent three years as the Speaker. I've spent a number of years as House leader for the government side. I have a fairly good working knowledge of the standing orders.

Mr Levac: Change them.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Listen, I don't even want to go toward changing the standing orders. My good friend Bradley would blow a gasket, I'm sure, if there was any talk of changing the standing orders. He would implode right in this House and his jacket buttons would turn into projectiles, I'm certain. So I have no interest at all in commenting on changing the standing orders. And even if I wanted to change the standing orders, I couldn't possibly get the standing orders changed in time to get this bill passed.

I'm not throwing myself on the mercy of the Legislature, but I'm asking for some reasoned and thoughtful understanding and debate of this. And I appeal to my friends in the third party. I would ask the member for Toronto-Danforth to stand up, and if these don't jibe with her position on what took place, then I ask her to stand up and say, "He's not telling the facts." But I've tried my best. I did not want to time-allocate this bill whatsoever.

Mr Garry J. Guzzo (Ottawa West-Nepean): Let's sit around the clock. It worked last time.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Apparently the judge wants to sit around the clock. I'm not sure there's many who would, Judge, but we can always think about that.

I didn't want to time-allocate this bill. So here we are in a situation where I'm being forced to time-allocate it, and the only reason this time allocation motion is before us is that I can't believe anyone doesn't think this bill should be in place by the end of this session. And if there is someone who thinks we should take more time and not pass this bill by December 12, then I would ask them to stand up and say that. If the member for Brant believes we shouldn't be passing this bill before December 12 and not have a Safe Drinking Water Act, then that's your power as a member. Stand up and say so. If it isn't, then I think we have a responsibility to the taxpayers of this province and to our own parties to try to collectively negotiate an agreement that processes this bill through the House in a collegial way, that gets it passed by December 12 and satisfies the concerns of the members opposite.

And if a truly draconian time allocation motion was before this House today, I say to the member for Brant and others, and to the member for St Catharines, who's listening intently, I say to the members opposite, why would we have six days of committee hearings? Why would Bill 175 have six days of committee hearings? Why would I be passing a time allocation motion that asks the committee to decide on how they want to travel and how they want to deal with this bill? I say it's not a draconian time allocation motion; it's a time allocation motion that has been moved in this House out of absolute necessity, and the necessity is that we can no longer get an agreement from the three parties, who collectively probably agree with this bill, to dispose of the bill. Nothing can work if that can't happen.

To the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, I was reading through a few Hansards in the past when he was House leader for the government, at the time the Liberal Party. I was reading about the give and take and the difficulties he was having as House leader. Do you know that practically on every bill he dealt with as House leader, as rancorous and cantankerous and difficult as I'm sure he thought it was, he got agreement? There was agreement to deal with and dispose of legislation. Much of that legislation's agreement was internal to that sitting. So they would introduce bills in that sitting, have a rancorous discussion between the House leaders about how that stuff should be disposed of, and they agreed, "OK, we'll have seven days of debate, we'll go three days to committee and we'll pass the bill." I can only sadly say, as House leader for this government in the past number of months, I can never remember getting agreement on anything—nothing.

Mr Levac: Whose fault?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Well, there's the rub. Whose fault is it? How do you square the circle?—I've said this before. Whose fault is it? I'm going to take some time and give you my take on whose fault it is.

Can it be the government's fault? Ultimately, you're going to go out and say—and, you know, the public frankly is just totally unenlightened about this. You can go out till the cows come home and tell them, "Oh, do you know this terrible government has moved 15 time allocation motions?" and they'll all go, "Jeez, those Conservatives, they moved 15 time allocation motions?" and you're going to say, "Yeah," and they're going to look at you and say, "What the hell's a time allocation motion?" That's what they're going to say to you because they have no idea what a time allocation motion is.

It's a notch in your belt. If that's the game plan, well, you've won. I say to the members opposite, you've won. But if you think this is going to bring a government down or prop it up or be an issue at the doorstep, I can only talk for those members who have been elected more than one time. I say to my friends from Fort York and Trinity-Spadina and the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke, you know what the issues are. There are about two or three, and I can't ever remember the number of time allocation motions being a campaign issue that swung five votes. I just can't remember it.

Mr Crozier: It's going to be.

Hon Mr Stockwell: Well, OK, it's going to. Maybe times will change and there'll be a huge hue and cry from the public out there that time allocations are the bane of the democratic process. I just don't see it. I think hydro may be an issue, education, health care, finances, deficits, but that's just one man's opinion from Etobicoke.

Mr James J. Bradley (St Catharines): Time allocation will be a big issue.

Hon Mr Stockwell: That's right. The member from St Catharines will make it the big issue. He'll spend his entire campaign budget on advertising our time allocation motions.

So I say, whose fault is it? Ultimately, we order the business of the House. But here's a good example, I say to the member from Brant. Here's a bill that I honestly believe we're all going to vote in favour of. I'm guessing, but I think we will. Here's a bill where I went to the House leaders' meetings and said, "Whatever you want, tell me, I'll give it to you," and here's a bill that I have to time-allocate because apparently that offer wasn't good enough.

When you go to a House leaders' meeting and say to the two other House leaders, "Whatever you want, I will give you," I'm not really sure how you can sweeten the pot. There's my dilemma: how do you sweeten the pot better than, "Whatever you want, I'll give you"? They didn't tell me. Well, I've got to be honest. The House leader for the Liberals told me what he wanted. I never really got a response from the NDP. They took notes.

Interjection.

Hon Mr Stockwell: I think it's too bad for the electorate because I think we could have worked something out. Then what happens is a unilateral decision made by the House leader for the government side about what I think you want, and that's what time allocation is. If I leave it to be debated ad nauseam, then I guarantee myself one thing: the Safe Drinking Water Act will not be in place by year's end. There isn't anyone in this province who would like to see the Safe Drinking Water Act not be in place by year's end.

We're at counter purposes here. We all agree the act's good. We all agree. The craziness about this thing is we all agree that the act is good, it should be put in place and we should have some debate, but we can't get from here to there, which is so frustrating for me personally because I walk into a meeting and say, "What do you want? Whatever you want, I'll give you." I think now you may have a better understanding of the dilemma I face as House leader.

This is not the only bill. I did, with some feverishness, like Phineas T. Bluster, as the member for St Catharines often says, try to announce the same kind of difficulties with emergency preparedness, which we all voted in favour of, but we couldn't get through the House because I had to time-allocate it. Who's opposed to emergency preparedness? No, I don't want to be prepared in case there's an emergency? Nobody. We all voted in favour, but the same thing: I had to time-allocate that bill.

The funniest one of all of course is the bill that I think I saw the member for Brant speak to one night in the House, the one where if you see a cop on the side of the road giving somebody a ticket or something, you should slow down and pull a little bit to the left. Who's opposed to that? What is your amendment? No, speed up and go to the right so you hit the cop? What possible amendment could you have? I felt so bad for the member for Brant because he had to speak to this bill for about half an hour. I heard him and it was difficult, I know, to find anything to talk about that was remotely critical of the bill. He spent time talking about other issues, but on the bill itself, the number one point he came off on, the first thing he spoke about, was that the bill should be titled the other way around. Rather than talking about the police car first, you should talk about the person first. I would make that amendment in a heartbeat if we could have blown that through the House. But that's a good—

Mr Levac: Green lights?

Hon Mr Stockwell: Or green lights, whatever. But here's an example. It's a bill that we could just process through the House. Today, we're going to spend another sessional day debating time allocation on a bill where the offer to the opposition was, "However you want to handle this bill, I'm agreeable, but I'm time-allocating it." What a waste of a sessional day.

So, yes, I feel somewhat frustrated. I think this place has become less and less—

Interjection.

1550

Hon Mr Stockwell: Yes. And as I talk to members opposite, the member for Brant says, "You can change it," or you're going to go out on a time allocation motion and claim it's our fault. I think now you can understand in a smaller way what I'm up against. Maybe it isn't our fault all the time, if we can at least come to that. Maybe it is our fault lots of times but maybe it isn't sometimes. Maybe we can actually come together and reach agreement on bills that we have a mutual agreement about.

I did read with some interest Ian Urquhart's column today on the budget bill, suggesting there was a large package of initiatives in there that he felt was important that we review.

Mr Bradley: Hostages.

Hon Mr Stockwell: The member for St Catharines says, "Hostages." That's his choice of words, not mine. I don't agree with him, but that's the beauty of democracy. When you have a bill that you actually don't agree on, then you could spend a significant number of days debating it. We could take six, seven, eight, nine days debating that bill. Sure, we could, but why can't we? Do you know why we can't? Because we have three bills that everyone agrees with and we take 12 days debating them. So there's no time left over to actually have a meaningful debate on bills and legislation that we don't agree with. This isn't rocket science. Any five-year-old—grade 5 kid could figure this one out. You only have so many days you can be in the House.

Mr Crozier: Five grade 5s?

Hon Mr Stockwell: No, that's wrong—grade 5. Kids in grade 5 could figure that out. But you only have so many days in the House. I know I don't have to tell the member for Trinity-Spadina. He was in the cabinet for the NDP. I know I don't have to tell the member for Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke or the member for St Catharines. They were part of governments that were in this House. There are only so many days you sit, and the government has an agenda. They want to get so many bills through the House. We all know that. Then it makes sense to me, since we are the government and we're going to get them through anyway, why not actually spend the time debating those bills we don't agree with, rather than spending a whole bunch of time debating bills we're all voting for, and in a kind of calmer, rational way? I was thoroughly frustrated last week. That's what I'm asking for.

The other thing is, we sit at nights all the time. If we actually did have a plan we could put through this place that we could agree on, you wouldn't have to sit at night. We could actually have the debates during the day and be done at 6 o'clock—not that we're frightened to work; I don't think anyone is frightened of work. But the presumption is that unless you're here, you're not working, and we know as politicians that most of your work is done at night anyway, dealing with local constituents, public meetings and so on and so forth. I know there are members of council from the old days and public school trustees and council members on our side here. You know full well all the public hearings and public meetings that you have are at night anyway. Would you rather be out there speaking to the community and the public or would you rather be in here debating a bill that everybody is voting in favour of? It doesn't make a lot of sense to me.

It's not an impassioned plea. I just wanted to put on the record that I feel bad that we have to time-allocate this. I do. It's a shame. I'm not casting aspersions on members opposite, certainly not on the member for Toronto-Danforth, although she came out and dumped all over the bill. I understand: she's in opposition; that's her job. But I think in her quieter moments she will grudgingly admit that we did try our best to see if we could find a way that we could all agree with this bill and move it through the process that would meet the demands you had about this bill and meet the demands we had.

The one demand that we made to the House leaders was that we needed this passed by December 12 and, frankly, I don't think either of you disagreed. You would like to see this passed by December 12. You would like to see these initiatives for inspections, certifications and training and all this stuff be legislated before the year is out. The only demand we made was, "Tell us what you want." That was obviously too much of a demand, because I couldn't get an answer.

The shame of it is that we're here today to time-allocate a bill that we all agree with, or I'm suggesting that I think we may all agree with. I'm going to send it out to committee. "I"; yes, it's unilateral. That's what happens when you have to time-allocate. I'm going to send it out to general government for six days of public hearings, six days of committee time. It has been fited together with Bill 175, to go out for six days at that time as well. I've not dictated to the committee how much they have to travel or where or when they have to travel. All I've asked them to do is, "You've got to report this bill back to the House in time to have it passed by December 12."

I can't think of a more reasonable approach to take to this than we have. I'll be interested in hearing the comments. I'll be profoundly disappointed if the comments revolve around, "Time allocation, another draconian act, another government whipsaw that forced the shutdown of democracy," yadda, yadda, yadda. That's an awful shame because, if that's the argument you're going to use, then frankly, I've come to the conclusion that it really doesn't matter what I do. It really doesn't matter what I offer, it really doesn't matter how this place is supposed to work; it makes no whit of difference. All you're doing is trying to play this whole thing as a political end: you want to claim there's time allocation, you want to put a notch in your belt. Really, is that serving the public? I think not. I think this is one bill we could have come to an agreement on. This is one bill where I could have agreed with the member for Toronto-Danforth. If she wanted to go to three or four cities, I could have said, "Not a problem." If the member for St Catharines wanted to go to three or four other cities, "Not a problem. Let's do it."

We all agreed that it should probably be passed by December 12, but we couldn't. So if that's what I hear today, I'm going to be disappointed. I don't think it's us who are the problem on this one; maybe there are lots who are. I'm not claiming to have the moral high ground on this one, but I thought this would be the one bill that we could break the log-jam we've had for the last number of months, which is "three days' debate, time allocation, pass it." In a lot of these bills that are "three days' debate, time allocation, pass it," I think it's silly. I've outlined the bills on which I think it's silly. I would much rather have six, eight, 10 days of debate on the budget, but I am totally and completely frustrated. It's a hopeless endeavour and this is going to be the example that I have to stand up on.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr Bert Johnson): Further debate?

Mr Sean G. Conway (Renfrew-Nipissing-Pembroke): I'm not going to have much of an opportunity to speak to Bill 195, so I'd like to take a few minutes this afternoon in this opportunity to address some concerns I have about Bill 195, An Act respecting safe drinking water, and collaterally, some comments with respect to Bill 175, An Act respecting the cost of water and waste water services.

I will say just in my opening comments that I have, as a former government House leader, a lot of sympathy with the comments made by the government House leader who just spoke. I guess where I will part company with him is that I personally have come to the conclusion that our so-called parliamentary system is now so diseased that it is irredeemable. I don't think you can fix it. I don't have any option as a solution but I personally, as a member and as a taxpayer, am increasingly reluctant to put money into what is increasingly a charade.

I have to tell you, as a citizen, I would not spend a lot of my time going to the places that are now parliamentary. As well intentioned as they are, I just wouldn't waste my time because I just don't think, all things considered, it's a good use of my time. I would find other ways. And other ways are developing.

The fundraiser has become an extremely active alternative increasingly used by a lot of people. The street is another option for people who may not have or do not want to allocate financial resources. I think we are going to, and perhaps we should, be returning to more active or street politics. But why anybody would come to Parliament any longer to make a submission that might be six or seven minutes long on a subject that is complicated is beyond me. I've been to a number of committees recently—I'm not blaming anybody for this and I've got to tell you, I've no great confidence that changing government is going to do much about that. The Canadian parliamentary culture is in more trouble than I could possibly describe, and I regret it because I came here with some expectation. I actually remember a time when it was otherwise.

But I'm not here to talk about parliamentary problems today. I want to talk about Bill 195. As the government House leader and Minister of the Environment said, it's hard for any fair-minded person to oppose the bill in principle. I'm glad my friend Mr Beaubien, the former mayor from Petrolia, the member for Lambton-Kent-Middlesex, is here, because what I want to say today actually concerns small-town Ontario. The minister, in his remarks, made the comment about committees going to cities. You know, I'm not so sure that's where this committee should spend a lot of its time. There's no question that in cities large and small—I live in a smallish eastern Ontario city, Pembroke, population 15,000. We have a communal and municipally operated water and sewage disposal system, as do a number of other towns and villages in my constituency. Certainly the city in which we find ourselves today, Toronto, has a very elaborate infrastructure in these areas.

I think I read recently in a Statistics Canada report that now something like 80% of all Canadians live in cities of not less than 50,000—I think it was Canada; it may have been an Ontario number. At any rate, the vast majority of people living in Ontario live in cities of more than 50,000. When we think about it, it's not hard to understand how that is the case.

When I look at this bill, I see a number of things that, as my friend Mr Bradley said the other night, I want to support, and I'm not going to repeat what my colleague said in his remarks the other evening. I do want to say a couple of things about small-town Ontario and the pressures and problems that I think the bill presents for areas like rural, small-town Ottawa Valley and certainly elsewhere. Whether it's rural Oxford or small-town Lambton, Kent or Huron, there are a lot of places in the province where the good intentions of this bill are going to run into some financial realities that I think are going to cause municipal and provincial politicians some angst. But before I get there, let me review just a couple of things about Walkerton.

We were just talking about the importance of this bill. I hope we all remember what brought us here, and I just want to say a couple of things very quickly. I listened to the minister make his remarks on second reading the other night. There was certainly the suggestion, which has been broadcast across the land, that really the problem up in Walkerton was the Koebel brothers, wantonly incompetent local folks who really exposed their community to a deadly threat. I have read all of Mr Justice O'Connor's inquiry, and I read a lot of the evidentiary material presented to it. I want to be very clear: I think the Koebel brothers look very bad, and I deeply regret their ineptitude, incompetence and malfeasance.

I wonder, by the way, if anybody has really had a chat with those people at the town of Walkerton. Did anybody know these characters were as incompetent as they appear to have been? We will all do that. We will all say, "Who knows?" Seven people are dead, hundreds of people were sick. I ask the questions rhetorically, because a really serious transgression, maladministration and tragedy occurred at Walkerton. We now know a lot more about it than we did a couple of years ago. I guess one of the questions I ask is, does anybody bear any responsibilities? What about that town council? I have to say something here today: I'm not so sure I'm happy that I haven't seen a couple of people looking at me from a jail cell.

Mr Marcel Beaubien (Lambton-Kent-Middlesex): What about the public utilities?

Mr Conway: Pardon me? Whatever—the people at the local level who were responsible. I know this is tough to say; I've been to Walkerton many times, a lovely community. I guess one of the questions I have is, are there more Stan and Frank Koebels out there? I hope not, but I wouldn't have believed it possible that that could have happened in such a beautiful Ontario town.

Mr Guzzo: What about tainted blood?

Mr Conway: My friend the judge points out the tainted blood scandal. Absolutely.

It is a real tragedy that occurred there, but it may be a greater tragedy that we have not yet exacted a full measure of accountability from the people who accepted that responsibility as a public trust and may not have discharged it. As I looked at the materials presented to the commission, we as a provincial government did not look very good. And I accept, in ecumenical spirit, that it didn't all begin on June 8, 1995. But looking at the details around the Red Tape Commission, I'm deeply, deeply troubled by what I saw. I must say to my friend

Norm Sterling that I was rather encouraged by the resistance he offered, as one Minister of the Environment, about what the Red Tape Commission—who could be opposed to cleaning up red tape? But when you see that Red Tape Commission under X-ray, as the Walkerton inquiry made plain, that Red Tape Commission under X-ray, that is a scandal. Now nobody cares because we're too busy, worried about some trivia. But there was a time when the Globe and Mail and maybe the Fifth Estate might have cared about what we now know is going on with the Red Tape Commission, particularly around some aspects of regulatory oversight in areas of critically important jurisdiction like water safety.

We have a bill now that seeks to deal with a lot of that, and I certainly support the bill in principle. One of the things I want to say, though, is on behalf of small-town Ontario—I'm going to cite a couple of examples here this afternoon. Again, my problem with these bills is that they are obviously suffused with good intentions, but the devil often is in the details. One of the questions that people like the Association of Municipalities of Ontario have asked is, what about the financial wherewithal to make this work? Let me use a couple of examples in my area.

I have, in south Renfrew county, a town site called Haley which was developed decades ago as an industrial site. About 35 or 40 homes were built on this site several miles from the nearest communities, the town of Renfrew and the village of Cobden. At the time—50, 60, 70 years ago—when the facility was established, the town site was built with what we would call an industrial water system. There are today about 35 or 40 people at the Haley town site. They have now inherited the communal water system. Do you know what their operating costs now are for that communal water system at the Haley town site? Let me just quote from the Cobden Sun, January 30, 2002: "Mainly because of new water testing regulations in the wake of the Walkerton tragedy, the cost of operating the [Haley town site water] system is now $72,826 per year. The revenue being collected from the homeowners is $9,808 per year, leaving [an operating] shortfall of $63,018."

Let me just repeat that. I think there are about 35 or 40 homes in the Haley town site. I will admit this is a special circumstance, but there are several more like it around the province. So we've got a system that has about 35 or 40 people hooked up to it that now has an annual operating cost of $72,000, and according to Councillor Ron Lowe, chair of the public works committee of Whitewater township, there is about $130,000 of work to be done on the distribution aspect of that water system.

I don't need to tell you that operating costs of almost $73,000 spread across 35 or 40 homeowners and capital upgrades of $100,000 are simply impossible to imagine. We had a meeting the other day in the village of Eganville in the newly amalgamated township of Bonnechere Valley. They are looking at trying to expand their water and sewage systems to include more of the urban area. Do you know what they're looking at? They're looking at hookup costs per lot of about $50,000. I can tell you that in Eganville and hundreds of other communities in Lambton, Oxford, Kent, Renfrew, Grey, Hastings, Haliburton, Leeds, Lanark, Glengarry and countless other of the great Ontario counties and districts, there will be a great expectation that, yes, "Justice O'Connor had it right. Good for the Eves government and that Chris Stockwell for moving forward and accepting the recommendations."

And you know what? The legislation, all things considered, looks pretty good. How, but how, in Brigden or in Norwich or in Killaloe are we going to make it work?

Mr Beaubien: Killaloe?

Mr Conway: Killaloe. I used the example the other day. In Killaloe, a community of about 700 people, they have a communal water system. There are about 140 or 150 people hooked up to it. The council told me not too many months ago that the new water testing requirements of the last year or two have added an additional $145, I think it is, roughly, to the individual home or business on an annualized basis. We're talking about just water testing costs that have increased on a per-business or per-household basis in the village of Killaloe by something in the order of $140 or $150.

I can tell you what you already know, those of you in rural and small-town Ontario. We are going to have to find a way, at the senior levels of government, provincially and federally, to do a couple of things. When I look at issues like the Haley town site—and I bet you there's at least two or three of those in most Ontario counties—I think what we're going to have to do is find a way to pool those special circumstances into some kind of aggregate provincial pool with local, municipal, provincial and individual or business contributions. I don't know how else you're going to do what you want to do and have to do at the Haley town site.

I know my time is up because, my goodness, I've had about 15 minutes on an issue that is of real importance to people in my rural communities. I will say finally that in communities like Killaloe, Beachburg, Chalk River, Barry's Bay, Bancroft, Marmora, Madoc and so many other places, where we put in communal water and sewage systems by and large 35, 40 years ago, in most cases with provincial and/or federal subsidies on capital of anywhere between about 40% and 80%, we are going to have to, as senior government, find a way to put a financial package together for these smaller towns and villages and hamlets and special cases like the Haley town site. If we don't, we are going to have a great good intention in Bill 195 simply hung up and evidently on ruined ground, because rural folks in small-town settings will simply not be able to do financially what they know they should be doing on an environmental basis.

Ms Churley: It seems that I've been standing in this House lately talking a lot about water bills that have been rammed through the Legislature once again. I'm trying to find in my sheets of paper here a letter—of course I've lost it now—that Peter Kormos, our House leader, wrote on my behalf to the government House leader, which I was going to read, and if I find it I will, on the process for the debate in this House and particularly around the committee hearings.

I need to set the record straight because of the comments the government House leader, Mr Stockwell, made about this party in particular not putting forward recommendations for committee hearings. In fact, this is what happened. The Premier had promised on a couple of occasions—indeed when he announced that the bill was coming forward, I was there for that announcement that day—that there would be extensive hearings. Mr Stockwell, the Minister of the Environment, had said there would be hearings. And then—of course I'm not in the room where the House leaders' meeting takes place, so I can only tell you my view and my version of what happened and why we are here having this time allocation motion and why, in my view, the amount of hearings we're having is not sufficient.

My House leader came to me and said that Mr Stockwell, the government House leader, wanted to negotiate with the two opposition parties around the hearings for the Safe Drinking Water Act. He wanted us to allow fast passage of some government bills in order to negotiate, to even talk to us, about hearings. So I had our House leader write a very strong letter; again, if I find it I will read it. At the time it was private, but now I'm annoyed enough that I want it on the record. The letter said that I was not pleased to have this bill, the Safe Drinking Water Act, tied up once again in the negotiations, and sometimes silly negotiations, which the public does not care about, around what bills get passed when and fast passage and time allocation; that this bill should not be included in those negotiations; that it's an important issue to the people of Ontario and, once it is passed, it will be with us for a long, long time and it has a lot of cost implications and other amendments that we are going to have to put forward, and I wanted to make sure there was sufficient time for hearings.

The other issue that came up is that—and the minister is now doing this. He wants to bundle the two bills, ie, he wants to bring the Safe Drinking Water Act and the sewer treatment act out together and deal with them at the same time in committee hearings. I was not supportive of that. Although they're both dealing with water, I would prefer to take two distinct aspects of the water issues that are before us. For instance, the sewer and water bill deals with full cost recovery, among many, many other things, but that one in particular, as we've talked a lot about in this House, is going to have a huge impact on municipalities, particularly the smaller ones across the province. They're going to want to be able to speak at length about the implications of that bill to them, and we've got to talk about options: what do we mean by full cost recovery?

So I wanted to have that bill dealt with at committee hearings separately. On the other hand, I had agreed to be reasonable about it, that the Legislature is sitting and it's hard to have full public hearings when we're sitting, and I didn't think it was a good idea to wait till the intersession, because I am, like all of us, anxious to get on with getting the Safe Drinking Water Act passed. So I was willing to be reasonable, and indeed, for the record—and I hope Mr Stockwell is listening—the NDP did come up with a list of suggested locations and times for hearings on both those bills, in two different versions: one was, if the minister insisted on bundling them, a way that we could expand the number of days across the province so people could have their say on both; and another version was, if the bills were done separately, how we could do that with the House sitting, maybe in constituency week or whatever. But we did have some options. As I understand it from my House leader, the House leader from hell, as Mr Stockwell likes to call him—I'm just quoting the government House leader here.

The Deputy Speaker: I want to remind you that the member withdrew that comment.

Ms Churley: Oh, OK. I withdraw it, then.

The reality is that my House leader told me that it's true we never presented our options, because the government House leader made it perfectly clear that unless we were willing to negotiate fast passage of other bills in this House, then we could have no say on the length of the committees, where we go or how, in any way, they're conducted. So, as it was told to me, we never did present our options for committee hearings because we weren't given that choice.

When we refused to put it on the negotiating table—which, by the way, happened with my Bill 3. Originally the Premier said that my Bill 3 would be passed with amendments—ie, to improve it—and the same thing happened in the last session. My caucus knows I'm still really angry about that, because Bill 3 got caught up in what I view as very silly and destructive negotiations around, you know, the horse trading that goes on in this place on the last day of the House. Bill 3 should never have been on the negotiating table. At the end of the day, the Minister of the Environment said, "OK, you won't give us what we want so we're not going to do your Bill 3. Forget it. We're just going to do our own." That's what happened with that.

Then I found the same situation here in terms of being asked to come up with options for committee hearings, but then being told, "No, we want to negotiate those around other bills." That just was not on for us and the letter that was written to the House leader made that quite clear. Then the government House leader said to our House leader, "Well, there's nothing to discuss because you won't negotiate on those other bills." I have witnesses to part of this, because Mr Stockwell and I got into a rather loud yelling match up at TVO about this very issue. Mr Bradley was there; I don't know if he was in the room when we had this loud yelling match, but I know Steve Paikin was there. When I was told that the committee hearings for these bills were going to be caught up in negotiations again, I got angry and said straightforwardly to Mr Stockwell, "I don't want to see that happen. This is too important to the people of Ontario to have it caught up in the shenanigans that go on around here. It shouldn't be caught up in trying to help you achieve your rather mismanaged agenda in terms of getting other bills through that you wanted."

That is just, for the record, what happened. I just want to make it clear that the New Democratic caucus did have a plan for public hearings. We were never able to put those on the table because once Mr Stockwell understood that we were not willing to negotiate away other government bills to get the hearings of our choice, he said, "I'm just going to do it on my own." That indeed is what he told me when we had this argument up at TVO.

So here we are now having a time allocation bill again today. We just had one on the other water bill. I think it's too bad, because these are the kinds of bills where every member who wants to speak to them should have an opportunity to do so, because they are so far reaching and what happened in Walkerton touched all of us and all of our constituents clear across the province in many different ways. All of the members in this House understand that both the bills before us, on sewer and water and the Safe Drinking Water Act, will have huge implications in our community. We want to see those bills passed. Particularly, I want to see the Safe Drinking Water Act passed with amendments that I will put forward.

I want to remind the Minister of the Environment, who was here earlier, and I hope he's listening now—he said the only complaint the opposition made about the bill was that it didn't involve or include source protection, and that is just not a fact. It's very clear that that is the major complaint, and I've already put on the record my feelings about that, how there has to be a legislative link between all of those bills to prevent another Walkerton. Justice O'Connor makes that clear. He talks about a multi-barrier approach. The first thing we need to do in that multi-barrier approach is to protect the water before it goes into the pipe. There has to be that legislative link between nutrient management and the Safe Drinking Water Act, as well as the sewer and water act and any other bills that come before us. If we're not protecting the water at its source and if there isn't that legislative link, then other Walkertons can happen.
